THE BOOK OF J U D G E S.

The title of this book is taken from the original Hebrew; and shews the principal subject of it, as containing the history of those judges, whom God raised up among his people, before he placed any king over them. These were not a regular succession of governors; but, occasional deliverers, of different tribes and families, employed to rescue the nation from oppressors, to reform religion, or to administer justice. They do not seem to have assumed any degree of regal magnificence, or to have exercised any expensive or burdensome authority; yet they were for the time the immediate vicegerents of JEHOVAH, the King of Israel. It is probable, that when there was no judge, the Levites, elders, and ordinary magistrates, together with the high priest and the other priests, conducted the affairs of the several tribes, and administered justice, as circumstances would admit, according to the law of Moses; and that when there was a judge, he presided over them.—It is generally supposed that the prophet Samuel, the last of the judges, wrote this book; and, indeed, it seems to have been written during the reign of Saul. For the words repeatedly used, “In those days there was no king in Israel,” (xvii. 6. xix. 1. xxi. 25;) imply that there was a king when the history was published; yet, it appears also, that the Jebusites still kept possession of Jerusalem, from which David at length expelled them, (i. 21.)—It consists of two parts: in the first sixteen chapters, a compendious narrative is given of the affairs of Israel, from the death of Joshua to that of Samson, during the term of about three hundred years; though the chronology is peculiarly intricate; and the remaining five chapters record some detached events, which took place in the earlier part of that period, but which would have too much interrupted the narrative, had they been inserted according to the order of time. Thus the history is brought down to the years during which Eli judged Israel, and nearly to the birth of Samuel.—There are several references to this book, in both the Old and New Testaments, (1 Sam. xii. 10, 11. 2 Sam. xi. 21. Neh. ix. 28. Ps. lxxxiii. 9—11. Is. ix. 4. x. 26. Acts xiii. 20. Heb. xi. 32;) and it is very certain that it formed a part of that sacred volume, to which Christ and his apostles constantly appealed, as to the Oracles of God; but I do not recollect any express prophecies contained in it.

The condition of Israel does not appear so prosperous, nor the national character so religious, in this history, as from the foregoing records it might have been hoped; but it is probable, that the worship at the sanctuary was regularly maintained and attended on, and that there was a pious remnant in the land, amidst the repeated apostacies and multiplied idolatries of the nation in general. The whole account illustrates the character given of human nature in the Scriptures; and shews in a most affecting manner, the consequences of attending on the worship and service of God, or of neglecting them, in respect of national prosperity, or adversity.

CHAP. I.

Judah and Simeon war against the Canaanites, defeat Adoni-bezek, and retaliate on him his cruelty to captive kings. 1—7. Jerusalem is taken, 8, 9. The sons of Anak slain, 10. Othniel takes Debir, and marries Caleb's daughter, 11—15. The Kenites dwell with Judah, 16. Hormah, Gaza, Askelon, and Ekron, are taken by Judah and Simeon; and Hebron is given to Caleb, 17—20. Benjamin is unable to drive the Jebusites from Jerusalem, 21. Ephraim and Manasseh take Bethel, 22—25. Luz is built, 26. The Canaanites are not wholly expelled by Manasseh, 27, 28; by Ephraim, 29; by Zebulun, 30; by Asher, 31, 32; by Naphtali, 33. The Amorites force Dan into the mountain, 34, 36.

NOW after the death of Joshua it came to pass, that the children of Israel asked the LORD, saying, Who shall go up for us against the Canaanites first, to fight against them?

2 And the LORD said, ‘Judah shall go up; behold, I have delivered the land into his hand.

3 And Judah said unto ‘Simeon his brother, Come up with me into my lot, that we may fight against the Canaanites, and ‘I likewise will go with thee into thy lot. So Simeon went with him.

4 And Judah went up, and the ‘LORD delivered the Canaanites and the Perizzites into their hand: and they slew of them in ‘Bezek ten thousand men.

NOTES.

CHAP. I. V. 1. Joshua left no successor, as Moses had done; and, therefore, some time after his death, (it is not known how long,) the people, being convinced that the war against the Canaanites should be continued, were in doubt how it was to be conducted, and which tribe should take the lead in this service; and in these respects they enquired of the Lord, probably by Urim and Thummim. It would have been well if they had always continued in the same mind; but sloth, cowardice, and unbelief, and, perhaps, a misjudged lenity, prevailed with them, to leave their work unfinished; which created them almost an infinity of trouble and misery afterwards. (Notes, Josh. xxiii. 13.)

V. 2. (Notes, Gen. xlix. 8—10.) The numerous and valiant tribe of Judah, whence the Messiah was to descend, and which was in all things to have the precedence, was directed to renew the war; and by their example to embolden their brethren, and to mark out in them the path to victory and prosperity. For it is evident, that this first expedition was intended to make way for others, being undertaken by common consent for the public benefit; and the Lord, in promising to put Judah in possession of his inheritance, intimated his purpose of rendering that event subservient to the more complete conquest of the whole country.—Probably the Israelites had rapidly increased since the division; and now, wanting room, were excited to greater activity against their enemies.

V. 3. As the lot of Simeon lay within that of Judah, it was very proper for them to assist each other against the common enemy. (Note, Josh. xix. 1—9.)—It is probable that Caleb commanded in this war. (9—15.)

V. 4. And the LORD delivered. ‘We meet with no such religious expression, which occurs often here in these holy books, in any heathen writer’ (Bp. Patrick.)

V. 6, 7. Adoni-bezek signifies the lord of Bezek. This prince had, it seems, been a great warrior, and a severe tyrant over his vanquished enemies; for he had seventy of the petty princes of those times, one after another, his prisoners; and, having disabled them, with great disgrace and pain, by cutting off their thumbs and great toes, he forced them to gather their food as dogs under his table. The Israelites hearing of this, probably by divine direction, retaliated upon him; and his own conscience extorted from him a confession of the justice of God in this punishment! Some have thought that he was a true penitent, and that on this account his life was spared.

V. 8. The tribe of Judah had, perhaps some time before, seized on the city of Jerusalem; though part of it lay within the lot of Benjamin, which seems to have been yielded to them. But the Jebusites still held the hill of Zion. (21. Note, Josh. xv. 63.)

V. 10—15. (Notes, Josh. xv. 13—19.) The words rendered, “They slew”

11 ¶ And from thence he went against the inhabitants of Debir: (and the name of Debir before was Kirjath-sepher:)

12 And Caleb said, He that smiteth Kirjath-sepher, and taketh it, to him will I give Achsah my daughter to wife.

13 And Othniel the son of Kenaz, Caleb's younger brother, took it: and he gave him Achsah his daughter to wife.

14 And it came to pass, when she came to him, that she moved him to ask of her father a field: and she lighted from off her ass; and Caleb said unto her, What wilt thou?

15 And she said unto him, Give me a blessing: for thou hast given me a south land, give me also springs of water. And Caleb gave her the upper springs and the nether springs.

16 ¶ And the children of the Kenite, Moses' father-in-law, went up out of the city of palm-trees with the children of Judah into the wilderness of Judah, which lieth in the south of Arad: and they went and dwelt among the people.

17 ¶ And Judah went with Simeon his brother, and they slew the Canaanites that inhabited Zephath, and utterly destroyed it: (and the name of the city was called Hormah:)

18 Also Judah took Gaza with the coast thereof, and Askelon with the coast thereof, and Ekron with the coast thereof.

19 And the LORD was with Judah, and he drave out the inhabitants of the mountain; but could not drive out the inhabitants of the valley, because they had chariots of iron.

20 And they gave Hebron unto Caleb, as Moses said: and he expelled thence the three sons of Anak.

21 ¶ And the children of Benjamin did not drive out the Jebusites that inhabited Jerusalem; but the Jebusites dwell with the children of Benjamin in Jerusalem unto this day.

22 ¶ And the house of Joseph, they also went up against Beth-el: and the LORD was with them.

23 And the house of Joseph sent to descry Beth-el: (now the name of the city before was Luz.)

24 And the spies saw a man come forth out of the city, and they said unto him, Shew us, we pray thee, the entrance into the city, and we will shew thee mercy.

25 And when he shewed them the entrance into the city, they smote the city with the edge of the sword; but they let go the man and all his family.

26 And the man went into the land of the Hittites, and built a city, and called the name thereof Luz: which is the name thereof unto this day.

27 ¶ Neither did Manasseh drive out the inhabitants of Beth-shean and her towns, nor Taanach and her towns, nor the inhabitants of Dor and her towns, nor the inhabitants of Ibleam and her towns, nor the inhabitants of Megiddo and her towns: but the Canaanites would dwell in that land.

28 And it came to pass when Israel was strong, that they put the Canaanites to tribute, and did not utterly drive them out.

29 ¶ Neither did Ephraim drive out the Canaanites that dwelt in Gezer; but the Canaanites dwelt in Gezer among them.

30 ¶ Neither did Zebulun drive out the inhabitants of Kitron, nor the inhabitants of Nahalol; but the Canaanites dwelt among them, and became tributaries.

31 ¶ Neither did Asher drive out the inhabitants of Aecho, nor the inhabitants of Zidon, nor of Ahlab, nor of Achzib, nor of Helbah, nor of Aphik, nor of Rehob:

32 But the Asherites dwelt among the Canaanites, the inhabitants of the land; for they did not drive them out.

33 ¶ Neither did Naphtali drive out the inhabitants of Beth-shemesh, nor the inhabitants of Beth-anath; but he dwelt among the Canaanites, the inhabitants of the land: nevertheless, the inhabitants of Beth-shemesh and of Beth-anath became tributaries unto them.

34 ¶ And the Amorites forced the children of Dan into the mountain; for they would not suffer them to come down to the valley:

35 But the Amorites would dwell in mount Heres in Ajalon, and in Shaalbin: yet the hand of the house of Joseph prevailed, so that they became tributaries.

36 And the coast of the Amorites was from the going up to Akkrabbim, from the rock, and upward.

Sheshai," &c., may be rendered, "they smote Sheshai." In the passage referred to it is said, "Caleb drove thence the three sons of Anak;" but it is not clear that he slew them, (20.)—The same expedition is evidently meant, which probably took place at this time; but, the account of it was inserted in the book of Joshua, to complete the history concerning Caleb. Having been employed in the public affairs of Israel, he seems not till this time to have obtained full possession of the inheritance granted him.

V. 16. (Note, Num. x. 30—32.) The descendants of Hobab, the son of Jethro, (who it seems acceded to the invitation given him by Moses,) at their first entrance into Canaan, pitched their tents near Jericho; called also "the city of palm-trees," which lay in the lot of Benjamin: but afterwards they joined themselves to Judah, and settled in the borders of the wilderness, where they seem to have lived a quiet life, little interfering in public affairs. (Notes, iv. 11. 1 Chr. ii. 55. Jer. xxxv. 2—4.)

V. 18. The Philistines, having been spared, contrary to the Divine command, when their cities were taken, in a short time recovered possession of them, and were indeed, "pricks in the eyes, and thorns in the sides" of Israel, during many ages. (Note, Josh. xxiii. 13.)

V. 19. The men of Judah were unable to drive out the inhabitants of the valley: not that the Lord refused to help them, but because their courage and faith failed them at the sight of the iron chariots, which were of no use in the mountain. (Note, Josh. xvii. 16.) They forgot, how Joshua had attacked and destroyed the Canaanites, who had this formidable advantage: and when they lost their confidence in God, they could do nothing.

V. 21. When this history was written, probably by Samuel, the Jebusites kept possession of mount Zion, which lay in the lot of Judah; and they seem also to have lived under tribute with the Benjamites, in that part of the city which belonged to them. (Note, 8.)

V. 24—26. The assailants of Bethel, having seized this man, found out, by his means, some unguarded place or private entrance, by which they took the city. He seems to have acted, not from faith in God or love to Israel, but out of fear, and to save his life: and therefore, when set at liberty, he did not unite interests with the worshippers of JEHOVAH, as Rahab had done; (Notes, Josh. ii. 4—11;) but retiring to his countrymen, who had sought shelter in some adjacent regions, he built a city, which he called after his own city; not Bethel, or the house of God; but according to its old name, Luz. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 28. The people neglected their opportunity through self-indulgence, when they had their enemies in their power; probably letting the idolaters live among them as tenants, even in the villages: and afterwards they were unable to drive them out. Thus their sin prepared its own punishment, and the love of present ease became the cause of their perpetual disquiet. (Notes, 18. Josh. xvii. 11—15. xxii. 13.)

V. 34, 35. In the distress of the Danites, the descendants of Joseph seem to have come to their assistance; and thus they checked the progress of the Amorites, confined them within narrow limits, and compelled them to pay tribute to the Danites. None of these tribes, mentioned in the latter part of the chapter, properly improved their advantages, satisfying themselves with rendering those tributaries, whom the Lord had commanded them utterly to destroy. The power of the Amorites and Philistines soon compelled the Danites to seek possessions in a distant part of the land. (Notes, xviii. Josh. xix. 40—48.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

No detached efforts, however judicious and spirited, without steady and constant perseverance, can effect important changes, rectify abuses in church or state, or give permanent and enlarged success to true religion. For all such attempts may be compared to raising a large weight to a great height, in which the whole labour is lost, if the exertion ceases before the object be fully accomplished. They, who have the precedence in rank or reputation, should go before others in every good work, undismayed by dangers and difficulties, that they may animate them by their example: the strongest ought not to despise, but to value the assistance of the weakest; and it becomes the people of God to

An angel rebukes the people for disobedience: and the place is called Bochim, from their tears, 1-5. They serve the Lord till Joshua and the elders die; but in the next generation run into shameful idolatries, 6-13. God is angry with them; yet pities their distresses, and raises up judges to deliver them, 14-18. Their ingratitude provokes him to leave the Canaanites to prove them, 19-23.

AND "an" angel of the LORD came up from Gilgal to Bochim, and said, "I made you to go up out of Egypt, and have brought you unto the land which I swore unto your fathers; and I said, 'I will never break my covenant with you.

2 And ye shall make no league with the inhabitants of this land; ye shall throw down their altars: but ye have not obeyed my voice: why have ye done this?

3 Wherefore I also said, I will not drive them out from before you; but they shall be as thorns in your sides, and their gods shall be a snare unto you.

4 And it came to pass, when the angel of the LORD spake these words unto all the children of Israel, that the people lifted up their voice, and wept.

5 And they called the name of that place Bochim: and they sacrificed there unto the LORD.

6 ¶ And when Joshua had let the people go, the children of Israel went every man unto his inheritance to possess the land.

7 And the people served the LORD all the days of Joshua, and all the days of the elders that outlived Joshua, who had seen all the great works of the LORD that he did for Israel.

8 And Joshua, the son of Nun, the servant of the LORD, died, being an hundred and ten years old.

9 And they buried him in the border of his inheritance in Timnath-heres, in the mount of Ephraim, on the north side of the hill Gaash.

10 ¶ And also all that generation were gathered unto their fathers: and there arose another generation after them, which knew not the LORD, nor yet the works which he had done for Israel.

unite together, and help each other against their common enemies; and especially to assist the whole 'church militant here on earth,' with their constant and fervent prayers. We are sure to have all profitable success, when we engage in any enterprise according to the Lord's direction, and in dependence on his help: and whatever labour, conduct, or courage we display, or whatever human aid we employ, to him the whole glory belongs. What a slippery place is worldly prosperity! especially when it increases pride, insolence, or cruelty; for "a haughty spirit goes before a fall." Men often read their crimes in their punishment: and at last every mouth shall be stopped, and all sinners be constrained to admit the justice of God in their extreme miseries. Happy they, who justify him in their temporal afflictions, plead guilty before his mercy-seat, and by repentance and faith seek deliverance from the wrath to come. Great things might be achieved by the professors of the gospel, if they unitedly endeavoured to promote the common cause of truth and righteousness: for then the "LORD would be with them," and every mountain would sink into a plain. But when outward difficulties are viewed by the eye of sense, and the almighty power of God is forgotten, our hearts grow discouraged, our expectations feeble, and our attempts timid; and then no wonder that we do not prosper; for according to our faith will be our vigour, zeal, and success. Love of ease, indulgence, and worldly advantages, both spring from and foster unbelief. Thus many an awakened sinner, who seemed to have escaped Satan's bondage, "is entangled again, and overcome, and his last state is worse than the first." Thus many a believer, who begins well, is hindered: he grows negligent and unwatchful, and afraid of the cross; his graces languish, his lusts revive, Satan perceives his advantage, and plies him with suitable temptations; the world recovers its hold; he loses his peace, brings guilt into his conscience, anguish into his heart, discredits upon his character, and reproach upon the gospel; his hands are tied, his mouth is closed, and his usefulness ruined. And though, through sharp rebukes and salutary chastisements, he be so recovered, that he doth not finally perish; yet he may lament through his remaining days, and groan upon his dying bed, to reflect what opportunities of glorifying God and serving his church, he hath irrecoverably lost: nay, perhaps in that solemn hour, he will be distressed with perplexing doubts about the state of his own soul. Even the very best of Christians, in this way suffer some loss, and do not live up to the extent of their privileges and usefulness. Let us then "watch and be sober," and pursue our victory against every inbred foe; not content with supposed delivery from the dominion of sin, but aiming continually to weaken and "crucify the flesh with its affections and lusts," even unto entire extirpation. For we can have no fellowship with the enemies of God within us, or 13 And they forsook the LORD, and served Baal and Ashtaroth.

14 And the anger of the LORD was hot against Israel, and he delivered them into the hands of spoilers that spoiled them, and he sold them into the hands of their enemies round about, so that they could not any longer stand before their enemies.

15 Whithersoever they went out, the hand of the LORD was against them for evil, as the LORD had said, and as the LORD had sworn unto them: and they were greatly distressed.

16 ¶ Nevertheless, the LORD raised up judges, which delivered them out of the hand of those that spoiled them.

17 And yet they would not hearken unto their judges, but they went a whoring after other gods, and bowed themselves unto them: they turned quickly out of the way which their fathers walked in, obeying the commandments of the LORD; but they did not so.

18 And when the LORD raised them up judges, then the LORD was with the judge, and delivered them out of the hand of their enemies all the days of the judge: (for it repented the LORD because of their groanings, by reason of them that oppressed them, and vexed them.)

19 And it came to pass, when the judge was dead, that they returned, and corrupted themselves more than their fathers, in following other gods, to serve them, and to bow down unto them: they ceased around us, but to our hurt; and therefore our only wisdom and interest is, to declare and maintain unceasing war against them, even unto the end of our days.

NOTES.

CHAP. II. V. 1-5. The language of the reproof here given demonstrates who this angel was: for 'no prophet, nor any created angel, durst have been so bold as to say, "I have made you to go up out of Egypt;" but would have prefaced this speech in some such words as these, "Thus saith the Lord." 'It was not a created angel, but an uncreated, even that very person who appeared to Joshua hard by Jericho, which, I have shewn there, was God himself. It was fit for him to appear now as coming from Gilgal, to put them in mind of that illustrious appearance, and of the solemn covenant they made with him, by the renewing of circumcision in that place; which upbraided them with their base ingratitude and sloth.' (Bp. Patrick. Notes, Josh. v. 13-15. vi. 1-5.)—It was then the great Angel of the covenant, the Word and Son of God, who spake as JEHOVAH, as HE who brought Israel out of Egypt, put them in possession of Canaan, entered into covenant with them, gave them commandments; and now called them to account for their disobedience; shewing that they, not he, had violated the national covenant. He first appeared at Gilgal, and afterwards was seen coming to Shiloh, where the people were assembled at one of their solemn feasts: for it is probable, from the sacrifice which they offered, that they were at Shiloh. The spot where he appeared was called Bochim, or The weepers, because of their weeping. But though they shewed signs of deep humiliation, the subsequent history evinces that no general reformation took place. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 6-10. (Josh. xxiv. 29-33.) This part of the history seems here repeated, to shew the reason given for the severe reproof just before mentioned. Whilst Joshua lived, the people had served the Lord with considerable diligence; but after his death, and that of the elders, who by their authority and admonitions had kept them to the worship of God, they relapsed into idolatry. The place where Joshua was buried, is here called Timnath-heres, instead of Timnath-serah: the word heres signifies the sun; and it has been thought, that it was so called, because of some memorial there erected, of the Lord's miraculously retarding the course of the sun at Joshua's word. (Note, Josh. x. 11-14.)

V. 11-13. Baalim and Ashtaroth are both plural, the one masculine, and the other feminine; and they seem to be used generally for all the gods and goddesses, which were worshipped by the neighbouring nations. (Note, x. 6-9.)

V. 14. He sold them. As the judge was used to sell the criminal, or the creditor the debtor, for a slave, that the injured party might be reimbursed by not from their own doings, nor from their 'stubborn way.

20 ¶ And 'the anger of the LORD was hot against Israel; and he said, Because that this people have 'transgressed my covenant which I commanded their fathers, and have not hearkened unto my voice;

21 I also 'will not henceforth drive out any from before them, of the nations which Joshua left when he died;

22 That 'through them I may 'prove Israel, whether they will keep the way of the LORD, to walk therein, as their fathers did keep it, or not.

23 Therefore the LORD 'left those nations, without driving them out hastily; neither delivered he them into the hand of Joshua.

CHAP. III.

The nations left to prove Israel, 1-4. The people are seduced by them into idolatry, 5-7: sold into the hand of Chushan-rishathaim, but delivered by Othniel, 8-11: and into that of Eglon, but delivered by Ehud, 12-30. Shamgar slays six hundred Philistines with an ox-goad, 31.

NOW these are 'the nations which the LORD left, to 'prove Israel by them; (even as many of Israel 'as had not known all the wars of Canaan;

2 Only that the generations of the children of Israel 'might know to teach them war, at the least such as before knew nothing thereof;)

their price: so the Lord recovered, as it were, that glory by punishing Israel, of which they had robbed him by their sins; and he made the Canaanites the instruments of his righteous indignation. (Notes, Deut. xxxii. 30, 31. Is. i. 1-3. Marg. Ref.)

V. 18. Repented. (Notes, Gen. vi. 6. Deut. xxxii. 36.) 'He altered the course of his providence.' (Bp. Patrick.)

V. 23. The Lord foresaw the future conduct of Israel, and therefore so ordered it in his providence, that a remnant of the Canaanites should be spared; that by them the proneness of his people to idolatry might both be manifested and chastised. (Notes, iii. 1, 2. Josh. xxiii. 13.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-13. The goodness of God to mankind, his faithful engagements to those who trust him, and the beneficial tendency of all his precepts, combine to enhance the evil of every transgression: yet men will often gratify their importunate lusts, though their own reason and conscience testify, that they are acting a foolish and ungrateful part; for, as no good reason can be given for disobedience, it is much more easy to convince the judgment, than to dispose the heart to renounce sinful pursuits. But if transgressors cannot endure the rebukes of God's word, and the convictions of their own conscience; how will they be able to stand before the tribunal of the holy heart-searching Judge, who now, in the endeared character of a Saviour, and in the mild accents of love, warns and persuades them to "repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance?"—"As many as he loves, he rebukes, and chastens:" indeed all temporal afflictions are in their tendency castigatory, and warn men to forsake sin, and seek forgiveness, ere it be too late: but the eternal punishment of the world to come will be entirely penal, the final vengeance of God upon his incorrigible enemies. It is pleasing to see men weep for their sins: but though such relents attend that godly sorrow which worketh repentance unto salvation, not to be repented of," yet they frequently wear off: nay, even faith in the atoning sacrifice of Christ may be professed, and the memorial of his dying love attended on with great apparent affection, yet without renovation of heart and newness of life. We have to mourn over many, whom on such grounds we supposed to be converts, and to regret "that their goodness is as a morning cloud, and as the early dew it goeth away." (Hos. vi. 4.) The worship of God is in its own nature joy, praise, and thanksgiving, and our crimes alone render weeping needful: yet considering what we are, and what we have done, it is much to be wished, that our religious assemblies were more frequently called "Bochim," "the place of the weepers;" "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted." Were we duly attentive to the word of God, we might foresee many of those events which take place in his providence. We might especially foretell severe afflictions to those godly persons, who associate and connect themselves with the openly profane; or who relax their diligence in mortifying and striving against sin, and in watching against temptation. Alas! that prevalence of religion, which appears in times of general reformation, often arises from temporary affections and personal regards: so that when the influence and example of some respected or beloved person cease; when there is no longer any fear of grieving him, or being rebuked by him; and when the emotion of the passions subsides, men's unmortified lusts again recover the ascendancy, and many fair appearances die away. We have need therefore to examine how matters stand with ourselves, and to pray without ceasing, "that we may be rooted and grounded in love," and "that Christ may indeed dwell in our hearts by faith." And pious parents should be very diligent in instructing their children, and very earnest in praying that they may inherit their faith and grace: for the speedy decline of religion, after it hath been very flourishing, must in general be ascribed, in great measure to their negligence in this respect; so that very often the ignorance and ungodliness of children are a disgrace to the memory of their parents.

V. 14-23. The carnal mind of man is enmity against God; the tendency of our fallen nature is to apostasy; and the vilest lust, or the meanest worldly object, will be preferred to his favour and the pleasure of his service, even by those who have the benefit of his written word and the preaching of the gospel; unless his almighty power be continually exerted, his grace communicated to them, and his image renewed upon their hearts. This is the cause of all human misery, in time and to eternity: for if men rob God of his glory, he will sell them to their sin, and satisfy his justice in their punishment; and how wretched must they be, against whom are the oath and the hand of the immutable and almighty God! Their heaviest distresses on earth, unless timely repentance intervene, are the forerunners of eternal misery.—The vilest of the profane are more likely to prosper for a time, than apostate professors; nay, backsliding and inconsistent believers are more sure to experience affliction in this world, than any other persons. Yet the Lord hath long patience, and manifests great compassion to his people; he is ready to forgive, and to relieve; he raises up instruments to effect their deliverance, and overrules their chastisements for good; and in all his dealings with them, it will at length be manifest, that they are saved not for the sake of their own righteousness, but for the sake of his great name; that "it is of his mercies, that they are not consumed," and that he saves them from, and notwithstanding, their manifold transgressions.—The more the human heart is proved, the worse it is manifested to be; and so long as "we cease not from our own doings," we can only be stubborn and rebellious.—For his own glory the Lord tries men, as silver is tried; and whilst he distinguishes betwixt those who choose, and those who forsake, his ways; he will secure to himself the whole praise of all that is good in his people.—Too late his enemies will curse their folly, in neglecting those things which were commanded them: and the reflection that their opportunity is lost for ever will complete their misery. Let us then without delay obey the call of the gospel, declare war against every sin, and follow after holiness, unto the end of our days; that we may have "an entrance ministered to us abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

NOTES.

CHAP. III. V. 1, 2. Israel was surrounded by warlike nations, and was also a type of the church militant here on earth; it was not, therefore, proper that the people should be enervated by sloth and luxury, but rather inured to hardship and conflict. This the Lord was pleased to effect by the remains of the devoted nations, whom they spared when they ought to have destroyed them; and they were in consequence engaged in continual contests with them. They had moreover tasted the sweets of victory without feeling the evils of war, in their first conquest of the land; but they proved ungrateful for the mercy, and left their work unfinished; and were, therefore, made to feel the evils of war without the advantages of victory, in their future conflicts. (Note, ii. 23.)

V. 3. The Canaanites, here mentioned, seem to have been a tribe inhabiting the northern part of the land. (Note, iv. 2, 3.)—Zidon seems to have been included in the grant made to Israel. (Josh. xiii. 6. xix. 28.)

V. 4. The remnant of the devoted nations continually made trial of the Israelites, by their example, allurements, and influence. When the people, amidst these snares, firmly adhered to the Lord and his worship, the event was honourable; but in general the trial detected the hypocrisy of their hearts, and their proneness to idolatry; and then their tempters became their scourges. (Notes, Gen. xxii. 1. Deut. viii. 2. Josh. xxiii. 13.)

V. 5-7. Instead of attempting to extirpate the inhabitants of the land, the Israelites endeavoured to live amicably with them; and this induced them to intermarry with them, and then to conform to their idolatrous worship; until numbers had utterly apostatized from God, in that very land, where by his tabernacle he dwelt in the midst of them. (Marg. Ref.)—"The groves" may denote those idols, which were worshipped under the shade of thick trees, especially Ashteroth, or goddesses, as distinguished from Baalim. (ii. 11-13.)

LORD, the LORD raised up a deliverer to the children of Israel, who delivered them, even Othniel the son of Kenaz, Caleb's younger brother.

10 And the Spirit of the LORD came upon him, and he judged Israel, and went out to war: and the LORD delivered Chushan-rishathaim king of Mesopotamia into his hand; and his hand prevailed against Chushan-rishathaim.

11 And the land had rest forty years: and Othniel the son of Kenaz died.

12 ¶ And the children of Israel did evil again in the sight of the LORD: and the LORD strengthened Eglon the king of Moab against Israel, because they had done evil in the sight of the LORD.

13 And he gathered unto him the children of Ammon and Amalek, and went and smote Israel, and possessed the city of palm-trees.

14 So the children of Israel served Eglon the king of Moab eighteen years.

15 But when the children of Israel cried unto the LORD, the LORD raised them up a deliverer, Ehud the son of Gera, a Benjamite, a man left-handed: and by him the children of Israel sent a present unto Eglon the king of Moab.

16 But Ehud made him a dagger, (which had two edges,) of a cubit length; and he did gird it under his raiment upon his right thigh.

17 And he brought the present unto Eglon king of Moab: and Eglon was a very fat man.

18 And when he had made an end to offer the present, he sent away the people that bare the present.

19 But he himself turned again from the quarries that were by Gilgal, and said, I have a secret errand unto thee, O king; who said, Keep silence. And all that stood by him went out from him.

20 And Ehud came unto him; and he was sitting in a summer-parlour, which he had for himself alone; and Ehud said, "I have a message from God unto thee. And he arose out of his seat.

21 And Ehud put forth his left hand, and took the dagger from his right thigh, and thrust it into his belly.

22 And the haft also went in after the blade; and the fat closed upon the blade, so that he could not draw the dagger out of his belly: and the dirt came out.

23 Then Ehud went forth through the porch, and shut the doors of the parlour upon him, and locked them.

24 When he was gone out, his servants came; and when they saw that, behold, the doors of the parlour were locked, they said, Surely he covereth his feet in his summer-chamber.

25 And they tarried till they were ashamed: and, behold, he opened not the doors of the parlour: therefore they took a key, and opened them; and, behold, their lord was fallen down dead on the earth.

26 And Ehud escaped while they tarried, and passed beyond the quarries, and escaped unto Seirath.

27 And it came to pass when he was come, that he blew a trumpet in the mountain of Ephraim, and the children of Israel went down with him from the mount, and he before them.

28 And he said unto them, Follow after me; for the LORD hath delivered your enemies the Moabites into your hand. And they went down after him, and took the fords of Jordan toward Moab, and suffered not a man to pass over.

29 And they slew of Moab at that time about ten thousand men, all lusty, and all men of valour; and there escaped not a man.

30 So Moab was subdued that day under the hand of Israel. And the land had rest fourscore years.

31 ¶ And after him was Shamgar the son of Anath, which slew of the Philistines six hundred men with an ox-goad: and he also delivered Israel.

V. 8. King of Mesopotamia. As this prince reigned beyond the Euphrates; his oppressing the Israelites, who lived at so great a distance from him, appeared the more evidently to be the effect of God's displeasure. (Note, i. 14.)

V. 9, 10. The people in their prosperity had forgot the Lord; but in their distress they found that their idols and idolatrous allies could not help them. Then they remembered the wonderful works of JEHOVAH, and began to pray unto him, though it seems not very earnestly till they had endured correction for the space of eight years: and he, being rich in mercy, was pleased to hear their prayer notwithstanding their heinous provocations, and stirred up Othniel to effect their deliverance. Probably there was a considerable reformation for some time afterwards. Doubtless Othniel had lamented the degeneracy and misery of his brethren; but he attempted nothing, until "the Spirit of the LORD came upon him." Then he began with "judging Israel," that is, with attempting to reform their manners, to repress idolatry, administer justice, and revive religion; and afterwards he went forth to war, and prevailed over their foreign enemies; "for the LORD delivered them into his hands." (Marg. Ref.)

V. 11. Some expositors compute these forty years from the death of Joshua; and consequently suppose, that many of them had passed before Chushan's oppression began; but others reckon them from Othniel's being raised up to judge Israel, which seems the more natural interpretation.—The chronology of this book is, however, so very intricate, that the most learned men differ exceedingly concerning it. In general, we are informed that Solomon, in the fourth year of his reign, laid the foundation of the temple, four hundred and eighty years after Israel came out of Egypt. (1 Kings vi. 1.) This was forty-four years after David's accession to the throne, which it will appear could not take place till about sixty years after the death of Eli. (Notes, 1 Sam. vii. 1. Acts xiii. 21.) From the exodus to the death of Joshua, might be sixty-six years; (though some reckon it only fifty-seven;) and this leaves about three hundred and ten years from the death of Joshua to that of Eli.—Many schemes have been formed for allotting these years, (which some make rather more, and others less,) to the time of the several judges: but none of them give entire satisfaction. It is, however, probable, that the years of oppression generally form a part of the time given to each judge; and that in several instances there were more judges than one, employed in different parts of the land. In this case the years assigned to each were coincident; and a few hints, of the opinions formed by learned men on the subject, will be given as we proceed.

V. 12. Strengthened. The Lord had formed Eglon of a stout and valiant spirit; and had raised him to power and prosperity as a prince; and he afforded him success in his enterprise against Israel. (Notes, Ex. ix. 13—16. 2 Kings v. 1. Is. xlv. 1—6.)

V. 13. The city, &c. It is probable that the Moabites, &c. erected fortifications in the place where Jericho had stood; (Note, i. 16;) and there placed a garrison, to curb and annoy the Israelites on each side of Jordan. Here Eglon resided.

V. 14. The guilt of the people was more aggravated, and their spirits were more stubborn, than before, and therefore they suffered longer before they began to cry unto the Lord. It was also his pleasure, that their chastisement should be more severe, and of longer continuance. (Note, 10, 11.)

V. 15—18. Some suppose that Ehud could use both hands alike well; but if he were unable to use his right hand, as the original words evidently imply, Eglon would be the less apt to suspect him. The Israelites sent their tribute by Ehud under the name of a present, or some oblation above what was exacted in order to obtain favour; and the Lord doubtless directed Ehud to take this opportunity of executing his vengeance on the tyrant. The king of Israel raised up a deliverer, who acted by commission from him: and Eglon had usurped his throne, and was condemned by him to be thus put to death. But Ehud's conduct cannot possibly be drawn into precedent, or authorize the assassination of kings, however tyrannical or persecuting; unless any man were called to act by the same evident commission from the God of heaven.—The law, of being subject to principalities and powers in all things lawful, is the rule of our conduct.

V. 19. The quarries: or graven images, probably the idols of Moab, which were set up in contempt of the God of Israel.—Ehud had ingratiated himself with Eglon by the present; he had no suspicion of one whom he supposed unarmed; and it is likely, that he expected some information concerning state-affairs, or the secret combination of his countrymen: yet he was strangely infatuated to trust himself alone with an Israelite.

V. 20. From God. The word here used is common to the true God, and the supposed deities of the Gentiles. Eglon expecting some oracle from God, rose up in reverence, and afforded Ehud the opportunity of effecting his purpose. Ehud indeed had a secret errand, a message from God, unto him, but it was of a far different nature than Eglon expected.

V. 22—25. This powerful oppressor would thus be found weltering, after the most disgraceful manner, in that very place where he had often indulged his pride, sloth, and luxury! As he fell without noise, and died without being able to cry for help, Ehud had a full opportunity of escaping: and he departed with that circumspection and deliberation, which sprang from confidence in God, and a consciousness of having done his duty.

V. 29. Ten thousand. So small an army of valiant soldiers, served to curb the whole kingdom of Israel, when once it was subjected: but they might have been easily reinforced from beyond Jordan. Ehud had therefore taken

V. 30. The land had rest, until eighty years, from the close of the aforementioned forty years, were expired.—Yet some think, that the oppression of Jabin in the northern part of the land, coincided with some of the years of rest in the southern part, here mentioned. (iv. 1—3.)

V. 31. Shamgar, being employed in agriculture, when the Philistines invaded the land, was supernaturally animated to attack them, and miraculously assisted, in making this slaughter among them with no other weapon than an ox-goad. This broke their force and spirits for a considerable time. Shamgar succeeded Ehud, but it is not said how long he acted as judge.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—11. Temptations and trials detect the wickedness of the hearts of sinners: they discover where sin, and where grace, has dominion: they tend to undeceive the self-deluded: and they manifest, exercise, and strengthen the graces of believers; who, being called to be soldiers, must learn and practise war all their days; and in their conflict with Satan, sin, and this evil world, must be inured to hardships, watchfulness, and self-denial, for their future and eternal good. These are constrained to live in the world, but they are not of the world, and are forbidden to conform to it: for the friendship of the world is more fatal than its enmity; as the latter can only kill the body, but the former murders many an immortal soul.—When the heart is not established by grace, the descent from the most plausible profession of piety is natural, and almost imperceptible. Polite attentions and civilities to ungodly people, (in which it is thought, to be sure, there can be no harm,) by an easy step introduces men to more intimate connexions; then concessions must be made, and they must be a little conformable to such kind friends or relatives. And as it is not easy to draw the line; one compliance prepares for another, till frequently a specious profession ends in apostacy. But if true believers thus backslide from God, they shall surely and speedily be corrected; and know by experience that the friendship of the wicked, and the gain of transgression, will not profit them in the day of trouble: most certainly therefore they can never profit the sinner "in the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgement of God."—Those afflictions, however severe and tedious, which bring the Lord to remembrance, and excite a spirit of humble earnest prayer, are invaluable blessings. And as "he is ready to forgive, and plenteous in mercy to all them that call upon him;" he will not upbraid the penitent, nor fail to appear for his relief: how wonderful then is it, that men, groaning under sufferings and terrors, are so long ere they cry unto him for help! (Note, Ps. xxxii. 2—5.)—If we would get out of trouble effectually, we must begin with repentance, and seeking forgiveness; and then in due time deliverance, rest, and inward peace and comfort will ensue.

V. 12—31. Alas! how inveterate is man's propensity to ingratitude towards God! and how readily do we relapse into our former offences! The secret history of every one of us, even if kept from open scandals, or visible declensions, greatly resembles the history of Israel: "O foolish, people and unwise, do we thus requite the LORD, that bought us!" This renders repeated chastisements absolutely necessary; for so perverse are we, that the more indulgently we are treated by our heavenly Father, the more disobedient we generally prove! Yet, after our most aggravated provocations, and in our deepest distresses, if we again cry unto him, he will deliver us; and the meanest instrument, and the most unlikely method, shall be effectual, if he appoints and blesses them.—Luxury, sloth, and pride fatten men for destruction: the Lord delights to abase those who exalt themselves against him, and oppress his people; and to render infamous, as well as to cast into the abyss of misery, those who have been the haughty and the terrible of the earth.—What message from God, but a message of vengeance, can a proud rebel expect? Such a message is evidently contained in the word of God: and, though we are not commissioned, or allowed, to be the executioners of it; yet his ministers must boldly declare it, without fearing the frown or respecting the persons of sinners. But blessed be God, they have another message to deliver, a message of mercy and free salvation; and that of vengeance only applies to those, who neglect and refuse the gracious proposal.—With reverent attention let us hear this message: in humble faith let us seek and accept of this great salvation; let us beg of God to

NOTES.

CHAP. IV. V. 2, 3. Jabin king of Hazor had formerly confederated against Israel, with other kings in the northern part of the country, and Joshua had slain him, and burned his city. (Notes, Josh. xi. 1—3. 10, 11.) But in process of time the Canaanites had rebuilt it; and another Jabin, it may be supposed descended from him, reigned there with great power. Hazor lay in the northern part of the land, and doubtless Harosheth in that neighbourhood. The remains of the nations of Canaan having in great numbers resorted thither to assist Sisera, the commander of Jabin's army, in whom he placed, great confidence, and to obtain his protection; it was called "Harosheth of the Gentiles," or nations.—The Israelites, having relapsed into idolatry, were grievously oppressed by these enemies for twenty years, before they heartily set about reformation, or united in earnest prayers for deliverance. (Note, iii. 9, 10, 14.)

V. 4. Deborah, notwithstanding her extraordinary call to judge Israel, could not personally undertake those military expeditions, which generally distinguished these deliverers; but she used her authority to repress iniquity, to reform religion, and to execute impartial justice to the people.—She is called "the wife of Lapidoth;" but the termination of the word is the feminine of the plural, and seldom used for the names of men. Some have therefore supposed it to be the name of the town in which she dwelt; (the woman of Lapidoth;) others refer it, according to the signification of the original word, either to her occupation, as making lumps; or to the inspiration of the Almighty; translating it "a woman of illuminations;" and others understand it as meaning, that she was an illustrious woman, and a light in Israel. Yet our rendering is most natural. (Note, 2 Kings xxii. 14.)

V. 5. Under the palm tree, &c. That is, in some lowly habitation, shaded by a large palm-tree, more suited to the sanctity of a prophetess, than the dignity of a judge. Her character of a prophetess being established, the people readily referred their differences to her decision; when it is probable the ordinary courts were shut up, and the magistrates deprived of authority by Jabin's oppression: but perhaps he feared no danger from a woman acting in this capacity.

V. 6, 7. It is not certain, whether Barak had previously been employed by Deborah or not; for he dwelt at a distance from her. But, by direction from God, he was at this time singled out, and commanded whither to go and what troops to raise; and assured of both opportunity to attack, and assistance to subdue, the enemies of Israel. These orders were sent to him as the commandment of "the LORD God of Israel:" but, under the tyranny of a jealous oppressor, he could draw together an army only by persuasions and exhortations, and thus induce a number of men to assemble at Kedesh, and thence to follow him to Tabor; whither the Lord engaged to draw Sisera, or influence his mind, to meet him. (Notes, Hos. xi. 3, 4. John vi. 44—46.)

V. 8, 9. The danger of this enterprise was great and manifest: and though Barak had faith, yet it was not so strong as to exclude misgivings, and overcome all reluctance to the service. It does not appear, that he doubted whether Deborah spake by authority from God or not; but he hesitated concerning success unless she went with him. He would, no doubt, desire her presence, counsel, and prayers, as a prophetess, and the judge of Israel: but he was culpably afraid; and, not honouring God as he ought to have done, he was deprived in part of the honour, which he would otherwise have obtained. Perhaps Deborah in her answer intended, that the credit of the victory would be given to her, and not to Barak: but the Spirit of God foretold the death of Sisera by Jael. (21.)—Barak seems to have come to Deborah: and she accompanied him back to Kedesh-naphtali.—The high priest with Urim and Thummim, the other priests with the trumpets, and the Levites, are not at all mentioned in these transactions. (Notes, xx. 18—28. Ex. xxviii. 30. Num. xxvii. 12. Josh. ix. 14, 15.)

V. 10. Barak resided in the lot of Naphtali, on which Zebulun bordered: he therefore made known his purpose in that neighbourhood, and collected ten Kedesh; and he went up with ten thousand men ^{at} his feet: and Deborah went up with him.

11 Now ^eHeber the Kenite, which was of the children of ^eHobab the father-in-law of Moses, had severed himself from the Kenites, and pitched his tent unto the plain of ^eZaanaim, which is by ^fKedesh.

12 And they shewed Sisera, that Barak the son of Abinoam was gone up to ^gmount Tabor.

13 And Sisera ^hgathered together all his chariots, even ^hnine hundred chariots of iron, and all the people that were with him, from Harosheth of the Gentiles unto the river of Kishon.

14 And Deborah said unto Barak, ⁱUp; for this is the day in which the LORD hath delivered Sisera into thine hand: ^jis not the LORD gone out before thee? So Barak went down from mount Tabor, and ten thousand men after him.

15 And ^kthe LORD discomfited Sisera, and all his chariots, and all his host, with the edge of the sword, before Barak: so that Sisera lighted down off his chariot, and fled away on his feet.

16 But Barak ^lpursued after the chariots, and after the host, unto Harosheth of the Gentiles: and all the host of Sisera fell upon the edge of the sword: and there was not ^ma man left.

17 ¶ Howbeit Sisera ⁿfled away on his feet to the tent of ^oJael the wife of Heber the Kenite: for there was ^ppeace between Jabin the king of Hazor and the house of Heber the Kenite.

18 And Jael went out to meet Sisera, and said unto him, Turn in, my lord, turn in to me; fear not:

thousand foot-soldiers chiefly from these two tribes, though some others at length assisted them. (Notes, v. 14–18.) At the head of this small army, (when compared with that of Sisera, which was very great,) he marched on foot to meet the enemy; without either cavalry or war-chariots! and Deborah attended him, to encourage his faith and confidence in God. (Notes, Deut. xx. 1–4. Ps. xx. 6–8.)

V. 11. The other Kenites dwelt upon the borders of the wilderness of Judah; but Heber had removed with his family to the northern part of the land, where he dwelt in tents, and found convenient pasturage for his flocks. (Note, i. 16.)—This is inserted, to explain what follows concerning Jael.

V. 14. Barak secured his army by the advantage of the ground, until a favourable opportunity presented itself of attacking the enemy: but Deborah assured him, that the very day was come; and that “the LORD was gone forth before him, and would deliver Sisera into his hand.” Thus encouraged, he boldly marched down into the plain, where the iron chariots had their utmost advantage; and so the victory became the more illustrious. (Note, Josh. xvii. 16.)

V. 15. Doubtless Barak and his army displayed both conduct and bravery in this battle: yet the victory is wholly ascribed to the Lord, who both gave them conduct and courage, and rendered these effectual, by terrifying their enemies, or throwing them into confusion. (Note, Josh. x. 9, 10.) It is to be lamented that this pious and rational language of the Scriptures should, among Christians, be so frequently changed for a phraseology which borders upon heathenism, or even atheism; by ascribing all events to fortune, luck, second causes; and excluding the mention of the first great Cause of all things.

V. 17. Sisera had quitted his chariot, probably to escape notice, and he fled away on foot like a common soldier. For the same reason he hastened to the tent of Heber, with whom he had made some agreement; or whom Jabin had suffered, as inoffensive persons, not of the race of Israel, to live peaceably by him.—It is probable that Jael’s tent was distinct from that of Heber; (Gen. xxiv. 67. xxxi. 33;) and perhaps Sisera sought refuge in it on that account, as less likely to be searched.

V. 18, 19. Probably Jael really intended kindness to Sisera, when she invited him into the tent, and shewed him all the hospitality which it afforded; but, by a divine impulse, she was afterwards led to consider him as the determined enemy of the Lord and his people, and to avail herself of that opportunity to destroy him. (Notes, 21. v. 24.)

V. 20. Jael is not said to have promised Sisera, that she would deny his being there: she would give him shelter and refreshment, but not utter a falsehood to oblige him.—A very criminal deviation from “simplicity and godly sincerity,” is become customary among professed Christians; I mean, the instructing and requiring servants to prevaricate, (to word it no more harshly,) in order that their masters may be preserved from the inconvenience of unwelcome visitants. Surely some more manly, candid, and Christian method might be substituted, of giving an impertinent intruder to understand that he was not welcome; and to intimate to friends, that their company would be more seasonable at another time! I have been informed, that on such occasions the French send word that they are not visible; which is certainly nearer the truth, than to order a servant to say that they are not at home. And it should be considered, whether they who require their servants to disregard the truth for their pleasure, will not teach them an evil lesson, and habituate them to use falsehood for their own pleasure also. (Note, Eph. iv. 25.)

V. 21. When Jael saw Sisera fast asleep, and was made sensible, by some intimation from God, that she ought to destroy him; her faith overcame all reluctance, and every feminine fear: and with the hammer and a nail of the tent, which she was accustomed to handle, she speedily and effectually accomplished her purpose.—The divine mandate superseded all other obligations: but her conduct is not recorded for our imitation in ordinary circumstances. (Notes, iii. 15–33. Josh. ii. 4–6. 8–11.)

V. 24. In this instance the Israelites observed the command of God to extirpate the Canaanites, and not to make any league with them, or put them under tribute.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The most promising reformations are often speedily stopped, when the reformer is removed.—Notwithstanding the painful effects of sin which men repeatedly experience, they readily venture again upon it; thus provoking God to punish them with increasing severity: and tempters commonly prove instruments of correction, or of vengeance. But the Lord’s thoughts and ways are not as ours: when they, who have most frequently and grievously rebelled, begin to pray unto him, he is ready to hear and help them; (Notes, Is. lv. 6–9;) nay, he often regards the mere cry of distress, and relieves men from temporal misery, saying, “Sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee.” He selects his instruments in that manner, which most tends to mortify the pride, and expose the weakness, of his haughty opposers. Yet unbelief weakens men’s hands; and, being dishonourable to God, it eventually discredits those who indulge it.—The counsel and prayers of persons eminent for faith and piety are highly to be valued; but our confidence must be placed, not in them, but in the presence and protection of the Almighty. Whether it please him “to save by many or by few,” he hath all hearts in his hands, and can soon procure willing and suitable persons for his work: and a variety of incidents, which originate from the voluntary conduct of men actuated by secular motives, appear by the event to form a part of his secret counsel. (Notes, vii. 4–13. 1 Sam. xiv. 6–10.) As courage and faith are his gifts, he so dispenses them, as most conduces to his own glory; and shews the strongest that they need to be encouraged, and on some occasions are surpassed, by their weaker brethren.—How wretched are they who have the Lord for their enemy! since, whatever be their number or power, they can make no resistance: and will in vain attempt to flee away and escape. Soon will they be ashamed of their present confidence and glorying. They may indeed court the friendship of the Lord’s despised people; or seek refuge in obscurity: but sooner or later they must all perish, perhaps suddenly; and be hurried from the commission of daring crimes into the presence of their angry Judge!—Every natural inclination must be subordinated to the will of God; and all our connexions with his enemies must be broken off, if we would enjoy his favour, and be numbered among his people. We should indeed love, pray for, and be kind to, our greatest enemies: yet there are some of his foes, to whom we must not bid God speed, nor entertain them in our houses. (Note, 2 John 7–11.) We should, however, persevere to the uttermost in our endeavours to reclaim them; and direct our most implacable resentment against our own lusts, aiming at nothing less than their entire destruction.

NOTES.

CHAP. V. V. 1. (Notes, Ex. xv. 1. Deut. xxxi. 19.) By this song of praise, the affections of love and gratitude to God would be more powerfully excited, army and war-chariots of Sisera. (8.)—Yet Reuben kept at a distance, as disaffected to the common cause, or unconcerned about it; which excited much uneasiness and resentment, and occasioned many thoughts in the minds of his brethren. But he made the care of his flocks the pretence for remaining at home on this conjuncture.

V. 17. The tribe of Gad, and the half-tribe of Manasseh, inhabited mount Gilead: and Machir before-mentioned seems to have been that half of Manasseh which dwelt west of Jordan. (14.) It is probable, that all the Israelites, who dwelt east of Jordan, abode at home, and refused their concurrence. The tribes of Dan and Asher did the same: the one being occupied in merchandise, or fishery; and the other, as some think, in repairing the breaches, or stopping the incursions, which the sea had made upon their inheritance.

V. 18. Zebulun and Naphtali. From these two tribes Barak had raised his army; and they had boldly ventured and even despised their lives, in meeting the enemy, with their iron-chariots, in the open field of battle. But some of the others were ready to follow the blow, though not present in the first engagement.—It is remarkable that Judah and Simeon are not mentioned in this poem, either as deserving censure or commendation: and this cannot well be accounted for unless the inhabitants of the southern part of the land were at that time so circumstanced, that it could not be expected they should help their brethren of the north. (Note, iii. 30.)

V. 19. Some other kings of Canaan had confederated with Jabin, entirely out of hatred against Israel, without receiving any recompense for their assistance.

V. 20. The angels are called "morning stars," (Job xxxviii. 7.) and their assistance may be here meant; or in poetical language, a violent tempest, raised at that time, which greatly facilitated the destruction of the Canaanites, might be ascribed to the influences of the stars in their courses; which thus, without any such miraculous alteration in the heavens as took place in the days of Joshua, fought effectually against Sisera and his army. (Note, Josh. x. 12—14.)—Some think the battle continued during part of the night; and that the bright shining of the stars enabled Israel more successfully to pursue, and more effectually to destroy their enemies.

V. 21. The river of Kishon. (Marg. Ref.) The stream of this rivulet seems to have been so swelled by the rains which had fallen, that numbers of the Canaanites, attempting to cross it, were swept away by it.—Deborah, by exciting Barak and the Israelites against their powerful enemies, and by their strong faith and fervent prayers, had trodden down their strength in the very dust. (Note, Mic. vii. 8—10.)

V. 23. It is probable that Meroz was some town, or city, near to the field of battle, and that the inhabitants were more inexcusable in not affording their assistance, than those who lived at a distance: and perhaps their refusal arose from a secret favour borne to the Canaanites. The Lord did not want their help against the mightiest of his enemies; but their conduct proved their unbelief and degeneracy.—Deborah did not curse them out of personal resentment, but "the angel of the Lord" commanded her to pronounce a curse upon them; that angel of the Lord, who was the "captain of the Lord's host." (Note, Josh. v. 14.)—Perhaps Meroz had before been a flourishing city; but in consequence of this curse, it became so obscure that its situation is at present unknown. (Notes, Josh. vi. 26, 1 Sam. xxvi. 19.)

V. 24. The inhabitants of Meroz, though Israelites, feared the power and valued the friendship of the Canaanites, more than they dreaded the power and desired the favour of God; and therefore were joined with the accursed Canaanites. Jael, though not a native Israelite, from faith and love to the cause of God, preferred the friendship of his oppressed people to that of their enemies, and was joined with them in the blessing, yea, had a special and superior blessing. (Notes, Matt. xxv. 30—46, Gal. iii. 6—14.) And indeed, "in the tent," she jeopardied her life as much as the soldiers did "in the high places of the field."

V. 26, 27. When Jael had driven the nail through the head of Sisera, she perhaps cut it off with his own sword: though indeed no intimation is given of it in the history; and the words may merely be a poetical repetition of the same idea by a variety of terms. (Note, 1 Sam. xvii. 51.)—When he felt the anguish of the nail penetrating his head, perhaps he struggled to arise, but fell down again, and bowed, and died at her feet; finding death where he had sought life, and a terrible enemy where he expected a kind friend.

V. 28. The mother of Sisera, with impatient expectation, looked for his return, and wondered what so long delayed him; not in the least fearing his success in so unequal a contest as this appeared to her. In an ordinary poem we should say, this was finely imagined! But we may here conclude it was actually the case.

V. 29. Wise. This seem to be spoken ironically. Her ladies, in their great wisdom, suggested that Sisera only waited to divide the immense spoil which had been taken: and she as wisely pleased her vain mind with the soothing imagination!

V. 30. A damsel, &c. What a picture does this give of an ungodly and sensual heart! How shameful are these wishes of an aged mother for her beloved son, and his officers and soldiers: that a woman of honour and virtue, as we say, could delight her fancy, with conceiving the Israelitish virgins divided among the conquerors, as their property, to be exposed to their unbridled domineering lust! And that nothing more excellent could be conceived by her trifling mind, than to see her son, and his attendants and concubines, arrayed in fine garments, wrought by the singular skill and industry of their vanquished enemies!

V. 31. The mother of Sisera is left to enjoy her imaginary triumph, and meet her bitter disappointment; whilst the hymn of praise concludes with wishing similar destruction to all the enemies of the Lord, and prosperity to those who love him: that their characters may be honourable, their endeavours successful, their course increasingly useful, and their path shining more and more; till they resemble the noon-day, when the sun by his full strength has dispelled the mists and clouds which his rising draws up, and which at first obscure his way, but afterwards increase his splendour. (Notes, Ps. lxxviii. 1—3. Rev. xix. 1—6.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—11. No delay should be made in returning thanks to God for his mercies; for our praises are most acceptable, pleasant, and profitable, when they flow from a full heart: nor should we be backward to celebrate his praises, and declare our obligations to him; before his most determined enemies, or in the presence of the mightiest and haughtiest of the princes of the earth. Let them be reminded, that the Lord is above them; and against them, so long as they seek their own glory, and oppose his cause: let them be warned to "rejoice with trembling" in their dangerous pre-eminence; let them lower their diadems to the crown of "the King of kings;" and learn to embrace his salvation, and become his servants, or they will ere long perish like Jabin and Sisera.—Those princes who desire to serve God must trust in him, and not in chariots and horses, fleets or armies; they must use their authority in advancing truth and righteousness, and account his worship to be their most honourable and delightful privilege and employment.—Every recent mercy calls upon us to renew our gratitude for former benefits; the works of the Most High can consistently be compared only with each other; and all combine in proclaiming, that nothing is too hard for his power, or too large for his love. Our praises in prosperity will be heightened and purified by the remembrance of preceding troubles, and by humiliation for those sins which occasioned them; for nothing but sin gives birth to misery, whether personal or public, temporal or eternal.—When men rebel against God, he withdraws his protection, and sets his face against them; then their feeblest foes prevail, and

6 And Israel was greatly "impoverished because of the Midianites; and the children of Israel "cried unto the LORD.

13 And Gideon said unto him, O my Lord, ^aif the LORD be with us, ^bwhy then is all this befallen us? and where be all his miracles which ^cour fathers told us of, saying, Did not the LORD bring us up from Egypt? but now the LORD hath ^dforsaken us, and delivered us into the hands of the Midianites.

V. 12—31. When we rehearse the righteous, faithful, and merciful acts of the Lord, we should also bear true respect and affection, and give due commendation, to those who have been his willing messengers of kindness to us, and should recompense them with our fervent prayers for his blessing on them; and while he needs no human help, he is pleased to employ, and accept the services, of those who in their several stations improve their talents to advance his cause: nay, he requires every man to do this, and will call those to a severe account who neglect or evade his service.—The higher any man is advanced in Providence, the more forward ought he to be in promoting the public good, and in stirring up others, by his example, influence, and authority, to do the same; not deeming the high praises of God unbecoming the bench, the senate, or the throne, or unseasonable in the most ordinary conversation with strangers; nay, even with the nobles of the earth.—They who would do good, must shake off sloth, renounce indulgence, and learn to be active and endure hardship. On some occasions they may be called to “jeopardy their lives in the high places of the field;” at all times to sacrifice many personal interests for the public good; and by so doing, to incur the reproach and censure of a misjudging world. Most men will therefore excuse themselves; and whilst they are averse to the cross, and disaffected to the cause of God, they will find apologies for their conduct from the variety of their secular engagements and avocations. But they who temporize in a matter which admits not of neutrality, are numbered among his enemies; and whilst they grieve and discourage the hearts of others, bring heavy wrath upon themselves. Indeed, power and pre-eminence at present seem to be on their side, and the servants of God are poor, despised, and afflicted; but the tables will soon be turned, and the feeblest believer shall “tread down strength,” and exercise dominion over the mightiest of the wicked.—When the Almighty “arises to judgment, to help all the meek upon earth,” and to avenge the cause of his people, the whole creation wages war against his enemies; “the stars in their courses,” the elements melting with fervent heat, and all the angels in heaven, shall concur in their destruction: whilst the hosts of God shall sing with triumphant acclamations, “So let all thine enemies perish, O LORD;” “and they, who love the LORD,” shall “shine as the sun in the kingdom of their Father.” What will then become of the hopes of the sensual, the vain, the covetous, and the ambitious? The objects of their noblest wishes were degrading, and many of their desires base and brutish.

V. 13. The angel had said, "The LORD is with thee:" but Gideon's mind was occupied about his people, and he therefore answered, "If the LORD be with us," as not conceiving that the LORD could be with him, when there was no evidence of his special presence with Israel. He judged right, when he concluded that they could not have been so distressed, if the almighty God, who had brought them out of Egypt, had not for the time forsaken them: but he did not suitably advert to those crimes which had provoked him to anger. (Notes, Deut. xxxii. 26-31.)

14 And ^athe LORD looked upon him, and said, ^aGo in this thy might, and thou shalt save Israel from the hand of the Midianites: have not I sent thee?

15 And he said unto him, O my LORD, ^awherewith shall I save Israel? behold, ^amy family is poor in Manasseh, and I am ^athe least in my father's house.

16 And the LORD said unto him, ^aSurely I will be with thee, and thou shalt smite the Midianites as one man.

17 And he said unto him, ^aIf now I have found grace in thy sight, then ^ashew me a sign that thou talkest with me.

18 Depart not hence, I pray thee, until I come unto thee, and ^abring forth my ^apresent, and set it before thee. And he said, I will tarry until thou come again.

19 ¶ And Gideon went in, and ^amade ready ^aa kid, and ^aunleavened cakes of an ephah of flour: the flesh he put in a basket, and he put the broth in a pot, and brought it out unto him under the oak, and presented it.

20 And the angel of God said unto him, Take the flesh and the unleavened cakes, and ^alay them upon this rock, and ^apour out the broth. And he did so.

21 ¶ Then the angel of the LORD put forth the end of the staff that ^awas in his hand, and touched the flesh, and the unleavened cakes; and there ^aarose up fire out of the rock, and consumed the flesh and the unleavened cakes. Then the angel of the LORD departed out of his sight.

22 And when Gideon ^aperceived that he ^awas an angel of the LORD, Gideon said, Alas, O LORD God! for ^abecause I have seen an angel of the LORD face to face.

V. 14. We here learn who this angel was; even the LORD JEHOVAH, the only begotten Son of God, who hath in all ages declared the Father to mankind. These repeated evidences continually remind the attentive reader, that the Scriptures are calculated to lead us to conceive of the one living and true God, as subsisting in distinct persons. The LORD looked upon Gideon, with some peculiar expression of majesty or of favour giving energy to his words, while he said, "Go in this thy might, and thou shalt save Israel." (Notes, Ex. iii. 12. iv. 1—12. Luke xxi. 12—19.)—Thus he was commissioned to execute the bold designs, which he was revolving in his mind, or to attempt the deliverance of his people, in that strength of faith which he then possessed. If he believed that nothing was wanting to deliver them from the Midianites, but the presence of God who redeemed Israel from Egypt, let him go in this confidence, and he shall find that same power exerted to render him successful. "Have not I sent thee?" saith the divine speaker.

V. 15. Manasseh was not one of the leading tribes in Israel; the thousand (Marg.) to which Gideon belonged, was poor in that tribe; and he was (as he humbly thought) the meanest person in the family, and utterly unfit to undertake such a service. (Notes, Ex. iv. 13, 14. Is. vi. 5—8. Jer. i. 6—8. 1 Pet. v. 1—4.)

V. 16. As one man. With great facility, and to their entire destruction. (Num. xiv. 15.)

V. 17. That thou talkest, &c. Gideon seems to have desired some assurance, that the person, now speaking with him, was the same, who at the bush commissioned Moses to deliver Israel out of Egypt, and who had given him sensible tokens of his divine power and authority. (Note, Ex. iii. 2—12.)

V. 18. Meat-offering. (Marg.) As a kid was part of the meat-offering, (19,) the word cannot always be used exclusively for oblations of flour, &c., as some have thought.

V. 19. This preparation would serve, either for a hospitable meal, or for a sacred oblation. The quantity was vastly more than was necessary for one person at one time: and it shews that, even in his poverty, Gideon was ready to "use hospitality without grudging," according to the custom of those times. (Note, Gen. xviii. 3—8.)

V. 20, 21. This command seems to have been intended as a trial of Gideon's faith and obedience, by which the Lord gave him the sign which he required. With the staff in his hand, he touched the flesh, &c.; and by fire, miraculously kindled, the whole was consumed, as a sacrifice, and not as a hospitable meal; for he was God, and not man. (Note, 1 Kings, xviii. 33—39.)

V. 22. The sight of a created angel, though it might have surprised, would not have thus terrified, Gideon: but it was a current opinion, that the vision of the divine glory was fatal; and, except as seen in Jesus Christ, no doubt it would be so. "From such places the ancient Christians rightly gathered, that the Son of God appeared, upon some great occasions, in old time; which is not incredible, but a matter of easy belief; if we be persuaded, that he did actually appear in our flesh, which he took of the virgin Mary, and dwelt among 23 And the LORD said unto him, ^aPeace be unto thee; fear not: thou shalt not die.

24 Then Gideon ^abuilt an altar there unto the LORD, and called it ^aJehovah-shalom: unto this day it is yet in ^aOphrah of the Abiezrites.

25 ¶ And it came to pass the same night, that the LORD said unto him, ^aTake thy father's young bullock, ^aeven the second bullock of seven years old, and ^athrow down the altar of Baal that ^athy father hath, and ^acut down the grove that is by it;

26 And ^abuild an altar unto the LORD thy God upon the top of this ^arock, in ^athe ordered place, and take the second bullock, and offer a burnt-sacrifice with the wood of the grove which thou shalt cut down.

27 Then Gideon took ten men of his servants, ^aand did as the LORD had said unto him: and so it was, because he feared his father's household, and the men of the city, that he could not do it by day, that ^ahe did it by night.

28 ¶ And when the men of the city arose early in the morning, behold, the altar of Baal was cast down, and the grove was cut down that ^awas by it, and the second bullock was offered upon the altar that ^awas built.

29 And they said one to another, Who hath done this thing? And when they enquired and asked, they said, Gideon the son of Joash hath done this thing.

30 Then the men of the city said unto Joash, ^aBring out thy son, that he may die: because he hath cast down the altar of Baal, and because he hath cut down the grove that ^awas by it.

31 And Joash said unto all that stood against him, ^aWill ye plead for Baal? will ye save him? he that will plead for him, ^alet him be put to death whilst it us a long time, and then ascended into heaven, where he lives for ever. For why should it be thought strange, if for a short time he appeared sometimes in human shape, as a prelude to what he intended to do in the fulness of time? It was indeed a greater thing, that he did for us at last: but he that did the greater, may well be granted to have done the less, and there is no reason to doubt of it. (Bp. Patrick.)

V. 23. The LORD said. Either at a second appearance, or by an audible voice, or in a vision as afterwards. (25.)

V. 24. Gideon does not seem to have intended this altar for sacrifices; but for a memorial of the Lord's appearance, and gracious words to him. (Marg. Ref.) It remained at the time when this history was written.

V. 25, 26. Our translation supposes, that only one bullock was sacrificed: yet the term, "the second bullock," seems to imply that two were appointed. It does not, however, appear when, or how, the first bullock, if two were meant, was offered. "This second bullock of seven years old," (the same number as the years of Israel's oppression,) seems to have been fattened on purpose for a public sacrifice to Baal. Before he offered the sacrifice, Gideon was directed to "throw down the altar which his father had" for the worship of Baal; and to cut down the grove; and thus to declare open war against idolatry, before he attacked the enemies of his people: regarding the honour and command of God, more than the authority or credit of his father; which probably had hitherto made him satisfy himself with silent disapprobation. Some think that the word rendered grove, means an image of Ashtaroth, which was cut in pieces, and burnt as fuel in consuming the sacrifice offered to JEHOVAH. (Note, ii. 11—13.)—Gideon was not a priest, or even a Levite; but he acted by extraordinary commission, as a prophet. Sacrificing also was generally restricted to the altar at Shiloh: yet on this occasion the Lord was pleased to dispense with the ritual appointment; and even to command and accept a sacrifice offered with those things which had been employed in idolatry: for it was of great importance, that a protest against the worship of Baal, and an avowal of JEHOVAH as the only true God, should introduce Israel's deliverance. (Notes, Lev. i. 5—9. xvii. 1—7. Deut. xii. 1—16. 1 Sam. vii. 9. 1 Kings, xviii. 38, 39. 2 Kings iii. 20.)

V. 27. The large family of Gideon's father was grievously infected with this idolatry; which the more magnifies the mercy of God in preserving him, and in selecting him to be Israel's deliverer. But some, even of his servants, were ready and willing to help in this perilous attempt.

V. 28—30. When the citizens arose betimes, (perhaps to pay their morning devotions to Baal,) and saw what had taken place, they were speedily informed that Gideon had done it; and nothing but his blood could satisfy the persecuting rage of these infatuated idolaters! (Note, 1 Kings xix. 2.)

V. 31, 32. Joash, though himself guilty of idolatry, was unwilling to have his son punished: and probably, by what had been done, he was convinced of the sin and folly of worshipping an idol, which could not defend itself; and which needed to be saved by its devotees, instead of being able to save them. If Baal were indeed a god, let him plead his own cause against Gideon: and that are with thee are ⁴too many, for me to give the Midianites into their hands, lest ⁵Israel vaunt themselves against me, saying, ⁶'Mine own hand hath saved me.

3 Now therefore, go to, proclaim in the ears of the people, saying, ⁴'Whosoever is fearful and afraid, let him return, and depart early from mount Gilead: and there returned of the people ⁵twenty and two thousand, and there remained ten thousand.

4 And the LORD said unto Gideon, The people are yet ⁵too many; bring them down unto the water; and ⁶I will try them for thee there; and it shall be, ⁷that of whom I say unto thee, This shall go with thee, the same shall go with thee; and of whomsoever I say unto thee, This shall not go with thee, the same shall not go.

5 So he brought down the people unto the water: and the LORD said unto Gideon, Every one that lapped of the water with his tongue, as a dog lapped, him shalt thou set by himself; likewise every one that boweth down upon his knees to drink.

6 And the number of them that lapped, ⁷putting their hand to their mouth, were three hundred men: but all the rest of the people bowed down upon their knees to drink water.

7 And the LORD said unto Gideon, ⁸'By the three hundred men that lapped will I save you, and deliver the Midianites into thine hand: and let all the ⁹other people go every man unto his place.

8 So the people took victuals in their hand, and their ⁹trumpets: and he sent all ¹⁰the rest of Israel every man unto his tent, and retained those three hundred men. And the host of Midian was beneath him ¹¹in the valley.

9 ¶ And it came to pass ²the same night, that the LORD said unto him, ³'Arise, get thee down unto the host; for ⁴I have delivered it into thine hand.

10 But ¹'if thou fear to go down, go thou with Phurah thy servant down to the host.

11 And ¹'thou shalt hear what they say, and afterward shall ²thine hands be strengthened to go down unto the host. Then went he down with Phurah his servant unto the outside of the ³'armed men that were in the host.

12 And ¹'the Midianites, and the Amalekites, and all the children of the east, lay along in the valley like ²'grasshoppers for multitude; and their camels vast multitudes of the Midianites, their courage sunk: and yet, had they prevailed, they would have ¹vaunted, and ascribed the victory to their own valour, and not to the special help of God! Most of them were destitute of faith, and many doubtless disheartened with a guilty conscience. They thought that instead of too many, they were too few; and the greater part of them availed themselves of the proclamation, and went home.—Mount Gilead, here mentioned, must have been some mountain of that name west of Jordan, of less note than mount Gilead which lay east of that river.

V. 4—7. Some of the soldiers that still remained were not so courageous, as they would be thought: but Gideon had done his part in that respect: and it pleased the Lord himself to prove and purify the company, by an extraordinary expedient. Perhaps they were led to the water after the fatigue of a long march, under the idea that they were going directly to attack the enemy. It seems to have been customary for them to drink as the cattle do, by putting their mouths down to the water, and drawing it in: but they, who only took a little into their hands, and sucked it up, (as dogs are remarked to lap a little water hastily,) might be supposed to be less enslaved to their appetite, more able to endure hardship, and more eager to engage.—It may be supposed that most of this very small company, by whom God was pleased to save Israel, were men of genuine faith and piety, as well as of steady courage.

V. 8. This small company seems to have retained nothing, but present necessary provisions, and perhaps all the trumpets which belonged to the whole army, without any other arms! (Notes, 1 Sam. xiv. 6—15. 1 Cor. ii. 3—5.)

V. 13—15. This dream might appear to have little coherency in it: but the event evidently proved that it was from the Lord, who directed the soldier to an exact interpretation; and at the same time discovered, that the name of Gideon had filled the hearts of the Midianites with terror. The very small unarmed company which Gideon headed, had the Midianites known about them, would have appeared as contemptible as the barley-cake, and no more were without number, as the sand by the sea-side for multitude.

13 And when Gideon was come, behold, ¹⁴there was a man that told a dream unto his fellow, and said, Behold, I dreamed a dream; and, ¹⁵'lo, a cake of barley-bread tumbled into the host of Midian, and came unto a tent, and smote it that it fell, and overturned it, that the tent lay along.

14 And ¹'his fellow answered and said, This is nothing else save the sword of Gideon the son of Joash, a man of Israel: for ²'into his hand hath God delivered Midian and all the host.

15 ¶ And it was ¹so, when Gideon heard the telling of the dream, and the ²'interpretation thereof, that he ³'worshipped, and returned into the host of Israel, and said, ⁴'Arise, for the LORD hath delivered into your hand the host of Midian.

16 ¶ And he divided the three hundred men ¹into three companies, and he put ²a trumpet in every man's hand, with ³'empty pitchers, and ⁴'lamps within the pitchers.

17 And he said unto them, ¹'Look on me, and do likewise: and, behold, when I come to the outside of the camp, it shall be, ²that as I do, so shall ye do.

18 When I blow with a trumpet, I and all that are with me, then ¹'blow ye the trumpets also on every side of all the camp, and say, ²'The sword of the LORD, and of Gideon.

19 ¶ So Gideon, and the hundred men that were with him, came unto the outside of the camp ¹in the beginning of the middle watch; and they had but newly set the watch: and they blew the trumpets, and ²'brake the pitchers that were in their hands.

20 And the three companies ¹'blew the trumpets, and ²'brake the pitchers, and held the lamps in their left hands, and the trumpets in their right hands to blow ³withal: and they cried, The sword of the LORD, and of Gideon.

21 And they ¹'stood every man in his place round about the camp: and ²'all the host ran, and cried, and fled.

22 And the three hundred blew the trumpets, and ¹'the LORD set every man's sword against his fellow, even throughout all the host: and the host fled to Beth-shittah ²'in Zereth, and to the ³'border of ⁴'Abel-meholah unto Tabbath.

23 And ¹'the men of Israel gathered themselves likely to destroy their army than that to overturn a tent.—Gideon therefore took this as a sure pledge of success; and without delay worshipped God, and returned with confidence to his three hundred men, who were "the host of Israel," by whom the Lord intended to deliver his people. (Note, 2 Cor. x. 1—6.)

V. 16—22. This small number of men, thus divided, would be able to encompass the whole camp of the Midianites. Concealing the lamps in the pitchers, they would pass unobserved to their appointed stations: then, in the dead of the night, when most of the enemy were fast asleep, all at once breaking their pitchers one against another, with as much noise as they could; and blowing the trumpets, and shouting "The sword of the LORD, and of Gideon," they would occasion an exceedingly great alarm. And their enemies, thus awakened and affrighted, hearing the continued sound of so many trumpets, and seeing the camp surrounded with lights; would in their confusion naturally conclude themselves surprised by a large army: so that, perceiving the lamps and trumpets still keeping their stations, they would be led to suspect that the enemy was even now in the camp. And in the dark they would become jealous of one another: so that when some had by mistake been slain by their comrades, the distraction, terror, and suspicion would become general; until every one was engaged in battle with his fellow-soldier. Thus we may easily conceive the success of the stratagem: but the power of God had previously prepared the dismayed hearts of the Midianites to receive such an impression, and he set every man's sword against his fellow; (Note, 2 Chr. xx. 22—25;) nay, the obedience of faith alone could have induced so defenceless a company to venture on such an expedient, which no doubt God directed Gideon to employ. (Notes, Josh. vi. 3—7. 2 Cor. iv. 7.)

V. 23—25. As soon as the stratagem began to take effect, many of those who had been dismissed contrary to their inclinations, would return: (Note, 1 Sam. xiv. 16—23;) Gideon also speedily sent messengers to the Ephraimites.

together out of Naphtali, and out of Asher, and out of all Manasseh, and pursued after the Midianites.

24 ¶ And Gideon sent messengers throughout all mount Ephraim, saying, Come down against the Midianites, and take before them the waters unto Beth-barah and Jordan. Then all the men of Ephraim gathered themselves together, and took the waters unto Beth-barah and Jordan.

25 And they took two princes of the Midianites, Oreb and Zeeb; and they slew Oreb upon the rock, Oreb, and Zeeb they slew at the wine-press of Zeeb, and pursued Midian, and brought the heads of Oreb and Zeeb to Gideon on the other side Jordan.

CHAP. VIII.

The Ephraimites take offence, but are pacified by Gideon, 1—3. He pursues the Midianites: the men of Succoth and Penuel insolently refuse relief to his company: he threatens to chastise them; which he does, after he has taken Zebah and Zalmunna, 4—17. He puts Zebah and Zalmunna to death, because they had slain his brethren, 18—21. He refuses the government offered him: but asks the ear-rings out of the spoil, of these he makes an ephod, which proves an occasion of idolatry, 22—27. Midian is subdued, 28. Gideon's family and death; and Israel's idolatry and ingratitude, 29—35.

AND the men of Ephraim said unto him, *Why hast thou served us thus, that thou calledst us not when thou wentest to fight with the Midianites? And they did chide with him sharply.

So that numbers were soon collected; and, whilst some occupied the fords of Jordan to prevent the escape of any Midianites, others pursued and slew the fugitives; Note, iii. 29: especially the Ephraimites intercepted, and slew two princes of Midian, and brought their heads to Gideon at the passage over Jordan. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—15. Activity and prudence very properly accompany dependence upon God for success, in our lawful undertakings; but “the Lord seeth not as man seeth;” and, knowing the secrets of every heart, he varies his conduct, with a wise regard to innumerable circumstances which are imperceptible by all others. When he sees men inclined to overlook him, and through unbelief to shrink from perilous services, or through pride “to vaunt themselves against him,” he lays them aside, and does his work by other instruments. Indeed numbers profess themselves followers of Christ, helpers to his servants, and prepared to fight under his banner, whilst persecution and tribulation are at a distance: but without true faith and a good conscience, the heart will fail in the immediate prospect of danger; and some pretence be found for deserting the cause, and escaping the cross. But though a religious society may thus be diminished in numbers, and in external prosperity; yet it may be improved in purity, and may consequently expect an increasing blessing. Many who have real faith and grace are unfit for special services, and unable to bear peculiar trials, from which therefore the Lord will exempt them; and to which he will appoint those, to whom he hath given superior hardness, boldness, and firmness of spirit: and very trivial incidents will sometimes make a discovery of men's capacities and dispositions, and shew who are and who are not to be depended on in arduous undertakings. But, whilst the Lord pursues his purposes of displaying his own glory, he will try to the uttermost the faith and courage of the strongest believers: and even when they are acting by his orders, and have the security of his promise for their support, appearances may be so very strong against them, that they cannot keep out the misgivings and struggles of unbelief. This he perceives, and in the most seasonable hour, by some “token for good,” he will make their faith victorious, and establish their hearts in confidence. Dreams generally savour of our waking thoughts or dispositions, and frequently discover the sin that dwelleth in us: we have therefore often cause to be humbled on recollecting our sleeping imaginations, or to feel thankful that they were not realities; and should be reminded to pray against terrifying or polluting dreams. Sometimes, however, they may afford us a salutary hint, which, agreeing with the truth and precepts of God's word, may be made useful, without exactly ascertaining how it was brought into our mind: and if we can get any benefit from the dreams of others, we should readily and thankfully embrace it. In discovering the disposition of those with whom we are concerned, faith may frequently discern the secret operation of God, and both take encouragement from it and point it out to others.

V. 16—25. The feeblest and most improbable methods, when divinely appointed and used in faith, produce the most decisive consequences. The light of divine truth and grace in the ministers of Christ, (who are frail sinful men, and seldom adorned with the embellishments of worldly wisdom, large capacities, or great eloquence, but rather comparable to mean earthen pitchers;) accompanied by the trumpet of the gospel, preached by them in their several stations, is the power of God to the salvation of his people, and to the subversion of the kingdom of sin and Satan. Nor should they shrink from danger, or fear death: the earthen pitcher must be broken; and frequently the light of their testimony, set off by the recollection of their example, shines brightest after their decease; especially when they have been honoured, by being called to lay down their lives in so good a cause. The same light and sound of heavenly truth, which save the Israel of God, confound and dismay his enemies, and if threatened vengeance so appals the sinner's alarmed conscience in this world; what will be the effect of the archangel's trumpet, the voice of the Judge, and the shout of the redeemed, at the great day of account? and of that full blaze of light, which will manifest all hearts, display every character, and shew every impenitent sinner his deserved and inevitable doom?—In this world the wicked are often left, under the power of their own delusions and the fury of their mad passions, to avenge the cause of God upon each other: a period is approaching when we may expect that the persecuting foes of Christianity will destroy one another; whilst the host of Israel shall look on, and have nothing to do but to blow the trumpet of the gospel, and read the meaning of such singular events in the light of prophecy: and in the world to come, the wicked, by mutual enmity, upbraidings, and contempt, will increase their own and each other's misery. What then have the people of God to fear, except unbelief and sin? what have they to do, but to believe his word, to trust his power and promise, to obey his orders, to wait his time, and to help one another, as occasions are afforded and circumstances require? For they, who are incapable of one service, may be useful in another. Their victory is sure, and will soon be complete over their most numerous and powerful opponents.

NOTES.

CHAP. VIII. V. 1—3. Gideon was of the tribe of Manasseh, and the Ephraimites were perhaps jealous of him, as having the chief command in this war. It is probable, that they were averse to take any part in the perilous and arduous attempt of delivering Israel: yet it served as a pretence for their anger, that they had not been called upon to assist, though Gideon acted expressly by divine command! But he modestly threw a veil over his own achievements, and spoke highly of theirs, and thus prevented the fatal effects of their resentment. He represented his own victory, by the three hundred men, who were chiefly of Abi-ezer, as little in comparison of their taking the princes of Midian; though the former might be called the vintage, and the other the gleaning: and he intimated that the whole glory belonged neither to them nor him, but to the Lord. ‘This was an argument of the singular modesty and prudence of Gideon, and no less conspicuous in him than his courage; which is a mixture that seldom meets together, but is absolutely necessary to make a truly great man; who never appears so great, as when he treats insolent men with humility, and angry men with meekness. (Bp. Patrick. Notes, xii. 1—7. Prov. xv. 1. xvi. 32.)

V. 4. None except Gideon and his three hundred chosen men, seem to have passed over Jordan in pursuit of the two kings of Midian, who with fifteen thousand men had got over before the fords were taken. This small company though deserted by some, and chidden and abused by others of Israel, and though the remaining Midianites so far exceeded them in number; yet, in the courage, self-denial, and patience of faith, they pursued them, faint and hungry as they were, with long watching, fasting, and fatigue.—Not one of them was slain or missing, that we find! (Note, Num. xxxi. 48—54.)

V. 5, 6. The services of Gideon and his men were very great, their necessity urgent, and their request moderate: the behaviour therefore of the men of Succoth and Penuel was extremely insolent and base, and proved them disaffected to Israel and the God of Israel. They despised Gideon's feeble army, depreciated his former success, attempted to weaken his confidence of completing their delivery, and would not afford him the least assistance in his patriotic and pious undertaking! (Note, 1 Sam. xxv. 8—11.)

V. 7. Gideon “deferred his indignation;” and intimated to the princes or rulers of Succoth, that if the kings of Midian escaped him, they might; but if the Lord enabled him to destroy the kings, as he was confident he would, this would make it plain, that he was appointed judge of Israel, and in that character he would punish their ill behaviour, and teach them better. It is not agreed, in what manner he used these briers and thorns, in tearing the flesh of the men of Succoth: but though he doubtless put them to great pain, it is not probable that he slew them. (15, 16, Note, Prov. xvii. 23.)

V. 9. The inhabitants of Penuel, probably, boasted of their tower, and confided in it, to secure them both from the Midianites and from Gideon; he therefore destroyed it; and, as some at least of the men of Penuel were still more culpable than those of Succoth, he put them to death. (17. Notes, v. 23. Matt. xii. 29, 30.)

8 ¶ And he went up thence to ^kPenuel, and spake unto them likewise; and the men of Penuel answered him as the men of Succoth had answered him.

9 And he spake also unto the men of Penuel, saying, When I come again in peace, I will break down this tower.

10 ¶ Now Zebah and Zalmunna were in Karkor, and their hosts with them, about fifteen thousand men, all that were left of all the hosts of "the children of the east: for there fell an hundred and twenty thousand men that drew sword.

11 And Gideon went up by the way of them that dwelt in tents, on the east of ^pNobah and Jogbehah, and smote the host: for the host was ^qsecure.

12 And when Zebah and Zalmunna fled, he pursued after them, and took the two kings of Midian, Zebah and Zalmunna, and ^rdiscomfited all the host.

13 ¶ And Gideon the son of Joash returned from battle before the sun was up,

14 And caught a young man of the men of Succoth, and enquired of him: and he described unto him the princes of Succoth, and the elders thereof, even threescore and seventeen men.

15 And he came unto the men of Succoth; and said, Behold, Zebah and Zalmunna, with whom ye did upbraid me, saying, Are the hands of Zebah and Zalmunna now in thine hand, that we should give bread unto thy men that are weary?

16 And he took the elders of the city, and thorns of the wilderness, and briers, and with them he taught the men of Succoth.

17 And he beat down the tower of Penuel, and slew the men of the city.

18 ¶ Then said he unto Zebah and Zalmunna, What manner of men were they whom ye slew at Tabor? And they answered, As thou art, so were they; each one resembled the children of a king.

19 And he said, They were my brethren, even the sons of my mother: as the LORD liveth, if ye had saved them alive, I would not slay you.

20 And he said unto Jether his first-born, Up, and slay them: but the youth drew not his sword: for he feared, because he was yet a youth.

21 Then Zebah and Zalmunna said, Rise thou, and fall upon us: for as the man is, so is his strength. And Gideon arose, and slew Zebah and Zalmunna, and took away the ornaments that were on their camels' necks.

V. 10. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 14-16. By this young man's information, (who seems to have written down the names of the principal persons in Succoth, or of those chiefly concerned, Marg.) Gideon was enabled to distinguish betwixt the guilty and the innocent, and so to inflict punishment upon the offenders only.

V. 18, 19. In the troubles of Israel, these kings of Midian had slain the brethren of Gideon by the mother's side; and therefore he determined on this occasion to act as "the avenger of blood." As they were not of the devoted nations of Canaan, he might otherwise have spared them, and he declared that he would.—It seems that Gideon, though little in his own eyes, was a man of a very majestic appearance, and that his brethren greatly resembled him. (Note, vi. 15.) Perhaps this excited the jealousy of these kings against them, who slew them for their own security, though it eventually proved their ruin.

V. 20, 21. Gideon desired to inure his son to execute vengeance on the enemies of God and Israel; (Note, Josh. x. 24;) but the youth was timorous, and declined the service; and the kings themselves intreated that they might be slain (if they must die) by the hand of Gideon, who, being in his full strength, and of great reputation, was more fit for such a service; for their death would be ignominious and lingering, if a feeble timid youth were their executioner.—The ornaments from the camels' necks, being in the shape of the moon, had probably been used for idolatrous purposes. (Marg.)

V. 22, 23. Gideon was willing to fight for his people, to administer justice, and reform religion, as the Lord's deputy, and so long as he pleased; but, he would not accept of the perpetual government, or the hereditary succession to his children. Let JEHOVAH the King of Israel appoint whom he pleased. (Notes, ix. 1-6. Deut. xvii. 15. 1 Sam. viii. 6-9. 19-22.)

22 ¶ Then the men of Israel said unto Gideon, Rule thou over us, both thou, and thy son, and thy son's son also: for thou hast delivered us from the hand of Midian.

23 And Gideon said unto them, I will not rule over you, neither shall my son rule over you; the LORD shall rule over you.

24 And Gideon said unto them, I would desire a request of you, that ye would give me every man the ear-rings of his prey: (for they had golden ear-rings, because they were Ishmaelites.)

25 And they answered, We will willingly give them. And they spread a garment, and did cast therein every man the ear-rings of his prey.

26 And the weight of the golden ear-rings that he requested was a thousand and seven hundred shekels of gold, beside ornaments, and collars, and purple raiment that was on the kings of Midian, and beside the chains that were about their camels' necks.

27 And Gideon made an ephod thereof, and put it in his city, even in Ophrah: and all Israel went thither a whoring after it: which thing became a snare unto Gideon, and to his house.

28 ¶ Thus was Midian subdued before the children of Israel, so that they lifted up their heads no more: and the country was in quietness forty years in the days of Gideon.

29 ¶ And Jerubbaal the son of Joash went and dwelt in his own house.

30 And Gideon had threescore and ten sons of his body begotten: for he had many wives.

31 And his concubine that was in Shechem, she also bare him a son, whose name he called Abimelech.

32 ¶ And Gideon the son of Joash died in a good old age, and was buried in the sepulchre of Joash his father, in Ophrah of the Abiezrites.

33 And it came to pass, as soon as Gideon was dead, that the children of Israel turned again, and went a whoring after Baalim, and made Baal-berith their god.

34 And the children of Israel remembered not the LORD their God, who had delivered them out of the hands of all their enemies on every side:

35 Neither shewed they kindness to the house of Jerubbaal, namely, Gideon, according to all the goodness which he had shewed unto Israel.

V. 24-26. (Note, Num. xxxi. 48-54.)—Ishmaelites. (Note, Gen. xxxvii. 25.)

V. 27. This "ephod" seems to have been a very rich garment, like that worn by the high priest; and some think that Gideon also made "a breast-plate of judgment," in order to enquire of God by it; (Notes, Ex. xxviii. 6-30;) nay, that other things requisite were added, and sacrifices offered at Ophrah; else it is difficult to discover how so much treasure could have been expended. Gideon had been commanded, in an extraordinary manner, to offer a sacrifice in the place where the Lord appeared to him; (Note, vi. 25, 26;) and it is not improbable he might be led to conclude, that this authorized him to officiate as priest occasionally at his own house, without going to the tabernacle; and perhaps this gratified the people's humour and love of ease. (Notes, xviii. 30, 31. 1 Kings, xii. 26-31.) But, whether this was the case, or whether he merely intended to form a memorial of his victory; his conduct was evidently improper, and proved a snare to him, the cause of his family's ruin, and an occasion of idolatry to Israel after his death. (Notes, 33. ix. 1-21.)

V. 33. After the death of Gideon, the people proceeded, from an irregular worship, to renounce JEHOVAH entirely, and to worship Baal as their God, under the name of "Baal-berith," or the lord of the covenant, having, as it seems, generally covenanted to be his people.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-17. It is one vanity incident to human affairs, that "for every right work a man is envied by his neighbour."—They who will not attempt or venture anything in the cause of God, are commonly the most ready to censure such as are of a more zealous and enterprising spirit: the charge of pride and ambition will be brought against the most unexceptionable undertakings. (Notes, 1 Sam. xvii. 28, 29:) when calumny is silenced in one respect by the event, it will assume another form; and they who were most reluctant to the peril and hardship of difficult services, will be the most exasperated if excluded from the credit of them. But, "only by pride cometh contention;" it is the wisdom of Christians to turn away wrath by a soft answer; and their most noble victory is the conquest of their own spirits. In those things which pertain to the truth, authority, and glory of God, they should be unmoved as the sturdy oak; but, in the little concerns of their own interest or reputation, they should resemble the pliant willow, that yields to every gust. If, by throwing a shade over what the Lord has done by them, and making honourable mention of what he has done by others; if, by giving obliging language in return for rough words, and commendations in lieu of bitter chidings, envy may be avoided, anger abated, and contention prevented; the common cause will be more advantaged than by the most successful controversy, which always takes Christians off from their spiritual warfare.—The active servants of God frequently meet with more dangerous opposition from degenerate professors than from open enemies; but they must not regard the unreasonable behaviour of those who are Israelites in name, but Midianites in heart, or who vainly wish to observe a neutrality. Through manifold tribulations they must carry on their warfare, though ready to faint through inward conflicts and outward hardships. And they shall be enabled thus to persevere; for the less men help them, and the more they hinder them, the more effectually will they be helped and prospered by God himself.—It behoves magistrates to distinguish betwixt the guilty and the innocent, and to punish those who injure their brethren; yet this should be done with temper, and in order to teach them to behave better in future.—Ministers also must warn and severely rebuke such as discourage the hearts of their fellow-servants; and the Lord himself will execute vengeance upon all who oppose his people in obeying his commands. In the mean time we must "defer our anger," and go on with our work, not attempting to avenge ourselves. (Note, Prov. xix. 11.)

V. 18-35. Whatever earthly object men glory in, it will be torn from them: and sinners are never so exposed to danger, as when they deem themselves most secure. Sins long forgotten must be accounted for to God; and sinful methods of self-preservation only hasten and aggravate the transgressors' destruction; especially when innocent blood hath been shed.—The execution of atrocious criminals is, in some circumstances an honourable service; yet, we may well be thankful, if employed in saving men's lives rather than in destroying them. What a miserable consolation in death is derived from the hope of suffering less pain, and dying with less disgrace, than some others! yet, many are more anxious on these accounts, than concerning the future judgment and its eternal consequences!—No honour should be sought, or so much as accepted, but that which cometh from God, and consisteth with his sole authority and glory: nor is it allowable to seek for our children those things, which we may not desire for ourselves.—Whatever deputies are employed, and whoever hath the external precedence in the church; God is the only real Judge, Defender, and Ruler of his people.—How soon will those ornaments, which feed the lust of the eye, and form the pride of life, as well as the indulgences of the flesh, become the shame of those who loved them!—The characters of mere men have generally a sad and wonderful mixture; nor may we follow them farther than they follow Christ.—Things sanctioned by venerable names, and clothed with fair pretences, are often found, by the light of God's word, to be vile abominations; and are proved by experience to be dangerous and fatal snares, to those especially who over-venerate their fellow-creatures. Small deviations from our rule afford a dangerous precedent, and open the way for more flagrant enormities; and even in marriage, when once the original institution is disregarded, the sensual heart of man, like an humoured child, will bear no contradiction, and be confined by no limitations. But, as we all need so much mercy from our God, we should learn the more patiently to bear the ingratitude of our fellow-sinners, and the unsuitable returns we meet with for our poor services; and to resolve, after the divine example, "not to be overcome of evil, but to overcome evil with good."

Abimelech hired ^kvain and light persons, which followed him.

5 And he went unto his father's house ^lat Ophrah, and ^mslew his brethren, the sons of Jerubbaal, being threescore and ten persons, upon one stone: notwithstanding yet Jotham the youngest son of Jerubbaal was left; for he hid himself.

6 And all the men of Shechem gathered together, and all the ⁿhouse of Millo, and went and made Abimelech king, by the ^oplain of the pillar that was in Shechem.

7 ¶ And when they told ^pit to Jotham, he went and stood in the top of ^qmount Gerizim, and lifted up his voice, and cried, and said unto them, ^rHearken unto me, ye men of Shechem, that God may hearken unto you.

8 ^sThe trees went forth on a time to anoint a king over them; and they said unto the olive-tree, ^tReign thou over us.

9 But the olive-tree said unto them, Should I leave my fatness, ^uwherewith by me they honour God and man, and go ^vto be promoted over the trees?

NOTES.

CHAP. IX. V. 1-3. Gideon and his family had misled the people, through the ephod at Ophrah; and the people grievously offended in joining themselves to Baal-berith. (Notes, viii. 27. 33.) And the Lord manifested his displeasure, not by delivering them up to foreign invaders, but, by giving them up to their own vile passions.—Gideon had refused the proffered kingdom for himself and his sons: (Note, viii. 22, 23:) yet, Abimelech's name, which signifies my father the king, may be supposed to have been given him by his mother, from ambitious motives. The concubines, whose children did not inherit, would naturally set up an interest opposite to the rest of the family; and as Abimelech's mother was a native of Shechem, a principal city of Ephraim, he conceived the idea of obtaining the kingdom by her means. In order to succeed in this project, he accused his brethren of intending to seize upon the government, and possess it with joint authority: and, assuming this as an undoubted fact, he pleaded that it would be better to be governed by one prince, than by so many petty tyrants; and that if they, who were so nearly related to him, would raise him to the throne, he would be peculiarly attentive to their interests. In this manner, by the help of his mother's relations, he acquired the government, without either merit or capacity for such an important situation; and in direct opposition to the method of Providence, in raising up rulers of his people, from time to time, as he saw good.

V. 4-6. The Israelites seem to have presented this money as an oblation to their new god; and the men of Shechem borrowed it of him to supply their upstart king! It does not appear of what value these pieces of silver were; but probably of more value than shekels: and they sufficed for Abimelech's present purpose. Thus he became a pensioner of Baal, and seemed engaged to employ his authority to promote his worship; as if determined to shew himself as unlike as possible to his father, who had destroyed the altar and worship of Baal. (Notes, vi. 25-32.)—With this supply he hired a set of unprincipled men, fit for any villany; and with their assistance barbarously murdered all the numerous family of Gideon, except one son who escaped him: by such infamous measures and persons, was this base-born, but baser spirited, man made king in Israel! being the first who expressly bore that title among the descendants of Jacob. (Notes, 2 Sam. xv. 1-11. xvi. 20-23.)

V. 7. Mount Gerizim lay near to Shechem: and from it Jotham spake to the Shechemites, (who are supposed to have been assembled on some public occasion,) so that at least many of them would hear him, and report what he said to the rest. (Notes, Deut. xxvii. 12, 13.) He solemnly called on them "to hearken to him, that God might hearken unto them:" for if they did not repent of their ungrateful treatment of his father's family, and desist from their malicious intentions against him; they could not expect that God would hear their cry, when anguish and distress came upon them. (Notes, Prov. xxi. 13. Is. i. 10-15. lviii. 8-12. Mic. iii. 1-4.)

V. 8-15. A parable, or fable, is a descriptive picture, which shews the similitude of an event, or action, in lively colours; and conveys to the mind the perception of some important truth, to which it was previously inattentive, or against which it was prejudiced. By this management those things are placed in a proper light, which before were misapprehended, and those made evident which before seemed doubtful; the subject is stripped of such circumstances as do not properly belong to it; the trouble of a long chain of arguments being spared, the cause is brought to a compendious decision; reason and conscience are induced to pass sentence, before self-love is consulted; and a man is for a moment, as it were, imposed on, in order to his being profitably undeceived; he is made judge in his own cause before he is aware, and decides against himself without ever intending it. (Note, 2 Sam. xii. 1-6.) The truth of a parable lies in the instruction contained in it: and the feigned circumstances, being known to be such, are no ways inconsistent with veracity, but greatly subserve the cause of truth; conveying it in an unsuspected and agreeable manner to the mind. Parables or fables have therefore been much used by wise men in all ages, as the most advantageous method of teaching mankind the salutary lessons of justice and prudence; and they were abundantly sanctioned by our Lord's own example.—In this parable of Jotham, the folly

10 And the trees said to the fig-tree, Come thou, and reign over us.

11 But the fig-tree said unto them, 'Should I forsake my sweetness, and my good fruit, and go to be promoted over the trees?

12 Then said the trees unto the vine, Come thou, and reign over us.

13 And the vine said unto them, Should I leave my wine, which 'cheereth God and man, and go to be promoted over the trees?

14 Then said all the trees unto the "bramble, Come thou, and reign over us.

15 And the bramble said unto the trees, If in truth ye anoint me king over you, then come and put your trust in my "shadow; and if not, 'let fire come out of the bramble, and devour 'the cedars of Lebanon.

16 Now therefore, if ye have have done truly and sincerely, in that ye have made Abimelech king, and if ye have dealt well with Jerubbaal and his house, and have done unto him 'according to the deserving of his hands:

17 (For my father 'fought for you, and 'adventured his life far, and delivered you out of the hand of Midian;

18 And ye 'are risen up against my father's house this day, and have slain his sons, threescore and ten persons, upon one stone, and have made 'Abimelech, the son of his maid-servant, king over the men of Shechem, because he is your brother:)

19 If ye then have dealt truly and sincerely with Jerubbaal and with his house this day, then 'rejoice ye in Abimelech, and let him also rejoice in you;

20 But if not, 'let fire come out from Abimelech, and devour the men of Shechem, and the house of Millo: and let fire come out from the men of Shechem, and from the house of Millo, and devour Abimelech.

21 And Jotham ran away, and fled, and went to 'Beer, and dwelt there, for fear of Abimelech his brother.

22 ¶ When Abimelech had reigned three years over Israel,

23 Then 'God sent an evil spirit between Abimelech and the men of Shechem; and the men of Shechem 'dealt treacherously with Abimelech:

24 'That the cruelty done to the threescore and ten sons of Jerubbaal might come, and their blood be laid upon Abimelech their brother which slew them; and upon the men of Shechem which 'aided him in the killing of his brethren.

25 And the men of Shechem set 'liers in wait for him in the top of the mountains, and they robbed all that came along that way by them: and it was told Abimelech.

26 And Gaal the son of Ebed came with his 'brethren, and went over to Shechem; and the men of Shechem put their confidence in him.

27 And they went out into the fields, and gathered their vineyards, and trode the grapes, and made 'merry, and went into 'the house of their god, and 'did eat and drink, and 'cursed Abimelech.

28 And Gaal the son of Ebed said, 'Who is Abimelech, and who is Shechem, that we should serve him? is not he the son of Jerubbaal? and Zebul his officer? Serve the men of 'Hamor the father of Shechem: for why should we serve him?

29 And 'would to God this people were under my hand: then would I remove Abimelech. And he said to Abimelech, 'Increase thine army, and come out.

30 ¶ And when Zebul, the ruler of the city, heard the words of Gaal the son of Ebed, his anger was 'kindled.

31 And he sent messengers unto Abimelech 'privily, saying, Behold, Gaal the son of Ebed, and his brethren, be come to Shechem; and, behold, they fortify the city against thee.

32 Now therefore up 'by night, thou and the people that is with thee, and lie in wait in the field:

33 And it shall be, that in the morning, as soon as the sun is up, thou shalt rise early, and set upon the city: and, behold, when he and the people that is with him come out against thee, then mayest thou do to them 'as thou shalt find occasion.

34 ¶ And Abimelech rose up, and all the people that were with him, by night, and they laid wait against Shechem in four companies.

35 And Gaal the son of Ebed went out, and stood in the entering of the gate of the city: and Abimelech rose up, and 'the people that were with him, from lying in wait.

and ingratitude of the Shechemites, in making the basest of Gideon's sons their king, and in murdering the rest; the presumption and arrogance of Abimelech in aspiring to such an honour; and the consequences of so unreasonable a procedure, are represented with great ingenuity and simplicity. The olive-tree, the fig-tree, and the vine, had excellency and usefulness, if the trees had indeed wanted a king: thus Gideon and his other sons were worthy of Israel's suffrage, if there had been any occasion to set a king over them; yet they had humbly and wisely declined the offer. But Abimelech, the son of a slave and a concubine, a mean and worthless person, useless and troublesome as a bramble, had by insinuation induced them to offer him the kingdom, and had without hesitation accepted it. He had also foolishly promised them vast advantages from his protection, and terrible consequences from offending him: though indeed he was fit for nothing but to be a fire-brand, to set them all at variance, to their common destruction, as the bramble, being set on fire, may communicate the flame to the loftiest cedars, and consume them along with itself in one common conflagration.—The oil, from the olive-tree, was the chief ingredient in the ointment, with which the priests were anointed; it was used for the lamps in the sanctuary; and it formed a part of the meat-offering, by which God was honoured. The wine was used in drink-offerings, which were acceptable to God when properly presented. These trees better represented what a king ought to be, than the stately cedars; for piety to God, and usefulness to man, are more essential to the character of a good prince, than external pomp and majesty.—It is observable that long before Israel had a king by the appointment of God, anointing is spoken of as a customary ceremony of inauguration!—This is the most ancient fable or parable extant; and is very apposite and beautiful.

V. 16—20. (Notes, 1—6. vii. viii.)—Millo, or fulness, seems to have been the name of the senate-house, or town-hall; and, by the house of Millo, are meant all the chief persons of Shechem, who had combined to make Abimelech king, (6;) and they were also intended, by the cedars which the fire from the bramble would devour, (15.)

V. 22—24. Abimelech was first made king over the men of Shechem; but he seems to have been tamely submitted to by the Israelites in general—at least, they allowed him to retain that title, till it pleased God to permit an evil spirit to sow contention betwixt him and the Shechemites, by stirring up the vile passions of their hearts, that they might execute his vengeance on each other. (Notes, 1 Sam. xviii. 10, 11. 2 Kings xxii. 19—23. 2 Thes. ii. 8—12.)

V. 25. The Shechemites, being enraged against Abimelech, who was absent from the city, and expected back again, employed assassins to meet and kill him; and they, while waiting for him, robbed the travellers, and thus helped to increase the misery of the people. (Note, v. 6, 7.)

V. 26—29. "Ebed," signifies a slave. Gaal's father seems to have been a slave sprung from the race of the Canaanites, who falsely boasted his descent from Hamor, the father of Shechem, after whom the city was called; (Marg. Ref.) yet the inhabitants basely made Gaal the head of their conspiracy against Abimelech! Under this imagined protector, they ventured out into the field to gather in their harvest and vintage, and then kept a feast to the honour of Baal-berith, and, in their revellings, cursed Abimelech in his name; (Notes, Ec. xxxii. 1. Hos. ii. 8, 9;) thus cleaving to the idol, while they rejected the usurper! On this occasion, Gaal, heated perhaps with wine, strongly expressed his disdain that Abimelech should reign over him, or the ancient city of Shechem. He reviled him as the son of Jerubbaal, who had destroyed the worship of Baal; and so it could not be right that Baal's worshippers should submit to him. (Note, 1 Sam. xvii. 42—44.) He also spoke contemptuously of Zebul, who had been left governor of the city. He invited them to restore the authority, in his person, to the descendants of Hamor; promised what great things he would do against Abimelech, and challenged him, as if present, to decide the contest by a battle. The expression translated, would to God! is only an earnest wish that it might be so. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 30—33. It is probable that Zebul was not present when Gaal delivered his vain-glorious speech; but he heard of it, and, being exasperated by his 36 And when Gaal saw the people, he said to Zebul, Behold, there come people down from the top of the mountains. And Zebul said unto him, Thou seest the shadow of the mountains as if they were men.

37 And Gaal spake again, and said, See, there come people down by the middle of the land, and another company come along by the plain of Meonenim.

38 Then said Zebul unto him, Where is now thy mouth, wherewith thou saidst, Who is Abimelech, that we should serve him? Is not this the people that thou hast despised? go out, I pray now, and fight with them.

39 And Gaal went out before the men of Shechem, and fought with Abimelech.

40 And Abimelech chased him, and he fled before him; and many were overthrown and wounded, even unto the entering of the gate.

41 And Abimelech dwelt at Arumah: and Zebul thrust out Gaal and his brethren, that they should not dwell in Shechem.

42 And it came to pass on the morrow, that the people went out into the field; and they told Abimelech.

43 And he took the people, and divided them into three companies, and laid wait in the field, and looked, and behold, the people were come forth out of the city; and he rose up against them, and smote them.

44 And Abimelech, and the company that was with him, rushed forward, and stood in the entering of the gate of the city; and the two other companies ran upon all the people that were in the fields, and slew them.

45 And Abimelech fought against the city all that day: and he took the city, and slew the people that was therein, and beat down the city, and sowed it with salt.

46 ¶ And when all the men of the tower of Shechem heard that, they entered into an hold of the house of the god Berith.

47 And it was told Abimelech, that all the men of the tower of Shechem were gathered together.

48 And Abimelech gat him up to mount Zalmon, he and all the people that were with him; and Abimelech took an axe in his hand, and cut down a bough from the trees, and took it, and laid it on his shoulder, and said unto the people that were with him, What ye have seen me do, make haste, and do as I have done.

49 And all the people likewise cut down every man his bough, and followed Abimelech, and put them to the hold, and set the hold on fire upon them: so that all the men of the tower of Shechem died also, about a thousand men and women.

50 ¶ Then went Abimelech to Thebez, and encamped against Thebez, and took it.

51 But there was a strong tower within the city, and thither fled all the men and women, and all they of the city, and shut it to them, and gat them up to the top of the tower.

52 And Abimelech came unto the tower, and fought against it, and went hard unto the door of the tower to burn it with fire.

53 And a certain woman cast a piece of a millstone upon Abimelech's head, and all to break his skull.

54 Then he called hastily unto the young man his armour-bearer, and said unto him, Draw thy sword, and slay me, that men say not of me, A woman slew him. And his young man thrust him through, and he died.

55 And when the men of Israel saw that Abimelech was dead, they departed every man unto his place.

56 ¶ Thus God rendered the wickedness of Abimelech which he did unto his father, in slaying his seventy brethren.

57 And all the evil of the men of Shechem did God render upon their heads: and upon them came the curse of Jotham the son of Jerubbaal.

insulting language, he shewed Abimelech his danger, and counselled him to come without delay and surprise his enemies.

V. 36. Seest. Zebul, who had not yet declared against Gaal, spake this, either in derision, or to carry on the deception till Abimelech should surprise his party unawares.

V. 38—45. (Notes, 2 Kings xiv. 8—14.) As Gaal's conduct and success had not answered the people's expectations, they seem to have been willing to be rid of him, and his company; and, on the morrow, they went forth either to fight with Abimelech, or, (supposing him to have retired,) about their business in the fields; but he, being instigated by revenge, by means of ambushments, smote them, seized the city, slew the inhabitants, and having reduced the place to ruins, he sowed it with salt, as expressing his hope that the desolations would be perpetual. (Marg. Ref.) We are not informed what became of Zebul.

V. 46—49. The inhabitants of a place not connected with the city, called the tower of Shechem, took refuge in the temple of Baal-berith, hoping that Abimelech would respect the sacredness of the place; but, in deep revenge, he contrived to burn the temple, and the whole company of them. (Notes, 2 Kings xix. 36, 37.) Gal. v. 13—15.)

V. 50—57. Thebez is supposed to have been a city which confederated against Abimelech, and to which, perhaps, some Shechemites had fled; but this blood-thirsty tyrant, having taken the city, thought to burn the inhabitants with the tower, as he had done at Shechem! Thus he exactly answered the character of the bramble, which may set fire to that which is nobler and better than itself. (Marg. Ref.) But his measure of iniquity was accomplished; he had been the executioner of the Divine vengeance upon others, and he must now himself endure it. (Is. x. 12. Note, Jer. xxv. 12.) In his rage, therefore, coming too near the tower, he was mortally wounded by a piece of mill-stone from the hand of a woman; and understanding this circumstance, in a vain attempt to avoid the disgrace of such a death, he ordered his armour-bearer to slay him, who obeyed his command. (Note, 1 Sam. xxxi. 3—5.) Thus the world and Israel were rid of a vile murderer, usurper, and tyrant, who came in with subtlety, ruled in cruelty, and died in infamy. In the midst of these bloody transactions, the justice of God, in punishing both Abimelech and the Shechemites, is noticed by the sacred writer, in which the application made by Jotham of his parable, was most wonderfully verified.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—21. If parents could foresee their children's sufferings, their joy in them would be often turned into lamentations; we may, therefore, be thankful that we cannot penetrate futurity, and are reminded to commit those whom we most love into the hands of the Lord, and to attend to our present duty, casting our care upon him respecting ourselves and them. We should also be willing to leave this world when he pleases; for if we should live, we may behold such afflictions as would distress our hearts. Above all, we ought to fear and watch against sin; for our misconduct may very probably produce the most fatal effects on our families, and on society, even after we are laid in the grave. No Divine judgment is more terrible to individuals than being given up to their own lusts; (Note, Rom. i. 24—27;) and none more dreadful to communities than to be governed by wicked princes. (Note, Prov. xxviii. 2.) Able upright men, who know the duties and difficulties of exalted stations, are diffident of themselves, and reluctant to quit the security, sweetness, and usefulness of private life, for the toils and dangers of pre-eminence. But men of sordid and selfish minds, destitute of the fear of God and benevolence to man, are often capable of a vast and daring ambition, and can form crafty projects to accomplish their designs. By insinuation, they draw over such persons to their interests as are of their own temper and character; and as they do not hesitate at the commission of the most horrid crimes, they will often, for a season, seem to prosper in their wickedness. Slanders, flatteries, bribery, perjuries—nay, even murders of the most atrocious kind, are the weapons which they use, as occasion requires, and as ambition or suspicion suggests. Their nearest relatives are not safe, if they stand in their way; the foundations of all government, civil and ecclesiastical, must be subverted for them, and distractions and public troubles are the element in which they delight. Such Abimelechs every age produces; and it is surprising how they impose upon thousands to concur in their base designs. But when men are avowed infidels, profligates, and debauchees, what can be expected from them, unless restrained by human laws? Indeed, their wickedness is equalled by the folly of those who trust power into their hands. Yet, by such scourges of the human race, and such infatuated counsels, the righteous God chastises his offending people, and executes vengeance on his enemies; and he will preserve in the most imminent dangers, those whom he intends to use for the good of others. He seldom proceeds to extremities against wicked men without giving them warning; and they who will not hearken to his call to repent, to the voice of the oppressed who demand justice, or to that of the afflicted who implore relief, will one day cry unto the Lord in extreme anguish, and he will not regard them. All the works of the creation, in their several ways, honour their Creator, and subserve the comfort and benefit of man, who is the more inexcusable in neglecting and rebelling against his bounteous Benefactor. In departing from God, men are necessitated to trust in creatures, which can only disappoint and ruin them: and one man of moderate talents may soon do more mischief than many very wise and excellent persons can do good, by the most persevering exertions.

V. 22-57. The wicked may flourish for a time, but they shall be rooted out at the last; in answer to the cries of the oppressed, God will give them up to their own mad passions; then suspicion, envy, and revenge will be kindled in them against each other; and the weapons with which they destroyed those who obstructed their iniquitous designs, will at length destroy themselves. The history of mankind, if stripped of the false colourings with which historians, orators, and poets have often exhibited the vilest actions, and impartially given by a pious writer, would appear very like this chapter. Here, as in a glass, we may see what man is, when left to himself, and instigated by Satan, and what we should have been, had that been our case. Hence we may learn thankfulness for being preserved from such enormities; for an obscure situation, by which we are less exposed to the danger of falling victims to the ambition and jealousy of others; and for the gospel of Jesus Christ, whose "kingdom is in righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." But it is most lamentable when such outrages are committed by professed Christians, and disgrace the religion of Jesus in the eyes of multitudes, who cannot, or will not, distinguish betwixt Christianity and those who have no more than the name of it. "Woe be to the world because of offences! and woe be to them by whom such offences come!" We may further note, that boasting generally terminates in disgrace; that dangers, despised at a distance, terrify the more when they approach; that the courage which wine inspires, is of short continuance; that a mean spirit and a proud heart harbour the most implacable resentment, whilst the truly generous and humble are slow to anger, and ready to forgive; that every sinful refuge accelerates or ensures destruction; that more ingenuity and diligence have hitherto been employed in destroying than in saving men's lives; that daring crimes are often punished in kind, and the cruelty of murderers is retorted on themselves by the meanest and least dreaded instruments; and that the most successful wickedness speedily ends in lasting misery and infamy. Vain and foolish is the concern, and worthless are the expedients, of dying sinners to preserve their reputation, when everlasting contempt is inevitably reserved for them in a future state! God will likewise record their crimes and punishments in this world, notwithstanding all their endeavours to the contrary, as far as it is necessary for the instruction of others, and for his own glory; and how can they expect fidelity or mercy from men, who have been traitors to God, and cruel deceivers of their brethren? But, how strong must be man's propensity to wickedness, when such general and horrible idolatry and unrighteousness prevailed even in Israel, after all the Lord had done for them, and notwithstanding all the advantages which they enjoyed! "Lord, thou hast given us thy word of truth

10 ¶ And the children of Israel ^acried unto the LORD, saying, We have sinned against thee, both because we have forsaken our God, and also served Baalim.

11 And the LORD said unto the children of Israel, ^aDid not I deliver you from ^athe Egyptians, and from ^athe Amorites, from ^athe children of Ammon, and from ^athe Philistines?

12 ^aThe Zidonians also, and ^athe Amalekites, and ^athe Maonites did oppress you; and ye cried to me, and I delivered you out of their hand.

13 ^aYet ye have forsaken me, and served other gods: wherefore I will deliver you no more.

14 Go and ^acry unto the gods which ye have chosen: let them deliver you in the time of your tribulation.

16 And ^athey put away the ^astrange gods from among them, and served the LORD: and ^ahis soul was ^agrieved for the misery of Israel.

18 And the people and princes of Gilead said one to another, ^aWhat man is he that will begin to fight against the children of Ammon? ^ahe shall be head over all the inhabitants of Gilead.

NOTES.

CHAP. X. V. 1, 2. After the death of the usurper, the Lord raised up Tola to judge Israel. We do not find that he waged any war, but he restored peace, and the regular administration of justice, after the late distractions, and he reformed the state of religion; and thus he was as great a blessing as those judges who performed more memorable exploits. His name signifies a worm; and he was no worse fitted for being the Lord's instrument for good to his people, if his opinion of himself accorded to so humble a name. Though of the tribe of Issachar, he came to live in mount Ephraim, probably that he might be in the centre of Israel, and near the tabernacle. (Notes, Josh. xviii. 1. xix. 40. 50.)

V. 3-5. The next judge was a descendant of Jair, the grandson of Manasseh. (Notes, Num. xxxii. 41. 1 Chr. ii. 22.) His numerous sons inherited some of the cities, which then fell to the lot of their ancestor, and assisted their father as magistrates, riding from place to place to administer justice. Some of these years, of which scarcely any thing is recorded, may be considered, as the best times of Israel under the judges. We must, however, take some of the eighteen years of Israel's apostasy from the latter part of Jair's government, during which the people seem gradually to have corrupted themselves, and fallen under oppression, and when Jair could no longer restrain them from idolatry, he was not able to defend them from their enemies. (8.)

V. 6-9. The Israelites, having cast off the worship of JEHOVAH, and multiplied their idols beyond the example of their ancestors, were delivered into the hands of the Philistines on the west, and the Ammonites on the east; who betwixt them crushed the people for a long time, but most terribly towards the close of eighteen years; for then the Ammonites invaded the country west of Jordan, and greatly distressed the inhabitants.—That year. (8.) 'The Ammonites vexed them in the east, while the Philistines vexed them in the west. The invasion began in the same year; but did not end at the same time. For the Ammonites domineered over them only eighteen years: but the Philistines forty.' (Bp. Patrick.) (Note, xiii. 1.)

V. 11, 12. Probably the Zidonians aided Jabin, king of Canaan. The Maonites might be a tribe of Arabians, which assisted Moab. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 13, 14. This is spoken after the manner of men; and shews most emphatically the deserving of Israel, the demands of divine justice, and the dreadful consequences of impenitence; but threatenings always imply a reserve of mercy for the penitent. (Note, Jer. ii. 26-30.)

V. 15, 16. The foregoing message was sent by a prophet, or was delivered by the high priest, when the congregation were assembled before the Lord: but the people with one consent submitted themselves to the justice of God; yet hoping in his mercy, they left themselves in his hands, craved deliverance from their enemies, and were earnest in reformation. This return to the worship of God seems to have been permanent: for we do not find that the people relapsed into idolatry, under the subsequent judges. And compassion as effectually moved the Lord to relieve them, as a man is urged to assist a

CHAP. XI.

Jephthah, the base-born son of Gilead, thrust out by his brethren, is chosen commander against the Ammonites, 1—11. He sends an embassy to their king, but in vain, 12—28. His rash vow, 29—31. He conquers the Ammonites, 32, 33. He is met by his only daughter, and is deeply distressed; she piously submits, and he performs his vow, 34—40.

NOW Jephthah the Gileadite was ^aa mighty man of valour, and he ^bwas the son of ^can harlot: and Gilead begat Jephthah.

2 And Gilead's wife bare him sons: and his wife's sons grew up, and they ^dthrust out Jephthah, and said unto him, Thou shalt not inherit in our father's house; for thou art the son of ^ea strange woman.

3 Then Jephthah fled from ^fhis brethren, and dwelt in the land of ^gTob: and there were gathered ^hvain men to Jephthah, and went out with him.

4 ¶ And it came to pass ⁱin process of time, that the children of Ammon made war against Israel.

5 And it was so, that when the children of Ammon ^jmade war against Israel, the elders of Gilead went ^kto fetch Jephthah out of the land of Tob:

6 And they said unto Jephthah, Come and be our captain, that we may fight with the children of Ammon.

7 And Jephthah said unto the elders of Gilead, Did not ye hate me, and expel me out of my father's house? and why are ye come unto me now when ye are in distress?

8 And ^lthe elders of Gilead said unto Jephthah, wretched fellow-creature, when he cannot otherwise help sharing his distress: or as a father is disposed to assist his suffering child. (Note, Jer. xxiii. 18—20.)

V. 17, 18. Some think, that the penitent Israelites recovering their courage, the Ammonites had retired beyond Jordan to Gilead: but it is more probable that they were collected in this place, in order to a new invasion of the country west of Jordan. The inhabitants, however, of the country east of Jordan convened at Mizpeh, with a determination to oppose them. God did not as usual expressly appoint them a deliverer; but he secretly directed, and openly confirmed, their choice of one for themselves.—Some indeed think that they consulted the Lord, and that he pointed out Jephthah. (1 Sam. xii. 11. Notes, xi. 1—11.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The removal of hardened sinners, by a righteous God, often makes way for reformation and public tranquillity, and proves a great mercy to those who survive.—Man's carnal heart is prone to prefer the bondage of sin and Satan to the service of God: but present indulgence ensures future misery; for every expectation and advantage from sin, the world, and the friendship of wicked men, must ensure a distressing disappointment.—God is able to multiply men's punishments, according to the number of their iniquities and idols: but there is hope, when under temporal afflictions, sinners cry unto the Lord for help, and lament their ungodliness, as well as more scandalous transgressions. Yet the Lord might justly leave those who have forsaken him to their wretched choice; he might unbraid them with former mercies and their base returns; he might send them to their beloved idols and lusts; he might mock at their calamity, and absolutely refuse to help them. (Note, Prov. i. 24—31.) This will be the dreadful condition of the wicked in another world; but here mercy can never be sought in vain; yet, for the deeper humiliation of those who are but superficially convinced, and to quicken those who are not duly in earnest; the Lord often seems to "shut up his lovingkindness in his displeasure," he upbraids them with their sins, pursues them with his awful threatenings, and almost brings them to conclude that their case is hopeless. He will, however, keep them from desperation: and when their prayers are rendered more fervent, their confessions more ingenuous, their self-examination more diligent, their submission to his justice and dependence on his mercy more entire, and their forsaking of sin more unreserved; it may be certainly concluded, that comfort and deliverance are at hand. Let then the trembling sinner, and the almost despairing backslider, cease from enquiring about God's secret purposes, or thinking to extract hope from former experiences: let them not indulge despondency, or yield to heartless indolence: let them cast themselves upon the mercy of God our Saviour; patiently submit to his severest chastisement; humble themselves more and more under his hand; seek deliverance on any terms from the dominion of sin, and from the powers of darkness; separate themselves as much as possible from all occasions of transgression; use all the means of grace diligently, and wait the Lord's time; and they shall certainly rejoice in his mercy. Finally, let all those "who think they stand, take heed lest they fall;" and may the Lord help us to "cleave to him with full purpose of heart."

NOTES.

CHAP. XI. V. 1, 2. Jephthah seems evidently to have been the son of "an harlot," (not a concubine, or secondary wife) of "a strange woman," either of an alien of bad character, or an Israelitess whose infamous conduct procured her that title. (Note, Prov. ii. 16.) So that his birth seemed, according to the law, to exclude him, "from the congregation of the Lord." (Note, Deut. xxiii. 2.)

Therefore 'we turn again to thee now, that thou mayest go with us, and fight against the children of Ammon, and be our head over all the inhabitants of Gilead.

9 And Jephthah said unto the elders of Gilead, "If ye bring me home again to fight against the children of Ammon, and the LORD deliver them before me, shall I be your head?"

10 And the elders of Gilead said unto Jephthah, "The LORD be ^awitness between us, 'if we do not so according to thy words.

11 Then Jephthah went with the elders of Gilead, and the people made him ^bhead and captain over them: and Jephthah ^cuttered all his words ^dbefore the LORD in Mizpeh.

12 ¶ And Jephthah ^esent messengers unto the king of the children of Ammon, saying, 'What hast thou to do with me, that thou art come against me to fight in my land?

13 And the king of the children of Ammon answered unto the messengers of Jephthah, "Because Israel took away my land when they came up out of Egypt, from Arnon even unto ^fJabbok, and unto Jordan: now therefore restore those ^glands again peaceably.

14 And Jephthah sent messengers ^hagain unto the king of the children of Ammon,

15 And said unto him, Thus saith Jephthah, 'Israel took not away the land of Moab, nor the land of the children of Ammon:

Gilead, the father of Jephthah, seems to have been a descendant of Gilead, the grandson of Manasseh.—Jephthah had no right to share with his brethren in the inheritance; but he had not deserved to be turned out destitute, as if he had been a vagabond, or a malefactor.

V. 3. A number of men of broken fortunes and unsettled dispositions joined themselves to Jephthah: it does not appear, however, that they attempted any thing against their own countrymen, but rather that they made reprisals on those nations who oppressed them. In this course of life they learned hardness, boldness, and military skill; and thus Jephthah acquired that reputation which made way for his advancement, as commander in the war against Ammon.—It is not improbable, that he also reformed his followers, and gave them some instructions in religion, as David, in similar circumstances, evidently did in respect of his adherents. (Notes, 1 Sam. xxii. 1, 2. xxiv. 4—7. xxv. 7, 8. xxx. 22—25.)

V. 4—6. Jephthah, at the head of his company, had before this, probably, "begun to fight against the Ammonites," by incursions and reprisals; and the elders of Gilead knowing him to be a man of approved courage and conduct, sent to offer him the chief command of their army. Perhaps they forgot the law before mentioned; or they supposed that in this emergency it might be dispensed with. Some indeed think they were directed by a divine admonition to send for him; at least the Lord confirmed their choice; perhaps, in order that they, who had rendered themselves vile by sin, might be rescued from their enemies by one who lay under a disgraceful stigma; and that he might be humbled by recollecting, that he was marked in the Divine law with the same brand as the Ammonites whom he conquered. (Notes, Deut. xxiii. 2—5.)

V. 7, 8. Either these elders of Gilead were Jephthah's brethren, or, they had concurred with them in driving him away, instead of defending him from their injustice; for he ascribed the ill-usage which he had met with, to their hatred; and they did not deny the charge, though urged as a reason why they ought not to apply to him in their distress. As he was of an enterprising spirit, they perhaps suspected him of ambitious designs. They now, however, felt their need of his talents, and pleaded that they desired to appoint him their captain, that they might make him amends for their former injustice. (Note, xi. 17, 18.)

V. 9—11. Jephthah had no great reason to confide in the elders of Gilead; and as he supposed, that if the Lord gave him the victory over Ammon, this would entitle him to the authority of judge over the tribes east of Jordan, he required the elders to engage, by a solemn oath, that they would submit to him, before he would accompany them to Mizpeh. And when he came thither, being about to enter on this important service, he "uttered all his words," or laid his transactions, before the LORD; seeking his direction, assistance, and blessing very particularly in fervent prayer, as one who would go forth in faith, and expected all his success from God. (Note, Heb. xi. 32—34.)—Some think, that the high priest, with the sacred breastplate, was come on this occasion to Mizpeh, and that Jephthah enquired of him.—Mizpeh here mentioned was east of Jordan, and was called Mizpeh of Gilead, (29.) in contradistinction from another place of the same name, which lay west of Jordan. (Josh. xv. 38.) There was also another city, of less note, called Mizpeh, if not two others of that name.

V. 12—23. Jephthah, now constituted ruler in Israel, sent to treat of peace with the Ammonites before he declared war against them. This accorded to the law of Moses, and was done, perhaps, by Divine direction. (Notes, Deut. xx. 10—18.) The whole of these messages shew that Jephthah had well

16 But when Israel came up from Egypt, and walked through the wilderness unto the Red sea, and came to Kadesh;

17 Then Israel sent messengers unto the king of Edom, saying, Let me, I pray thee, pass through thy land: but the king of Edom would not hearken thereto. And in like manner they sent unto the king of Moab; but he would not consent: and Israel abode in Kadesh.

18 Then they went along through the wilderness, and compassed the land of Edom, and the land of Moab, and came by the east side of the land of Moab, and pitched on the other side of Arnon, but came not within the border of Moab; for Arnon was the border of Moab.

19 And Israel sent messengers unto Sihon king of the Amorites, the king of Heshbon; and Israel said unto him, Let us pass, we pray thee, through thy land into my place.

20 But Sihon trusted not Israel to pass through his coast: but Sihon gathered all his people together, and pitched in Jahaz, and fought against Israel.

21 And the LORD God of Israel delivered Sihon and all his people into the hand of Israel, and they smote them: so Israel possessed all the land of the Amorites, the inhabitants of that country.

22 And they possessed all the coasts of the Amorites, from Arnon even unto Jabbok, and from the wilderness even unto Jordan.

23 So now, the LORD God of Israel hath dispossessed the Amorites from before his people Israel, and shouldest thou possess it?

24 Wilt not thou possess that which Chemosh thy god giveth thee to possess? So whomsoever the LORD our God shall drive out from before us, them will we possess.

25 And now, art thou any thing better than Balak

the son of Zippor, king of Moab? did he ever strive against Israel, or did he ever fight against them, 26 While Israel dwelt in Heshbon and her towns, and in Aroer and her towns, and in all the cities that be along by the coasts of Arnon, three hundred years? why therefore did ye not recover them within that time?

27 Wherefore I have not sinned against thee, but thou doest me wrong to war against me: the LORD, the Judge, be judge this day between the children of Israel and the children of Ammon.

28 Howbeit, the king of the children of Ammon hearkened not unto the words of Jephthah which he sent him.

29 ¶ Then the Spirit of the LORD came upon Jephthah; and he passed over Gilead and Manasseh, and passed over Mizpeh of Gilead, and from Mizpeh of Gilead he passed over unto the children of Ammon.

30 And Jephthah vowed a vow unto the LORD, and said, If thou shalt without fail deliver the children of Ammon into mine hands.

31 Then it shall be, that whatsoever cometh forth of the doors of my house to meet me, when I return in peace from the children of Ammon, shall surely be the LORD's, and I will offer it up for a burnt-offering.

32 ¶ So Jephthah passed over unto the children of Ammon to fight against them: and the LORD delivered them into his hands.

33 And he smote them from Aroer, even till thou come to Minnith, even twenty cities, and unto the plain of the vineyards, with a very great slaughter. Thus the children of Ammon were subdued before the children of Israel.

34 ¶ And Jephthah came to Mizpeh unto his house, and, behold, his daughter came out to meet him with timbrels and with dances: and she was his only child: beside her he had neither son nor daughter.

studied the historical part of the books of Moses. His arguments, likewise, were very clear, and his demands reasonable; for he only required that the Ammonites should cease to harass a people, who neither had injured, nor intended to injure them. (Notes, Num. xx. 14—21. xxi. 21—35. Deut. ii. iii. 1—17.)—It is also evident that the books of Numbers and Deuteronomy were then extant in their present form.—Some of the country, at that time possessed by Israel, had once belonged to Ammon; but the Amorites had taken it from them: afterwards the Israelites had wrested it from the Amorites; and God, who gave the victory, expressly assigned to them the country of the vanquished for their inheritance.

V. 24. This did not imply, either that Chemosh was in reality a god, or that victory always gives a right to the possessions of the vanquished; but Jephthah argued with the king of Ammon on his own principles, the better to expose the injustice and unreasonableness of his conduct.

V. 25. Balak feared Israel, and plotted their destruction; but, he had never proceeded to assault them; nor did they ever give him any reason. (Notes, Num. xxii.—xxv.)

V. 26. It was absurd, at the end of three hundred years, to revive a claim which had been so long suffered to lie dormant.—Solomon begun to build the temple four hundred and eighty years after Israel left Egypt; (1 Kings vi. 1.) forty years were spent in the wilderness before the conquest of Sihon and Og; and Jephthah here speaks of three hundred years having elapsed to that time. So that (if he spake with exactness, and not of a round number,) these events happened one hundred and forty years before the building of Solomon's temple. Several computations have been made of the years under Joshua, the different judges, and king Saul, to accord with this general intimation; but none are very satisfactory. Obscurity rests on this part of sacred chronology, and probably will continue to do so. (Note, iii. 11.)

V. 27. In case the king of Ammon would not desist from his demand, the war would become just and necessary; and therefore Jephthah solemnly appealed to the Lord to judge betwixt Israel and the Ammonites, and to decide in favour of those who had the more righteous cause. Every declaration of war implies such an appeal; but it is seldom made upon such good grounds, and in the same spirit of humble faith. (Notes, 2 Sam. x. 8—14. 2 Chr. xiii. 4—22.)

V. 29. The Lord, by the communication of his Spirit, both confirmed the people's choice of Jephthah, and fitted him for the service he was called to. (Note, 9—11.)—Being thus stirred up, he went through the adjacent countries to levy soldiers, and then marched boldly to attack the enemy.

V. 30, 31. Perhaps Jephthah's army was small, and his or their courage ready to fail in the prospect of imminent danger; and therefore he joined a solemn vow to his earnest prayers; but the vow itself was evidently rash and improper. God himself had prescribed the animals which were to be offered in the different kinds of sacrifices: and there were likewise different kinds of vows, and particular regulations of them. (Notes, Lev. i. 1, 2. xxvii.) It was therefore exceedingly absurd to vow, that whatsoever first "came forth of the doors of his house, should be the LORD's, and be offered for a burnt-offering:" for the marginal reading, "or, I will offer it," &c.; on which much stress has been laid by some expositors, is by no means a natural construction. A dog or cat, or other unclean animal, might first have met him; but it was most probable that one of his family would, which indeed he seems to have expected. Not being so well acquainted with the preceptive part of the books of Moses, as with the historical, he confounded the several laws concerning sacrifices and vows; and especially, he seems to have had some confused idea of the law, and custom, of devoting persons or things to utter destruction; (Note, Lev. xxvii. 28, 29;) which being especially intended of the enemies of God, and things abused to idolatry, he erroneously applied to innocent persons and Israelites, over whose lives he could have no power, either in his public or private character: and he supposed that the execution of this vow was, by offering the person devoted for a burnt-offering. His judgment was not only erroneous, through ignorance of the Divine law; but it was also perverted by a too great familiarity with the customs of the surrounding idolaters; who, on such emergencies, frequently vowed and offered human sacrifices, supposing them acceptable to the Deity, in proportion to the pain which they occasioned to the offerers. (Notes, 2 Kings iii. 27. Mic. vi. 6—8.)

V. 34—40. The whole conduct of Jephthah's daughter shews, that she was an amiable, dutiful, and pious young woman, according to the instructions afforded her: and the tokens of deep distress, which Jephthah shewed, confirm the interpretation before intimated. (Note, 30, 31.) If he had understood the divine law, he would have known that his rash vow bound him to nothing but deep repentance; unless he had accompanied thank-offerings at Shiloh, with a sin-offering on this account.—But he deemed himself irrevocably engaged, and, after two months "he did with her according to his vow:" that is, as it appears evident to me, he offered her for a burnt-offering; perhaps induced by a misinterpretation of the command given to Abraham concerning his son Isaac. (Notes, Gen. xxii. 2. 10.) In this he acted conscientiously: but his conscience was erroneous; and his error arose from ignorance of the divine law, and too much acquaintance with heathen customs. Otherwise he would not have placed his amiable daughter, who came to congratulate his victory, with joyful songs of praise, among the devoted enemies of God; much less would he have offered so detestable a sacrifice, which was most expressly forbidden, as "an abomination to the LORD, which he hated." (Deut. xi. 31. Note, Lev. xx. 2.)—When Saul rashly brought his excellent son Jonathan under the curse of utter destruction, the people very properly rescued him; for the crime was Saul's,

CHAP. XII.

35 And it came to pass, when he saw her, that he rent his clothes, and said, Alas, my daughter, thou hast brought me very low, and thou art one of them that trouble me: for I have opened my mouth unto the LORD, and I cannot go back.

36 And she said unto him, My father, if thou hast opened thy mouth unto the LORD, do to me according to that which hath proceeded out of thy mouth; forasmuch as the LORD hath taken vengeance for thee of thine enemies, even of the children of Ammon.

37 And she said unto her father, Let this thing be done for me; Let me alone two months, that I may go up and down upon the mountains, and bewail my virginity, I and my fellows.

38 And he said, Go. And he sent her away for two months: and she went with her companions, and bewailed her virginity upon the mountains.

39 And it came to pass at the end of two months, that she returned unto her father, who did with her according to his vow which he had vowed: and she knew no man. And it was a custom in Israel, 40 That the daughters of Israel went yearly to lament the daughter of Jephthah the Gileadite, four days in a year.

The Ephraimites quarrel with Jephthah; are smitten by the Gileadites; and slain in vast numbers at the passage of Jordan, 1—6. Jephthah dies, 7. Ibzan, who had thirty sons and thirty daughters, judges Israel, 8—10: and after him Elon, 11, 12: and then Abdon, who had thirty sons and forty grandsons, 13—15.

AND the men of Ephraim gathered themselves together, and went northward, and said unto Jephthah, Wherefore passedst thou over to fight against the children of Ammon, and didst not call us to go with thee? we will burn thine house upon thee with fire.

2 And Jephthah said unto them, I and my people were at great strife with the children of Ammon; and when I called you, ye delivered me not out of their hands.

3 And when I saw that ye delivered me not, I put my life in my hands, and passed over against the children of Ammon, and the LORD delivered them into my hand: wherefore then are ye come up unto me this day, to fight against me?

4 Then Jephthah gathered together all the men of Gilead, and fought with Ephraim, and the men of Gilead smote Ephraim, because they said, Ye Gileadites are fugitives of Ephraim, among the Ephraimites, and among the Manassites.

not Jonathan's. (Notes, 1 Sam. xiv. 24—45.)—Indeed, many learned men have endeavoured to shew that Jephthah did not sacrifice his daughter, but that he shut her up in perpetual solitude and virginity: and they urge in favour of that opinion, that "she bewailed her virginity," not her death; and that "she knew no man:" and they suppose that the daughters of Israel went to condole with her four times in the year, and not to lament her death. But, it is not at all likely that it should become a custom, not only for her acquaintance, or the daughters of Gilead, but for those of all Israel, thus to flock to her four days in the year on such an account: and we never read of law, or custom, either in the Old Testament or the New, for any person to be thus devoted to the Lord by perpetual celibacy, or the least hint of the kind. On the contrary, marriage, and having children, were so honourable in all, that to die unmarried or childless was deemed disgraceful, as well as a misfortune; which seems to have occasioned the expressions above-mentioned. (Luke i. 25. Note, Gen. xxxviii. 14—16.) So pious a person, supposing her death to be for the glory of God, and the benefit of Israel, would not bewail on that account: but, according to the sentiment of all Israelitish women, she must naturally lament that she died unmarried and childless, especially as her father had no other child, or any prospect of posterity. Whereas, had she been shut up in perpetual solitude, as a single example of that kind, in the whole Scripture, and contrary to the whole tenour of it, she would not have needed to request two months to bewail her virginity, for she would have had all her remaining life to do it in.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—28. As the sins of parents so often occasion disgrace and hardship to their children; this should unite with higher motives to induce men to govern their passions according to the law of God.—Activity, capacity, prudence, and piety, will often render a man superior to the disadvantages of his birth; and the hardships of his youth prepare him for the services of future life.—We should not despise the meanest person; for we know not how soon we may supplicate his assistance. It is especially dangerous to injure the servants of God; and many who do so in prosperity, are glad to seek the benefit of their protection, counsel, and prayers, in seasons of terror and distress: (Notes, Is. lx. 10—14. Rev. iii. 9, 10:) and in all ages, they, whom God hath most honoured and employed, have previously been treated with contempt and injustice, even by those to whom they afterwards were most useful. None ought therefore to be discouraged or surprised by it; as they are only dealt with in the same manner as Joseph, Moses, Jephthah, and David; nay, in this especially, are made like to the Son of God, "who endured the contradiction of sinners against himself," before he was "exalted to be a Prince and a Saviour." Indeed, the Lord is continually thus treated: men neglect his service, despise his authority, and rob him of his glory; and yet in their distress they apply unto him for to save them! But, as he forgives without upbraiding the penitent sinner, so ought his people to behave to their enemies. It should be noted, however, that the Saviour himself will save none, who do not consent that he should "reign over them:" and his disciples, after his example, should seek to reform them, whose temporal distresses they relieve.—Those undertakings are likely to prosper, and those public situations to be well filled, respecting which the Lord is consulted and trusted in simple faith, prayer, and conscientious obedience.—They, who possess the greatest genuine courage, will be the most disposed for peace, and to concede and yield the most for the sake of it; and when rapacity and ambition, concealed under the mask of equity, (for though few men love justice, most would be thought to do so,) render such endeavours unavailing; having shewn that we would, "if possible, live peaceably with all men," we may safely leave the matter with the Lord; who, as Judge of all the earth, will award to those that delight in contention, public or private, a recompense meet for their turbulent dispositions and evil deeds.

V. 29—40. As far as we are acquainted with the word of God, we shall find a clear light shine upon our paths, discovering to us the safe and happy way: but, even when we act uprightly, if ignorant of the Scriptures, we shall fall into lamentable mistakes, to the dishonour of God and the great discomfort of our souls. This should incite us to a diligent study of the whole word of God, that we may be "complete in the knowledge of his will:" and it should remind ministers to be exact, copious, and frequent, in discussing practical subjects; that they, who are disposed to perform their duty, may not be left to sin through ignorance or mistake.—How checkered are the scenes of this mortal life! Sorrow treads upon the heels of mirth; and our choicest comforts, often through our own unwatchfulness, become the occasions of our severest trials; but we need the less wonder at this, when we observe, how defective the best characters are; and how the best actions are often connected with such as are utterly unwarrantable.—A cheerful mind, disposed to be grateful to God, and to endure any thing for his honour and out of love to his people, with a ready submission to parental authority, are such beautiful blossoms in young persons, and promise such fruit in ripper years, that we must regret to see them blasted by premature death; and lament that they, who have so well performed the inferior duties, are not spared to be useful in the more important relations of the married state. But, though their death is a loss to society, they are themselves no losers: for the preparation for an useful life will render death also comfortable, in whatever way they may be called hence.—In lawful vows, when we have "opened our mouth unto the LORD, we may not go back;" and on that account we should be very considerate in making vows, that we may not involve ourselves or others, in distress, perplexity, or temptation: but nothing can oblige us to that which is in itself unlawful. With this single exception, we cannot do too much to express our gratitude for mercies received, or part with too much for the glory of God.—Though we cannot approve of the conduct of Jephthah: we may well admire and imitate his resolution and self-denial: and still more those of his daughter.—Let us not then forget the love of the Father in giving his Son, or of the Son in giving himself, a real and acceptable sacrifice for the sins of rebellious man. Bought with such a price, let us present our bodies and souls as a living sacrifice unto God; and look forward with heartfelt satisfaction to that country, where ignorance, error, sin, and sorrow shall be known no more; where the believer's victory will be complete, his triumphs unalloyed and unsullied, and his hallelujahs uninterrupted and eternal.

NOTES.

CHAP. XII. V. 1—7. Jephthah was a Manassite, and the Ephraimites had the same pretence of quarrelling with him, as their ancestors had for chiding with Gideon; but their resentment vented itself in a more outrageous and abusive manner. We find nothing to blame in Jephthah's answer, but it was not so conciliating as that of Gideon had been. (Note, viii. 1—3. Marg. Ref.) The Ephraimites had, it seems, been sent to, and would not come to help their brethren, and their anger was therefore extremely unreasonable; but, instead of being satisfied with Jephthah's arguments, they proceeded to assault him: and they likewise irritated the Gileadites by abusive language, as if they had been the refuse of the descendants of Joseph, who had fled from justice, and settled beyond Jordan. (Note, Josh. xxii. 22—29.) For this is the most obvious construction of the passage; though some interpret it to mean, that, when the Gileadites had put the Ephraimites to flight, (who were assisted by some of Manasseh from the west of Jordan,) they reproached them as fugitives. The Gileadites, however, took a most severe revenge on them; for, getting possession of the fords of Jordan, they slew vast numbers of them; having artfully devised to distinguish them by their provincial pronunciation of the Hebrew word Shibboleth, which generally signifies a river, or stream of waters; though sometimes also used for an ear of corn. (Marg. Ref.) How far Jephthah concurred in this cruel revenge, cannot be determined; but it

CHAP. XIII.

Israel offends God, and is reduced to serve the Philistines forty years, 1. An angel appears to Manoah's wife, and promises her a son, who should be a perpetual Nazarite, 2-5. She informs her husband; who prays that the angel may again appear to instruct them, 6-9. The angel appears, and by his conduct, especially by ascending in the flame of Manoah's sacrifice, discovers who he is, 9-20. Manoah is greatly alarmed, as having seen God; but is encouraged by his wife, 21-23. Samson is born, and is moved by the Spirit of God, 24, 25.

AND the children of Israel ^{did} evil again in the sight of the LORD; and the LORD delivered them ^{into} the hand of the Philistines forty years.

2 ¶ And there was a certain man of ¹Zorah, of the family of the Danites, whose name was Manoah: and his wife was ^{barren}, and bare not.

3 And ^{the} angel of the LORD appeared unto the woman, and said unto her, Behold now, thou art barren, and bearest not: ^{but} thou shalt conceive, and bear a son.

4 Now therefore beware, I pray thee, and ^{drink} not wine nor strong drink, and ^{eat} not any unclean thing:

5 For, lo, thou shalt conceive, and bear a son; and ^{no} razor shall come on his head: for the child shall be a Nazarite unto God from the womb; and he shall ^{begin} to deliver Israel out of the hand of the Philistines.

6 ¶ Then the woman came, and told her husband, saying, ^A man of God came unto me, and his countenance was like the countenance of an angel of God, very ^{terrible}: but I asked him not whence he was, neither told he me ^{his} name.

7 But he said unto me, Behold, thou shalt conceive, and bear a son; and now drink no wine nor strong drink, neither eat any unclean thing: for the child shall be a Nazarite to God from the womb to the day of his death.

was entirely unjustifiable, and exceedingly weakened the common cause of Israel. (Notes, 2 Chr. xiii. 4-12. Prov. xvii. 14. Matt. xii. 25, 26.) It is wonderful, that the political importance of Ephraim was not ruined by this massacre. (Notes, Gen. xlix. 22-26. Deut. xxxiii. 17.) After this transaction, Israel quietly submitted to Jephthah as their judge; but he lived only a short time, and, probably, had little comfort in his advancement.

V. 9-15. "The mount of the Amalekites," (15.) seems to have derived its name from some victory gained over Amalek in that place by the Ephraimites. (Marg. Ref.) Many learned men suppose that these last four judges ruled over the eastern and northern parts of the country; and that Samson and Eli were contemporary with them, judging the southern and western parts of the country.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Whilst pride prevails, there must be discord and contention: (Note, Prov. xiii. 10;) and when insolence escapes chastisement, it often grows more abusive. But the haughty and quarrelsome will at length meet with those, who are as ready to revenge, as others have been to endure, their affronts.—Nothing is more foolish than scurrility: without any advantage, it rouses the most implacable resentment, and prepares the way for bloodshed. Thus "the tongue, that unruly evil, sets on fire the whole course of nature, and is set on fire of hell." But they, who are most ready to boast, hector, and revile, generally prove cowardly in real danger: and might have their own reproaches retorted upon them, but that Christians must not "render railing for railing."—In the origin, or the event, of dissension, all parties are commonly to blame: even good men cannot always bear with proper calmness the ingratitude and ill-treatment of those whom they have served; nor have all equally the talent of turning away wrath by a soft answer: and in a just cause we are apt to be hurried on by our passions to unwarrantable lengths; for "the beginning of strife is like the letting forth of water, therefore let us leave off contention before it be meddled with."—The splendour of men's exploits, and the excellency of their characters, often increase the number and rage of their enemies: nor need any man be surprised, if they who ought to thank, commend, and reward him; and to congratulate him on his success in dangerous attempts to promote the public welfare, should abuse and hate him, and threaten his destruction. No one is prepared to do good in such a world as this, who hath not learned to expect and accept evil, as his recompense from man: and to persevere in hope of a better recompense from a gracious God.—But no contentions are so bitter, as those which arise betwixt brethren, or betwixt rivals for honour and precedence. What need have we then to watch and pray against envy, pride, ambition, and those evil tempers, which set the world as it were in flames from age to age; and which by horrid carnage gratify that first great murderer, the devil!—Alas! that so many Shibboleths should be invented to divide the church also; to be the watchwords of angry disputants, and the pretext for professed disciples of Christ abusing and persecuting each other! May the Lord incline all his people "to follow after the things which make for peace, and things whereby one may edify another."—Many renowned and envied persons die of broken hearts, on account of personal and domestic afflictions: so that their inward anguish might soften their bitterest enemies into compassion, if they knew the whole.—The Lord is to be acknowledged, in giving all our comforts, as well as submitted to when he withholds or withdraws them: but increasing families bring increasing cares and duties, which cannot be neglected without guilt and painful consequences.—In fine, the happiest life of individuals, and the happiest state of society, is that which affords the fewest remarkable events. To live in credit and quiet, to be peacefully useful in our circle, to possess a clear conscience, to enjoy communion with God our Saviour whilst we live, and to die at peace with God and man, form the substance of all that a wise man can desire as to this world.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIII. V. 1. These forty years are supposed to have begun when Jair judged Israel; about the same time with the oppression of Gilead by the Ammonites. These had been subdued, but the Philistines still harassed the Israelites, till Samson was arrived at maturity, and began their deliverance. (Note, x. 6-9.)

V. 4, 5. The Nazarite's vow was voluntary, and for a limited time; and by the touch of a dead body it was broken, and the specified time must be begun over again. (Notes, Num. vi. 1-22.) But Samson was devoted, by the Lord's express appointment, all the days of his life; and it seems probable that this kind of separation was not so strict, as the voluntary vow. Notes, 1 Sam. i. 9-11. Luke i. 11-17.—The infant in the womb, and at the breast, subsists on the same nourishment with the mother; and therefore the mother of Samson was required to observe the same rules during that period. She would be led to expect something extraordinary, from a child whose birth was attended by such observances: but it was a great trial to the faith and patience of all concerned to be informed, that even the beginning of a deliverance from their oppressors must be so long waited for.—It is probable, that Samson was born about the time when the Philistines began to afflict Israel, as he did not live to complete their deliverance. (Note, 1.)—It seems, that the law, concerning distinction of meats, was not strictly observed at this time, or Manoah's wife would not have needed a caution to eat no unclean thing.

V. 6. A man of God. (Marg. Ref.) This supposed "man of God," or holy prophet, is said to have been like an angel; by which it is evident that angels, as they actually appeared to the people of God, were not distinguishable in general from prophets, except by a more venerable or majestic appearance: though in the emblematic description of them, in some parts of Scripture, they are represented with wings.

V. 8. Manoah doubted not the performance of the promise, which had been made to his wife in his absence; but only prayed that the same supposed prophet might be sent to instruct them in their duty relative to it. This was a genuine exercise of faith. (Note, Luke i. 34-38.)

V. 10. As the word other is not in the original, some think that the angel appeared in the morning and evening of the same day.

8 ¶ Then Manoah intreated the LORD, and said, O my Lord, let the man of God which thou didst send, come again unto us, and teach us what we shall do unto the child that shall be born.

9 And God hearkened to the voice of Manoah; and the angel of God came again unto the woman as she sat in the field: but Manoah her husband was not with her.

10 And the woman made haste, and ran, and shewed her husband, and said unto him, Behold, the man hath appeared unto me, that came unto me the other day.

11 And Manoah arose, and went after his wife, and came to the man, and said unto him, Art thou the man that spaketh unto the woman? And he said, I am.

12 And Manoah said, Now let thy words come to pass: how shall we order the child? and how shall we do unto him?

13 And the angel of the LORD said unto Manoah, Of all that I said unto the woman, let her beware.

14 She may not eat of any thing that cometh of the vine, neither let her drink wine or strong drink, nor eat any unclean thing: all that I commanded her, let her observe.

15 ¶ And Manoah said unto the angel of the LORD, I pray thee, let us detain thee until we shall have made ready a kid for thee.

16 And the angel of the LORD said unto Manoah, Though thou detain me, I will not eat of thy bread; and if thou wilt offer a burnt-offering, thou must offer it unto the LORD: for Manoah knew not that he was an angel of the LORD.

17 And Manoah said unto the angel of the LORD, What is thy name, that, when thy sayings come to pass, we may do thee honour?

18 And the angel of the LORD said unto him, Why askest thou thus after my name, seeing it is secret?

19 So Manoah took a kid, with a meat-offering, and offered it upon a rock unto the LORD: and the angel did wondrously; and Manoah and his wife looked on.

20 For it came to pass, when the flame went up toward heaven from off the altar, that the angel of the LORD ascended in the flame of the altar: and Manoah and his wife looked on it, and fell on their faces to the ground.

21 (But the angel of the LORD did no more appear to Manoah and to his wife.) Then Manoah knew that he was an angel of the LORD.

22 And Manoah said unto his wife, We shall surely die, because we have seen God.

23 But his wife said unto him, If the LORD were pleased to kill us, he would not have received a burnt-offering and a meat-offering at our hands; neither would he have shewed us all these things; nor would, as at this time, have told us such things as these.

24 ¶ And the woman bare a son, and called his name Samson; and the child grew, and the LORD blessed him.

25 And the Spirit of the LORD began to move him at times in the camp of Dan, Zorah and Eshtaol.

V. 15, 16. Manoah, not knowing who this Messenger of God was, seems to have doubted whether he should prepare him a banquet, or a sacrifice. "For Manoah knew not that he was an angel of the LORD." This implied, that had he known who it was, the thought offering a burnt-offering, though irregular, would not have been in all respects improper: but as he took him only for a man, it was very wrong. The same would have been equally the case, had he been the greatest created angel. (Note, Ex. xx. 3.)

V. 18—22. The word rendered secret, signifies Wonderful; and is the same name that is given to the Messiah by the prophet, (Is. ix. 6.)—In consequence of this intimation, Manoah, though no priest, offered a burnt offering upon a rock, (where perhaps some rude altar was hastily prepared;) and he was accepted in so doing. Probably, fire from the rock consumed the sacrifice. He offered it to JEHOVAH, and He did wondrously, (there is no word for the angel in the original, according to the meaning of his name Wonderful; for in the presence of Manoah and his wife, he ascended towards heaven with the flame of fire from off the altar, and by that Manoah knew him to be the Angel-JEHOVAH, and he was afraid, lest death should be the consequence of having "seen God.")—From these circumstances the reader will easily collect, whom Manoah supposed the angel to have been. (Notes, Gen. xvi. 10, 11, 13, 14. xxxii. 30. xlviii. 16. Ex. iii. 2. xxxiii. 20—23. Josh. v. 13—15. Hos. xii. 3—6. John i. 18.)

V. 23. Manoah's wife being, at that time, the stronger in faith, encouraged her husband, by the consideration, that the acceptance of their sacrifice, united with the promise of a son who should "begin to deliver Israel," assured them of the Lord's favour. Had he intended to slay them, he would neither, at such a time, have done these wondrous works, nor given them a promise which must in that case fail of being accomplished.

V. 25. In the, &c. The tribe of Dan lay next to the land of the Philistines; (Note, Josh. xix. 40—48;) but it is uncertain, whether at that time any army of Danites were encamped to preserve the country from depredation, or whether the words should be read Mahaneh-Dan; being the name of a place afterwards mentioned, but was so called from events prior to the days of Samson. (Notes, xvii. 1. xviii. 11, 12.) Here, however, he discovered at times, such extraordinary courage, strength, and activity, as evidently proceeded from the Spirit of the Lord.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—7. We ought to make haste to keep God's commandments, but to wait patiently for the performance of his promises: and we should be thankful that he has a remnant of servants in all ages. These indeed often have trials, which are unknown to their fellow-creatures, unpitied by them, or incapable of relief from them; but they have no sorrows which the Lord doth not pity, and none which he will not remove in the best time and manner: and he has various methods of shewing them the kind notice which he takes of them, till he sees good to relieve them. Retirement is always friendly to communion with God, and his people are never less alone than when alone.—As every promise implies a correspondent duty in expecting the performance of the one, we must not neglect the other; and those who are peculiarly honoured of God, must be proportionably ready to deny themselves for his sake.—If parents desire that their children should be mortified to fleshly lusts, and devoted to God, they should be careful to be so themselves.—The parental duty commences even from the child's conception, and every thing should be attended to, which may conduce to its welfare of body and soul: prayer should be offered in its behalf. For an immortal creature is brought into existence, which will be happy or miserable for ever; and, being conceived in sin, it cannot be holy or happy, without the special grace of God, and an interest in the great Redeemer. We need also divine direction in respect of the education of our children, lest any of the rules of Scripture should be forgotten, mistaken, or neglected; that being "trained up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord," there may be a well-grounded hope of their becoming useful to the church and to the world. Happy is it, when married persons possess unreserved confidence in each other, and can converse freely together concerning their spiritual experiences; that they may have the benefit of each other's counsel and prayers. The one may suggest hints and encouragements, which did not occur to the other; and they, who at some times, or in some respects, are the weakest, may at others prove the strongest and wisest. When we desire to know the will of God that we may do it, we should pray for instruction with the most unshaken assurance of its being granted: (Note, James i. 5—8;) but perhaps he may see good to teach us by means of our inferiors.

V. 8—25. True spiritual knowledge, grace, and consolation always excite desires, and dictate prayers, for further communications and displays of God's glory to our souls. Those, whom he honours as instruments of good to us, we should honour likewise; yet not in any way derogatory to the glory of the Lord himself.—"Hospitality without grudging" to those who love his name, and a readiness to devote our substance to his glory, are always ornamental to the profession of godliness. In our best-meant actions we are prone to forget, or to mistake, the truths and precepts of the sacred Oracles, and need reminding of them. A vain curiosity often supplants our proper attention to practical subjects, especially those which relate to our present duty: but we should be as willing to be ignorant of what the Lord is pleased to conceal, as to receive whatever he is pleased to teach us. The name of our Lord is Wonderful and Secret, because it is incomprehensible: but by his wonderful works he makes himself known, as far as our instruction and encouragement require it, and further knowledge would only fill us with self-conceit. (Note, 1 Cor. viii. 1—3.) His chief display of himself is in the person of Jesus Christ, his co-equal Son; who, having offered on earth one sacrifice for our sins, and being risen from the dead, and ascended into heaven, presents with acceptance our spiritual sacrifices, when offered through faith in his name. Happy are we, when our hearts and affections ascend after the Saviour: we may then, with pleasure and admiration, contemplate the wonders of redeeming love; and every discovery of his glory will awe our souls into deeper reverence and humiliation. This, however, Satan will sometimes attempt to convert into terror and discouragement whilst we compare the holiness and majesty of our God with our meanness and pollution. But he will not cast off those who are humbly determined, if they must perish, to perish supplicating his mercy: having spared them when enemies, and taught them to value his salvation, he will answer their

CHAP. XIV.

Samson desires a woman of the Philistines to wife, 1—4. Going to see her, he slays a lion; and afterwards finds honey in its carcase, 5—9. At his marriage-feast he proposes a riddle, which the guests explain by means of his wife, 10—18. He kills thirty Philistines, gives their spoil to those who explain the riddle, and departs in anger, 19. His wife is given to his companion, 20.

AND Samson went down to Timnath, and saw a woman in Timnath of the daughters of the Philistines.

2 And he came up, and told his father and his mother, and said, I have seen a woman in Timnath of the daughters of the Philistines; now therefore get her for me to wife.

3 Then his father and his mother said unto him, Is there never a woman among the daughters of thy brethren, or among all my people, that thou goest to take a wife of the uncircumcised Philistines? And Samson said unto his father, Get her for me: for she pleaseth me well.

4 But his father and his mother knew not that it was of the LORD, that he sought an occasion against the Philistines: for at that time the Philistines had dominion over Israel.

5 ¶ Then went Samson down, and his father and his mother, to Timnath, and came to the vineyards of Timnath: and, behold, a young lion roared against him.

6 And the Spirit of the LORD came mightily upon him, and he rent him as he would have rent a kid, and he had nothing in his hand: but he told not his father or his mother what he had done.

7 And he went down, and talked with the woman; and she pleased Samson well.

prayers, dispel their fears, and fulfil his largest promises. The gospel itself, and the means of grace afforded us, are hopeful tokens, that the Lord favours us: but if we have been taught to love the gospel, and to fear nothing so much as coming short of the salvation of Christ; if we have learned to delight in his ordinances and commandments, and have received evident answers to our prayers; we may be sure that the Lord has not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ. When children possess health with the use of their limbs, senses, and understandings, parents have abundant cause for gratitude: but most of all, when they give early indications, that the Holy Spirit is working upon their tender minds, and preparing them for the service of God. This let us in the first place desire, seek, and pray for; and may this blessing be widely bestowed upon the rising generations!

NOTES:

CHAP. XIV. V. 1—4. Many think, that Samson was induced to contract this marriage by special direction from the Lord; such marriages not being immoral in themselves, but forbidden to the Israelites, to keep them separate from idolaters. (Note, Hos. i. 2, 3.) In this manner he was directed to seek occasion against the Philistines: yet he shewed his respect to his parents, by seeking their concurrence; who opposed his marriage as long as "they knew not that it was of the LORD." For the words translated, "she pleaseth me well," may be rendered, "it is right," and considered as an intimation, that it was from God; upon which his parents consented and went with him. But perhaps it is only meant, that it pleased God to leave Samson to follow his own inclinations, intending in his infinite wisdom to overrule his misconduct for good to Israel; and that his parents consented because he was bent upon it. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 5, 6. Samson, when at a distance from his parents, was assaulted by a young lion, which was come to its full strength and fierceness: yet, though unarmed, he rent it as a kid; because "the Spirit of the LORD came mightily upon him." But he did not mention the extraordinary exploit to his parents, either restrained by modesty, or being afraid of exciting the jealousy of the Philistines. This was an earnest of his subsequent victories, not by human might or power, but by the Spirit of the LORD. Thus David slew a lion and a bear, before he killed Goliath and subdued the enemies of Israel: (Note, 1 Sam. xvii. 34—37;) and Jesus Christ, ere he entered upon his public ministry, and on the cross before his ascension, overcame "the devil, that roaring lion, that goeth about seeking whom he may devour."

V. 8, 9. A swarm of bees had settled and collected honey, in the carcase of the lion; which was a most unlikely place for that purpose; being, as might have been supposed, both inconvenient, and offensive to that delicate insect, which draws honey from the most odiferous flowers and plants. This Samson found, when he turned aside to see the carcase, and perhaps repeatedly to thank God for his deliverance. As every remains of a dead carcase of an unclean animal, was polluting, it has been thought that Samson did not tell his parents where he found the honey, lest they should scruple to eat it: (Note, Lev. xi. 31.) though the extraordinary circumstances of the transaction satisfied him, that it might properly be done.

12 ¶ And Samson said unto them, I will now put forth a riddle unto you; if ye can certainly declare it me within the seven days of the feast, and find it out, then I will give you thirty sheets and thirty change of garments.

13 But if ye cannot declare it me, then shall ye give me thirty sheets and thirty change of garments. And they said unto him, Put forth thy riddle, that we may hear it.

14 And he said unto them, Out of the eater came forth meat, and out of the strong came forth sweetness. And they could not in three days expound the riddle.

15 And it came to pass, on the seventh day, that they said unto Samson's wife, Entice thy husband, that he may declare unto us the riddle, lest we burn thee and thy father's house with fire: have ye called us to take that we have? is it not so?

V. 10—14. When Samson, in conformity to custom, celebrated his marriage-feast, the Philistines brought him thirty companions; professing respect, but probably placing them as a watch upon him, being in some degree aware of his great strength. To prevent perhaps a worse use of time, Samson proposed a riddle as a trial of ingenuity; and a wager with each of them, of a sheet, shirt, or other linen garment, and a change of raiment of all sorts, that they could not resolve it. The riddle, in its literal purport, meant no more, than that he had got honey, for food and pleasure, from the lion, which in its strength and fury was prepared to devour him. Yet this explanation of the riddle may be interpreted, as containing an emblem of more importance, and more hard to be understood, except by the teaching of God.—The victory, which Christ obtained over Satan, by means of his agonies and death; and his subsequent exaltation, the glory that redounded to the Father, and the spiritual advantages thence accruing to his people, may be shadowed forth in it. The entrance of sin, the fall of man, and the ruin of the human race through the malice of Satan, will issue in his deeper misery, in the greater glory of God, and in the increased felicity of the redeemed, and of all holy creatures to all eternity.—The persecutions of the church have promoted its purity and prosperity. The trials, conflicts, and temptations of the Lord's people are productive of holiness and comfort to their souls in this world, and work for them an exceeding weight of glory in the next. The remains of indwelling sin, and even the falls of real believers, become occasions to them of deeper humility more simple dependence on the Saviour, more ardent love and admiring gratitude, more compassion for their fellow-sinners, more fitness for many kinds of service on earth, and greater meetness for the occupations of the redeemed in glory. And if any abuse this truth, let them know, that they are not concerned in it; for upright souls are always rendered more watchful, humble, diligent, simple, compassionate, and fervent in prayer, by every false step which they make: at least no others give evidence that they are believers. Even death, that devouring monster, that king of terrors, being robbed of his sting and stripped of his horror, transmits the believer's soul to the realms of bliss, and makes way for the body itself being restored incorruptible, immortal, and glorious, to partake of endless felicity. In these, and many other senses, "Out of the eater comes forth meat, and out of the strong, sweetness." (Notes, Rom. v. 3—5. viii. 35—39.)

V. 15—17. The barbarity, insolence, and selfishness of the conduct of these Philistines illustrate the misery of Israel's bondage under such tyrants.—Mr. Henry notes, that "they ought not to lay wagers, who cannot bear to lose with better temper;" and we may add, that such violent passions and implacable resentments are the common effects of affronted pride and disappointed covetousness, in every kind and degree of gaming; and that it should be entirely avoided.—The seventh day here mentioned seems to have been the seventh day of the week, and the fourth of the feast; the remaining part of which Samson's wife spent in entreating him with tears to tell the riddle to her, out of fear, or attachment to her countrymen: and she at length prevailed. (Notes, v. 6. xvi. 6—21.)

V. 18. The Philistines could not have discovered the riddle of themselves, if they had not drawn it from Samson by tampering with his wife.

16 And Samson's wife wept before him, and said, 'Thou dost but hate me, and lovest me not: thou hast put forth a riddle unto the children of my people, and hast not told it me. And he said unto her, Behold, 'I have not told it my father nor my mother, and shall I tell it thee?

17 And she wept before him the seven days, while their feast lasted: and it came to pass on the seventh day, that he told her, because 'she lay sore upon him; and she told the riddle to the children of her people.

18 And the men of the city said unto him, on the seventh day before the sun went down, What is sweeter than honey, and what is stronger than a lion? And he said unto them, If ye had not plowed with my heifer, ye had not found out my riddle.

19 ¶ And the Spirit of the Lord came upon him, and he went down to Ashkelon, and slew thirty men of them, and took their *spoils, and gave change of garments unto them which expounded the riddle: and his anger was kindled, and he went up to his father's house.

20 But Samson's wife ^dwas given to his companion, whom he had used as ^ehis friend.

CHAP. XV.

Samson, returning to visit his wife, finds her given to another, 1, 2. He sets fire, with foxes and fire-brands, to the corn of the Philistines; who burn his wife and her father, 3-6. Samson smites them, and retires to the rock Etam, 7, 8. The men of Judah, by his consent, deliver him bound to the Philistines; and he kills a thousand of them with the jawbone of an ass, 9-17. Being ready to perish by thirst, he cries to the Lord, who opens for him a fountain in Lehi, 18, 19. He judges Israel, 20.

BUT it came to pass within a while after, in the time of wheat-harvest, that Samson visited his wife with ^aa kid; and he said, ^bI will go in to my wife

V. 19, 20. Samson found himself, by an immediate impulse of the Spirit of God, directed, emboldened, and assisted, in this attack upon the enemies of Israel; which was fully justified by their public oppressions, without advertent to their treachery to him. (Notes, xv. 1-5.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In contracting marriage, the senses are dangerous counsellors; beauty and wit are very doubtful recommendations; and wisdom, piety, and holiness ought principally to be regarded.—Next to the word of God, the concurrence of parents is generally requisite to render that relation honourable and comfortable. But they ought to act with consideration and kindness; and if constrained to refuse their concurrence, they should give such convincing and important reasons, as may prove that their refusal springs from wisdom and affection, not from caprice and severity; from an unwillingness that their children should make an imprudent choice, not from any disposition to bind them against their will to a single life.—In no ordinary circumstances can there be any necessity for a person that professes godliness, to marry one who is manifestly irreligious: but the Lord can over-rule for the best of purposes those actions, which we must by no means imitate: his designs do not influence our conduct, unless he inform us of them: and his written word is our constant rule.—We are always exposed to danger of body and soul, both when alone and when in company; but nothing can hurt us, except we wander from the path of duty. Even Satan, "that roaring lion," may be effectually resisted, and completely overcome, if, in answer to the prayer of faith, the Spirit of God communicates his strength to our souls. In this way alone can we subdue this enemy; and thus all his temptations shall eventually conduce to our benefit.—We often lose the comfort, and the real credit, of our best disputed conflicts with our spiritual enemies, by ostentation: and the special favours, which God bestows upon us, can be mentioned only on some occasions, to particular persons, and in great modesty, without savouring of vain glory: and we obtain many secret victories over temptation, for which we need repeatedly to bless God, but of which we cannot speak particularly to our nearest earthly friend.—We should be always ready to increase the comforts of others, by imparting to them our temporal good things; especially to parents and benefactors.—We enjoy the most sweetness from God's goodness to us, when we most frequently turn aside to meditate, and to bless him on that account: and as one successful conflict prepares for another, so one season of peculiar mercy is an earnest of another.—It is almost impossible to associate with worldly people, without conforming to their vain customs: at best, when evident evil is avoided in such company, we spend our time to no purpose; and we are not called to "redeem our time," and to do all to the glory of God?—We ought constantly to watch and pray against pride, anger, and covetousness, and to avoid every thing that gives force to these passions: for their effects are inconceivably dreadful when they acquire the ascendancy.—It is dangerous to be connected with those, who will not be satisfied with any measure of love or respect, except we will offend God, or injure ourselves, to oblige them. A worldly wife, or a worldly friend, is to a godly man as an enemy in the camp, who will watch every opportunity to betray him; and, by assiduity and perseverance, will more or less overcome his resolutions, and prevail with him to make such compliances, as will greatly injure his credit and comfort. Nor can those connexions be comfortable or durable, where important secrets cannot be trusted without the danger of being divulged. Indeed, Satan's chief advantage against us arises from his correspondence with our deceitful hearts and inbred lusts.—But the wisest counsels of wicked men are very foolishness, and eventually all their gain is loss: they secure some worldly interest, and for it lose their lives or their souls!—We are naturally far more prone to be angry with those who have injured us, than to repent of our sins against God.—Imprudent connexions commonly terminate in speedy separations; nor are any more likely to asperse a man's character, cheat him of his property, or defile his bed, than ungodly men who have been admitted to unmerited confidence. But, happy are they, who feast upon the fruits of Christ's conflicts and victories! all things shall work together for their good; and their sharpest trials on earth, yea, the severest agonies of death, shall prove the occasion of their loudest songs of triumphant joy and praise in heaven.

NOTES.

CHAP. XV. V. 1, 2. (Notes, xix. 3, 4.) The anger of Samson, after a time, subsiding, and his affection reviving, he went to see his wife, taking with him a kid, on which to feast with her and her friends; not knowing that she had been given to another. (xiv. 20.)—The Jewish writers relate, that she had become a proselyte before Samson married her; but the whole narrative militates against that opinion, especially the father's answer on this occasion.

V. 3-5. Samson, being conscious that he was to be, in part, the deliverer of Israel from the Philistines, only waited for a fair occasion to declare against them. This was afforded him by the injurious treatment which he had received; and that was also a specimen of their conduct towards the Israelites when most submissive.—In the means, which he employed, we must advert to the power of God, both in supplying and succeeding them; to mortify the pride, and punish the wickedness of the Philistines. The foxes were doubtless very numerous in those parts, and the people very expert in taking them: and probably, Samson engaged assistants in procuring and preparing them. Being thus let go, they would hinder each other from gaining their holes in the woods, and would take shelter in the neighbouring corn-fields and vineyards: and the weather being dry, the corn ripe, and the fire kindled in many places at once, we may easily conceive that great destruction would very speedily be effected by this uncommon contrivance. (Note, vii. 16-22.)

V. 6. Samson's wife betrayed him, for fear of being burnt with fire; and thus brought that very death upon herself, for having by her treachery provoked Samson to this measure. In like manner the Jews crucified Christ, lest his claim to be their King should bring the Romans upon them; and by this conduct they brought that very calamity upon themselves. (xv. 17. Note, John xii. 47, 48.)

V. 7. The Philistines had indeed avenged Samson on those who had injured him; but they were instigated by hatred and dread of him, and not by any desire of doing justice: he therefore purposed effectually to avenge himself and his people upon them; and then, unless excited by further injuries, he would desist from attacking them.

V. 8. The phrase, rendered "hip and thigh," has greatly perplexed critical expositors: but probably it means, that Samson, without any arms, attacked a great multitude of Philistines; and with his hips, or legs and thighs, threw

11. Then three thousand men of Judah ¹went to the top of the rock Etam, and said to Samson, Knowest thou not that the ²Philistines are rulers over us? what is this that thou hast done unto us? And he said unto them, As they did unto me, so have I done unto them.

12 And they said unto him, We are come down ¹to bind thee, that we may deliver thee into the hand of the Philistines. And Samson said unto them, Swear unto me that ye will not ²fall upon me yourselves.

13 And they spake unto him, saying, No; but we will bind thee fast, and deliver thee into their hand; but surely we will not kill thee. And they bound him with two new cords, and brought him up from the rock.

14 ¶ And when he came unto Lehi, ¹the Philistines shouted against him: and ²the Spirit of the LORD came mightily upon him; and ³the cords that were upon his arms became as flax that was burnt with fire, and his bands ⁴loosed from off his hands.

15 And he found a ¹new jawbone of an ass, and put forth his hand and took it, and ²slew a thousand men therewith.

16 And Samson said, With the jawbone of an ass, ¹heaps upon heaps, with the jaw of an ass have I slain a thousand men.

them down, and then trode them to death. This he seems to have done on a mountain; and descending from it, he went and dwelt alone on the top of a rock: perhaps for retirement, that he might not be surprised by the Philistines, and because he did not choose to trust the Israelites.

V. 10, 11. The men of Judah had, probably, paid their stipulated tribute, and had given no cause of offence to their oppressors; and they wondered on what ground they came against them. They were sunk into an abject frame of spirit: and quietly endured to be in bondage to the Philistines; despairing of deliverance, or basely fearing the trouble and peril of attempting it: otherwise they would not have thus yielded up their champion.

V. 12, 13. Samson quietly submitted to be bound by the men of Judah, (who were intentionally his murderers,) and to be delivered up to the Philistines; but he indented with his countrymen, that they would not themselves fall upon him, lest he should be constrained to destroy them instead of their enemies; which he was unwilling to do, though so shamefully treated by them.—In all this he was a type of Christ, who in his retirement was rudely assaulted by the Jews, whom he could easily have destroyed, but would not: into their hands he surrendered himself, and they bound him, and delivered him up to the Romans to be crucified; though the bonds even of death could not hold him, or prevent his victories and triumphs. (Notes, John xviii. 1—9. Acts ii. 22—24.)

V. 14—17. When “the Spirit of the Lord came mightily upon Samson,” his bonds were soon broken: and then the jawbone of the contemptible ass became a more formidable weapon than sword or spear, and a thousand men fell before him, being alike unable to resist or to escape! (Note, 8.)—Elated with this surprising victory, he seems to have celebrated his own praise, instead of giving glory to God.—The original word for an ass, signifies also an heap: and this circumstance gives a propriety and an animation to the passage, which cannot be preserved in a translation. “Ramath-lehi” signifies the lifting up of the jawbone.—The name Lehi, before used, referred to this event by an anticipation of the historian. (9. 14.)

V. 18, 19. Samson at this moment felt his weakness in himself, as before he had shewn his strength when assisted by the Lord. But his urgent distress reminded him of his danger; and led him to thank God for his deliverance, and to pray unto him for present relief: and then in the place where the jaw lay, or in Lehi, (Marg.) a spring was supernaturally opened, by which he was relieved and preserved: so that he called the place “En-hakkore,” or the well of him that cried. (Marg. Ref.)—Christ, too, in his grand conflict with our enemies, thirsted, but had no well opened for his relief: for he not only “trode the wine-press alone,” as Samson did on this occasion; but he also drank the cup of the wrath of God for us, which Samson could not have done. (Notes, Ps. lxi. 21. John xix. 28—30.)

V. 20. After this ever Samson was submitted to, as judge, by the people.—From this we may suppose that he acted as a magistrate in civil concerns, and not merely as Israel's defender against the Philistines. (Preface to Judges.) If Samson was not born before the forty years of oppression by the Philistines began, his death must have occurred much nearer to the end of them, than some learned men suppose. Yet the twenty years during which he judged Israel, are said to have “been in the days of the Philistines,” which intimates that Israel's deliverance was incomplete, and their enemies very formidable; no doubt because they had not duly repented, and returned to the Lord.

CHAP. XVI.

Samson, ensnared by a harlot at Gaza, is in imminent danger, but escapes by carrying off the gates of the city, 1—3. He loves Delilah; who, bribed by the Philistines, repeatedly, but in vain, tries to discover, in what his strength lay, 4—15. Overcome by her importunity, he discloses the secret; and the Philistines, shaving his head while asleep, bind and imprison him, having put out his eyes, 16—21. His hair grows again, and his strength returns, 22. The Philistines, at the feast of Dagon, make sport of him: he pulls down the house, and dies with vast multitudes of his enemies, 23—30. He is buried by his friends, 31.

THEN went Samson to ¹Gaza, and saw there ²an harlot, ³and went in unto her.

2 And it was told the Gazites, saying, Samson is come hither. And they ¹compassed him in, and laid wait for him all night in the gate of the city, and were

God and of his law are wanting, the most ordinary transactions of life will be conducted on such principles, as tend to confusion and licentiousness.—Wicked men, conscious of their own base intentions, suspect the worst concerning others, or pretend to do so, to cover their own injustice: and their proposals, made under the guise of peace, are no less to be dreaded than their open enmity. It is therefore best to avoid all fellowship with them. (Notes, 2 Cor. vi. 14—18. Eph. v. 8—14.)—We should endeavour to live at peace with all men; and in case that be impracticable, to avoid every thing which may render us justly chargeable with the consequences of contention: and before the Lord proceeds to execute vengeance, he often manifests the inexorable wickedness of his enemies.—When plenty is acquired by rapine, and abused by the possessors in sensual indulgence, they may reasonably expect to have it taken from them: nor does it require much ability to be an incendiary, and to kindle the fire of discord in families, churches, and nations. Indeed, such scourges are generally instigated by one more subtle and malicious than themselves; and they may expect to be consumed in the fires which they kindle. But in the hands of those whom God employs, the most contemptible instruments are rendered successful.—They who sin to avoid suffering will bring troubles upon themselves, against which they can have no protector.—Heartless professors of religion who value the friendship and fear the frown of the world, and who are the slaves of sin and Satan, censure, hate, and betray those, who call them to liberty, in the service of God: to save themselves in times of persecution, they often apostatize and turn betrayers and accusers of the brethren; (Matt. xxiv. 9, 10:) and in their opinion, the best services, and most dangerous endeavours to do good, deserve reproach, condemnation, and punishment. But we shall not be discouraged by these things, when we consider how the Saviour was treated, we shall see how we ought to act, when we observe his meekness, patience, and dying prayers for his crucifiers; and we shall discard our fears, when we consider his triumphs, his ascension, his glory, and his promise that they who “suffer with him shall also be glorified together.”—Whenever we are peculiarly favoured of God, pride will lead us to rob him of his glory, unless we be very watchful: hence every comfort must be counterbalanced with a cross: and the more any man is made useful to others, the more mortifying experiences he generally needs, of his own weakness, folly, and unworthiness. (Notes, 2 Kings xx. 12—19. 2 Chr. xxxii. 25, 26. 2 Cor. xii. 7—10.) By such painful discipline we are taught to know our own place, and to feel our entire dependence on the Lord, and our continual obligations to him. When, however, our trials have produced the proper effect, they shall be removed, and become sources of gratitude and comfort, and excite us to raise fresh monuments of the goodness of God.—But in this world our enemies will continue powerful, and our victories incomplete: ere long we shall be made more than conquerors, and render perfect and eternal hallelujahs.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVI. V. 1—3. Hitherto Samson's character, though uncommon, has appeared illustrious: and considering him as raised up to deliver Israel, and instructed, as well as assisted, to do it in that unprecedented manner, which best tended to mortify the Philistines, and to manifest the mighty power of God; we may fairly vindicate most of his past conduct, and safely imitate much of it: and notwithstanding many infirmities, we have hitherto met with nothing inconsistent with his character as a perpetual Nazarite. (Note, xiii. 4, 5.) But in this chapter we find him behaving in so wicked and intemperate a manner, that many have been led to question whether he were a godly man, or not. The apostle however, numbers him among those “who obtained a good report through faith;” (Heb. xi. 32, 33. 39:) and by duly considering the doctrines and examples of Scripture, the deceitfulness of the human heart, the artifices of Satan, and the methods in which the Lord frequently deals with his hast mocked me, and told me lies: "now tell me, I pray thee, wherewith thou mightest be bound.

11 And he said unto her, ^aIf they bind me fast with new ropes ^bthat never were occupied, then shall I be weak, and be as another man.

12 Delilah therefore took new ropes, and bound him therewith, and said unto him, The Philistines be upon thee, Samson. And there were liers-in-wait abiding in the chamber. And he brake them from off his arms like a thread.

13 And Delilah said unto Samson, Hitherto thou hast mocked me, and told me lies: tell me wherewith thou mightest be bound. And he said unto her, If thou weavest the seven locks of my head with the web.

14 And she fastened it with the pin, and said unto him, The Philistines be upon thee, Samson. And he awaked out of his sleep, and ^cwent away with the pin of the beam and with the web.

15 ¶ And she said unto him, ^dHow canst thou say, I love thee, ^ewhen thine heart is not with me? thou hast mocked me these three times, and hast not told me wherein thy great strength lieth.

16 And it came to pass, when ^fshe pressed him daily with her words, and urged him ^gso that his soul was ^hvexed unto death;

17 That he told her ⁱall his heart, and said unto her, ^j"There hath not come a razor upon mine head; for I have been a Nazarite unto God from my mother's womb: if I be shaven, then my strength will go from me, and I shall become weak, and be like any other man.

people; we may interpret this 'riddle of a man,' as some have called him, and may learn useful lessons from his history, which perplexes some, and emboldens many to cavil and object.—Confiding in his great strength, and the dread of him with which the Philistines were seized, he boldly entered Gaza, one of their chief cities, (on what account we know not,) and there he went in unto a harlot. This disgraceful circumstance was made known to the inhabitants; who, fearful of attacking him, laid wait for him all night, and were probably forming some stratagem, or sending for some re-inforcements, that in the morning they might assault and kill him. But at midnight (perhaps awakened by remorse of conscience,) he arose; and the Lord, though greatly offended, was pleased "to work for his own name's sake;" and by his assistance, in contempt of the guards, he seized on the gate, with the posts, which he violently dragged out of the ground, and the bar also, and carried them several miles to the top of a hill, no one venturing to interrupt or seize him.—Thus our Lord, when in the likeness of sinful flesh, after his crucifixion between two thieves, arose as a conqueror over death and every foe, and, as it were, broke open and carried away with him the very gates of the grave, while he ascended into heaven as the first-fruits of the resurrection.

V. 4. It is not certain whether Delilah was a Philistine, or a licentious Israelite; but Samson indulged a base affection for her, and most shamefully wasted his time in her company; perhaps emboldened by his impunity in the foregoing instance.—Some think he had married her; but this is not intimated, nor is it probable. Her name implies a consumer, or wasting, which is very apposite.

V. 5. The princes of the five chief cities in Philistia soon heard of Samson's conduct, and formed a plan for his ruin. By promising Delilah about six hundred pounds sterling, they induced her to employ all her insinuation to find out the cause of his supernatural strength; which they supposed to depend on some observance, that he might be induced to neglect; and when in consequence his strength should fail him, they purposed to avenge themselves on him. They seem to have intimated to Delilah, that they only meant to afflict him, that he might not continue formidable; but not to kill him. Yet their dread of him was so great, that they durst not on any advantage, attempt to seize him, till satisfied that his great strength was departed!

V. 6-8. This artful woman would no doubt propose the question, as a matter of mere curiosity; and would couch it in such terms, accompany it with such blandishments, and urge it at such times, as were most likely to prevail. (xiv. 16, 17.) Samson, however, had some suspicion, that she desired to pry into this important secret with no good design; yet instead of leaving her, or giving her a direct refusal, he endeavoured to amuse her by an evasive answer, or rather by a direct falsehood! He knew that his strength was immediately from God, who had constituted him a perpetual Nazarite, of which his hair was the token: but if he renounced his Nazarite's character by shaving his head, the Lord would depart from him, and he would become as other men. He was not at first so infatuated, as to disclose the secret; but he was taken in Satan's net, and was sure to be every moment more and more entangled. (Notes, Prov. ii. 19. v. 4-9. vii. 26.)

V. 9. Samson's infatuation was very great: but it cannot be conceived, that he would afterwards have fallen asleep in Delilah's lap, if he had at this time seen the Philistines in the chamber prepared to seize him. We may suppose therefore that they waited every time in some adjacent room, or closet, to see whether he was able to break his bonds; and when they found his strength was not departed, they kept close; while Delilah artfully turned the matter off as a jest, which she put on him to discover whether he had told her the truth, or not.

V. 10-14. These repeated attempts of Delilah must have satisfied Samson that she intended his ruin, had not "whoredom taken away his heart," and made him senseless and brutish.—It is probable, that some time intervened between each attempt; and that she took the most favourable opportunities for making them: but they who say, she made him drink wine, that he might be heavy with sleep, forget that this would have forfeited the privilege of his being a perpetual Nazarite, as really as shaving his head did. (Notes, xiii. 4, 5. Num. vi. 3-5.) Doubtless he supposed himself entirely alone with her; and each attempt seems to have been made when he was asleep. (Notes, 2 Sam. xi. 1-5. Matt. xxvi. 40, 41.)—It is not certain how his hair was fastened in the web; but this evasion came nearer the discovery of the important secret, than any of the others.

V. 15. Delilah pretended to discredit all Samson's professions of love for her, so long as he refused to give her this peculiar proof of it. He had sacrificed his honour, conscience, interest, and every other valuable object, to his passion for her: but while he had one reserve, she would not be satisfied. Such absolute affection cannot be placed on any creature without idolatry: but it is that very love, which the Lord justly requires of us, when he commands us to give him our heart: nor will he accept of us, while there is one reserve; while we deliberately refuse to part with any worldly object for his sake, or to yield him any service to which he calls us. Had Abraham peremptorily refused to sacrifice his beloved Isaac, the Lord might have said, "How canst thou say, that thou lovest me; when thy heart is not with me?" For, the true love of the infinitely glorious God, subdues, regulates, or subordinates, every other affection; and is alone absolute or unreserved. (Notes, Deut. vi. 5. Matt. x. 37-39.)

V. 16. Vexed unto death. 'He was weary of life,—and unconcerned what became of him.' (Bp. Patrick.) What an infatuation was this, that when Samson was incessantly and intolerably teased to do what he knew to be not only wicked, but foolish in the extreme, he had not resolution to depart from his seducer! (Notes, Gen. xxxix. 8-10. 1 Kings xi. 1-8. Prov. vii. 6-23.)

V. 17-21. To rebuke and severely correct Samson, for his heinous offences, the Lord was pleased to leave him to be infatuated almost beyond conception; and thus he was prevailed upon to disclose the secret to his vile paramour. Probably his manner of speaking, as well as the plain and satisfactory account, which he gave of his supernatural strength, convinced Delilah, that he had now told the whole truth; and she sent an earnest message to the lords of the Philistines, as one that feared lest they should not credit her, and she should lose the stipulated reward. (5. Notes, Num. xxv. 1-3. Matt. xxvi. 14-16. 1 Tim. vi. 6-10.)—It seems, that after Samson had been shaven, she made trial of his strength by putting him to pain; as it is said that "she began to afflict him." For, the Philistines, till satisfied that his strength was actually departed, dared no more approach him even when asleep, than they would have approached a sleeping lion. But it is wonderful, that the man who shaved him was restrained from attempting his life; and his preservation can be 18 And when Delilah saw that he had told her all his heart, she sent and called for the lords of the Philistines, saying, "Come up this once; for he hath shewed me all his heart. Then the lords of the Philistines came up unto her, and brought money in their hand.

19 And she made him sleep upon her knees: and she called for a man, and she caused him to shave off the seven locks of his head; and she began to afflict him, and his strength went from him.

20 And she said, The Philistines be upon thee, Samson. And he awoke out of his sleep, and said, "I will go out as at other times before, and shake myself. And he wist not that the LORD was departed from him.

21 ¶ But the Philistines took him, and put out his eyes, and brought him down to Gaza, and bound him with fetters of brass; and he did grind in the prison-house.

22 Howbeit, the hair of his head began to grow again, after he was shaven.

23 ¶ Then the lords of the Philistines gathered them together, for to offer a great sacrifice unto Dagon their god, and to rejoice: for they said, Our god hath delivered Samson our enemy into our hand.

24 And when the people saw him, they praised their god: for they said, Our god hath delivered into our hands our enemy, and the destroyer of our country, which slew many of us.

25 And it came to pass, when their hearts were merry, that they said, Call for Samson, that he may make us sport. And they called for Samson out of the prison-house; and he made them sport. And they set him between the pillars.

26 ¶ And Samson said unto the lad that held him by the hand, Suffer me that I may feel the pillars whereupon the house standeth, that I may lean upon them.

27 Now the house was full of men and women: and all the lords of the Philistines were there; and there were upon the roof about three thousand men and women, that beheld while Samson made sport.

28 And Samson called unto the LORD, and said, O LORD God, remember me, I pray thee, and strengthen me, I pray thee, only this once, O God, that I may be at once avenged of the Philistines for my two eyes.

29 And Samson took hold of the two middle pillars upon which the house stood, and on which it was borne up, of the one with his right hand, and of the other with his left.

30 And Samson said, Let me die with the Philistines. And he bowed himself with all his might; and the house fell upon the lords, and upon all the people that were therein. So the dead which he slew at his death, were more than they which he slew in his life.

31 Then his brethren, and all the house of his father, came down, and took him, and brought him up, and buried him between Zorah and Eshtaol, in the burying-place of Manoah his father. And he judged Israel twenty years.

ascribed to nothing but the immediate power of God.—At length, however, his enemies ventured from their concealment, seized on their prey; and having put out his eyes, and bound him in strong fetters, preserved him as a monument of their victory, and made him drudge in hard labour. To all this he could make no effectual resistance, for he found that "the LORD was departed from him."—What a change was this! To what a wretched and disgraceful situation had sin reduced this mighty judge of Israel, who before was himself as a whole army! Had his head been shaven without his fault, the case would have been different: but his whole conduct had been as great a contempt of the favour, glory, and authority of God, as if he had in disdain cut off his Nazarite's hair with his own hands; and therefore he was constrained to endure the dreadful effects of his folly. (Notes, Prov. xxiii. 27, 28.)

V. 22. Samson's afflictions seem to have been the means of bringing him to deep repentance: so that, through the loss of his bodily sight, the eyes of his understanding were opened, to perceive his own madness and wickedness; and, by depriving him of his bodily strength, the Lord was pleased to renew his spiritual strength. Then it must be supposed that he would humble himself before God, and seek his merciful forgiveness, and not seek in vain. In the mean while his hair grew, perhaps faster than usual; as an indication that the Spirit of the Lord was returning unto him, and that he would soon recover his extraordinary strength. But the Philistines, having blinded, fettered, and imprisoned him, were under no further apprehensions on that account.

V. 23, 24. This was either some occasional festival appointed by the lords of the Philistines, for their victory over Samson, or an annual festival in honour of Dagon, observed on that account with the greater solemnity; and when they had offered the sacrifice, they met together to feast and to divert themselves, either in the temple of Dagon, or, as some think, in a theatre erected for such uses. On this occasion the Philistines renewed their triumph over Samson, who probably had been preserved for that purpose, and was exposed to public view: and they also presumed to celebrate the triumph of Dagon their god over JEHOVAH the God of Israel; as if by the help of their idol they had prevailed against the judge of Israel, who formerly by the help of JEHOVAH had been victorious over them. But the very language of their joy shews how much they had dreaded him. (Notes, 1 Sam. v. Dan. v. 1—9.)

V. 25. Samson had been shewn to the people before: but now he was brought before the rulers of the nation, who diverted themselves amidst their feasting, by mocking his abject misery, and cruelly endeavouring to render him contemptible.—Thus Christ, being apprehended and bound by his enemies, was insulted by the council and rulers, as well as by the servants and soldiers. (Notes, Ps. lxxix. 10—12. Matt. xxvii. 39—44.)

V. 26. The main weight of this building rested upon two pillars in the centre, very near together, according to the method of building in some parts of the world; and against these, Samson, as if wearied, desired leave to rest himself.

V. 27. All the principal persons of the nation were assembled within this building; while about three thousand others were mounted upon the flat roof, looking through apertures perhaps made for that purpose, to enjoy the cruel pleasure of insulting over their fallen enemy! (Note, Prov. xvii. 5.)

V. 28. The triumph of the Philistines was that of Dagon; but the cause of Samson was that of Israel and of God. As the judge of Israel, he was divinely appointed to be an avenger of their enemies: but for his transgression he had been justly delivered into their hands; and they had not only cruelly treated him, but impiously blasphemed the Lord himself. In ordinary cases we may hope for the conversion and salvation of our fellow-sinners; and therefore we are commanded to forgive them, and do good to, and pray for, every one of them. But for the same reason that Satan and his angels, being the incurable enemies of God, are the objects of our allowed abhorrence; we should be required to detest any individual on earth, whom we certainly knew to be the object of God's final hatred: and in a future state, when sinners will no longer be under a dispensation of mercy, we should rejoice in the destruction of all his enemies. (Notes, 2 Tim. iv. 14, 15. Rev. vi. 9—11. xix. 1—6.) Samson's prayer was both dictated and answered by God himself; nor does it appear that it could have been known, except by immediate revelation. In this extraordinary case he knew it was right that he should avenge the cause of God and of Israel; and also that he should desire to execute the vengeance of God upon them for their despiteful cruelty to him.—Had his prayer proceeded from a spirit of revenge, God would not have heard it; (for he doth not love to gratify men's passions: but that is a proof, that this desire proceeded from God, (as St. Austin understands it,) who intended to punish the Philistines for oppressing Israel, as well as for abusing Samson by depriving him of his eyes.) (Bp. Patrick.)—Nor is Samson to be accused of self-murder; for he did not seek his own death, but Israel's deliverance, and the destruction of their enemies: and there is not the least intimation, that he was impatient under his sufferings; though in accomplishing his purpose, he was willing to lay down his life with the Philistines. There is a vast difference between rushing uncalled into the presence of God, out of proud impatience, rebellion, and contempt of life, when it is made miserable by a person's own misconduct; and being willing to lay down life for the honour of God, and the welfare of his people; though the circumstances, into which one adventures, be as certainly fatal, as the means by which another murders himself. For, a man is no more deemed a self-murderer, who sacrifices his life for the good of his country in the field of battle, than he is deemed a murderer of others, who in a just war slays the enemies of his country.

V. 31. The numbers, who were within and upon the house when it fell, of course would occasion great slaughter: but we must ascribe to the same power, which enabled Samson to throw down the building, the decisive destruction which it caused.—Thus Samson died in bonds and among the Philistines, as an awful rebuke for his sins: but no doubt he died penitent, and had not his future portion with them; and the effects of his death typified those of the death of Christ, who, by voluntarily laying down his life among transgressors, subverted the foundations of Satan's kingdom, and provided for the deliverance of his people.—By this blow the princes of the Philistines were destroyed, their government was unhinged, their power crushed, and their courage daunted; so that they made no opposition to Samson's relations, when they went to fetch his body to be buried among his people.—Thus the body of Christ also was, without opposition, given to his friends, that it might be honourably interred.—Samson seems to signify a little sun: and according to this allusion, he arose upon Israel after a suitable pre-intimation to his parents. During the morning of his life he shone very bright; but towards the evening he was greatly obscured by clouds: yet when setting, he burst through the gloom, and shone with more splendour than ever. So Jesus, our long expected "Sun of righteousness," arose upon Israel and upon the earth: after shining with glorious and benign lustre during his life, he was obscured by the thickest clouds just before his setting: but when he cried out "It is finished,"—and gave up the ghost," he shone forth with mild, but most glorious, splendour, and died a triumphant conqueror. In very many respects, however, he differed from Samson; especially, as he died praying for his murderers, and arose again to complete the redemption of his people.—Samson seems to have died young, not much above forty years of age, and to have left no family.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-15. Nothing but evident duty, should prevail with us to venture into those places, where bad examples and licentious characters abound. And even then, we should go with fear and trembling; earnestly beseeching God to "turn away our eyes from beholding vanity," to preserve our hearts from every sinful desire, and to strengthen us to resist every temptation. When we become unwatchful and self-confident, we are near some humiliating fall: the roving eye readily admits the licentious desire into the heedless heart; and "lust being conceived, sin is brought forth," and misery ensues.—The blandishments of beautiful women have often proved most dangerous temptations, even to pious men: and Satan would rather see the active and useful servant of God, yielding to the enticements of a harlot, and sleeping in Delilah's lap; than boldly venturing the tyrant's rage, and enduring the fiery furnace. They, who are captivated in this manner, must speedily be exposed to the deepest shame and the most imminent danger. Their reputation, strength, and usefulness will be torn from them; they will betray the cause which they should have served; and their enemies will insult and triumph, and be hardened in prejudices and revilings against religion.—The outward peril which attends such forbidden intercourse, is generally so great, that nothing but blind infatuation can induce men to venture upon it; but who can tell the machinations of the powers of darkness against those, who are stupidly indulging their lusts, and sleeping in the very jaws destruction? How lamentable is it to consider, that the goodness of God which preserves men from the immediate effects of their folly, is generally abused into an encouragement to future crimes! as every sinful propensity is strengthened by indulgence. So that even believers are seldom duly humbled for their sins, till they taste the bitter effects of them; and therefore it is eventually better to be chastened when they first offend, than to escape with impunity.—Companions in iniquity can have no good reasons for trusting one another: and they who betray the cause of God, have no ground to expect any thing else, 'than to be betrayed by their fellow-creatures; for, such as are enslaved to one lust, must not wonder to find their companions under the dominion of another.—Unworthy of a man, and still more of a believer, is that love, which is placed on a worthless object on account of external embellishments, and for the sake of animal gratification; while conscience, honour, and every noble purpose of the soul, are sacrificed to it. When a man is thus "bound in the chain of his own sins," he seems to lose even common sense; and no wickedness in the object of his idolatrous affections can make him sensible of his folly and danger, or willing to renounce the base attachment. This is indeed a deep ditch, into which many great men, and even some good men, have fallen; but from which few have escaped, and those by a miracle of mercy, and with the loss of almost every thing, except their souls. Whatever a man hath already sacrificed to such a criminal passion, still more will be required; no denial will be taken, no bounds assigned to artful and interested importunity, until he has ruined himself, and all those who are or ought to be dear to him; for, assiduity, dissimulation, and incessant blandishment will overcome the strongest resolutions, and induce compliance with the most unreasonable and ruinous demands: and all counsels, warnings, and past experiences are in this case ineffectual. On this Delilah's lap thousands are lulled into so sound a sleep, that nothing but the flames of hell can awake them.

V. 16-31.—Repeated deliverances, if men are not by them made sensible of their folly, and brought to repentance, only increase guilt, and make way for more aggravated misery: and if the Lord be provoked to leave sinners to themselves, and to give them up to the lusts of their own hearts; Satan will soon blind and enslave them, and employ them in his basest drudgery.—Every expectation of deliverance or assistance from God, while men are committing known sins, must be vain and presumptuous. They may think to go forth as at other times: but they will find their locks shorn, and their strength lost, because "the Lord is departed from them." Nay, if ministers, with the guilt of unrepented sin upon their consciences, continue to preach, and administer ordinances, with the greatest regularity; their exertions will generally fail of the wanted efficacy, and Satan will disregard their feeble efforts.—But it is most lamentable, when this is observable to others, while they themselves seem not at all sensible of the awful change. What in that case can be expected, but that the enemy should blind and enslave them more and more? Indeed, though the Lord again and again deliver his offending people in the extremest danger; yet if they presume upon his goodness, he will severely punish them, and even make them the contempt and reproach of the foolish: he will tear from them all their earthly comforts, and fill their souls with the most exquisite anguish; and without sending them to hell, he can make their sufferings ten thousand times greater than all the pleasures of sin. Nay, he can cloud their characters with so dark a veil, that his people shall be ready to consider them as hypocrites and apostates. Thus he will set them up as beacons, to warn others of the rocks on which they split. And though many by their falls and miseries will be taught to watch and pray against temptation: yet they will be oppressed by the painful reflection, that multitudes by their crimes will be prejudiced, and hardened in infidelity and ungodliness, to their everlasting destruction. Out of this horrible pit none can escape, but by deep humiliation, earnest cries for mercy, patient submission to correction, and renewed conversion unto God through Jesus Christ. The heaviest sorrows, when they have these effects, will prove most precious favours: the comfort and strength of such humble penitents shall in due time be renewed, and their cruel enemies finally disappointed. Yet even in this case, the chastening rod may pursue them to the grave. But having obtained pardon, and the hope of dying in peace and going to glory; they can desire to live for no other purpose, than to wipe off, if possible, the blot which they have cast upon the gospel, and to take vengeance (so to speak) upon Satan and his cause, for the injury which they have sustained; and with their dying lips, or in their dying moments, to render some service to the church of God. And indeed some who have disgraced the gospel, and rejoiced the hearts of his enemies, have afterwards been so deeply humbled, and have closed their lives in such a manner, as hath more than counterbalanced all, and turned the triumphings of wicked men into confusion.—Successful villany will soon be punished: and not only the prayers of the church, but the intercession of Christ himself, will eventually ensure the destruction of those who treacherously, cruelly, and impenitently hate and persecute his servants. How then can they escape destruction? May God help us to walk humbly and watchfully; to abstain from fleshly lusts, and avoid the beginnings of evil; and to beware of the subtlety of Satan and his agents, and the deceitfulness of our own hearts. And may our unreserved love and entire dependence be placed on the divine Saviour. He conquered by dying, and rose to triumph: and by his power all his true people shall conquer and triumph also. Here they must live mingled with the wicked, and die outwardly in the same manner: but they have a Friend to receive the departing souls, and a place in heaven prepared for them. Their bodies may or may not be buried together with those of the wicked; but they shall certainly be separated at the resurrection of the dead: the one "shall go away into everlasting punishment," and the other "into life eternal."

NOTES.

CHAP. XVII. V. 1. The sacred historian had, in the preceding chapters, brought down the narrative to the times of Eli, who is thought to have been contemporary with Samson: but in the subsequent chapters he records some transactions, which seem to have taken place not many years after the death of Joshua. It is probable, that they occurred before Othniel was raised up to judge Israel; and Phinehas is mentioned, as still living, towards the close of them. (xx. 28.)

V. 2-4. Micah's mother, enraged by the loss of her money, openly imprecated the Divine vengeance upon the thief, if he did not restore it, declaring that it was devoted to God by a solemn vow for the benefit of her son; and he, having stolen it, was affrighted by this curse, disclosed the theft, and restored the money. (Note, Prov. xxviii. 24.) Thus he obtained her blessing, such as it was. In consequence, two hundred shekels were expended in making two images; and perhaps, the remaining nine hundred shekels, in preparation for the idolatrous worship.

V. 5. An house of gods. Or of God. It is probable, that Micah purposed to worship the God of Israel; but he ignorantly imagined, that, having appointed his son to be a priest, he might in this manner serve God as acceptably, as by going up to the tabernacle, and more conveniently. Thus idolatry seems to have been first openly set up in Israel, by Micah and his mother. (Marg. Ref. Note, Ex. xx. 4, 5. xxxii. 2-6. 1 Kings, xii. 26-33. Hos. viii. 14.)

V. 6. Either there was no judge at that time, or he did not possess sufficient authority to repress idolatry, as a king might have done. (Note, 1.)

7 ¶ And there was a young man out of ^oBeth-lehem-judah, of the family of Judah, who was a Levite, and he sojourned there.

8 And the man ^pdeparted out of the city from Beth-lehem-judah, to sojourn where he could find a place: and he came to mount Ephraim, to the house of Micah, as ^qhe journeyed.

9 And Micah said unto him, Whence comest thou? And he said unto him, I am a Levite of Beth-lehem-judah, and I go to sojourn where I may find a place.

10 And Micah said unto him, Dwell with me, and be unto me ^ra father and a priest, ^sand I will give thee ten shekels of silver by the year, and ^ta suit of apparel, and thy victuals. So the Levite went in.

11 And the Levite was content to dwell with the man; and the young man was unto him as one of his sons.

12 And Micah ^uconsecrated the Levite; and the young man became ^vhis priest, and was in the house of Micah.

13 Then said Micah, ^wNow know I that the LORD will do me good, seeing I have a Levite to my priest.

CHAP. XVIII.

The Danites send five men to seek an inheritance for them, 1, 2. Meeting with Micah's Levite, they consult him, and are encouraged to proceed, 3-6. They search Laish, and bring back an encouraging report, 7-10. Six hundred men are sent to surprise the place, 11-13. They rob Micah of his idols, and entice away his priest, 14-21. Micah pursues them, but is frightened back by threats, 22-26. They take Laish, and call it Dan, 27-29. They set up idolatry; and Micah's Levite, who was called Jonathan, and his sons, after him, become the priests, 30, 31.

IN those days there was ^xno king in Israel: and in those days ^ythe tribe of the Danites sought them an inheritance to dwell in; ^zfor unto that day all their inheritance had not fallen unto them among the tribes of Israel.

2 And the children of Dan sent of their family five men from their coasts, ^a*men of valour, from ^bZorah, and from Eshtaol, ^cto spy out the land, and to search it; and they said unto them, Go, search the land: who, when they came to ^dmount Ephraim, to the house of Micah, they lodged there.

This seems to intimate, that there were kings when the history was written; and implies, that nothing can be more pernicious to a people, than to be left without coercive authority. (Notes, xviii. 7. xix. 1. Rom. xiii. 1-5.)

V. 7, 8. This man's father was a Levite, but by marriage he was allied to the tribe of Judah, and so had been a sojourner at Bethlehem. But he left that place, to seek some other situation. Perhaps, in those quiet times, the tithes were not paid very regularly; yet it can hardly be supposed, that a Levite of good character was constrained, from mere want, to ramble like a vagabond. He seems to have been a man of an unsettled disposition, who did not choose to be under the control of the priests.

V. 10-13. The proposals of Micah do not seem to have been very advantageous: but the Levite thought the situation honourable, and a kind of preferment; especially as Micah spoke of his being a father and priest. Thus he was induced to intrude into the sacerdotal office; and Micah presumed to consecrate him. (Notes, 2 Chr. xii. 13-17.) And so satisfied was Micah with what he had done, that he deemed himself sure of the Lord's blessing, on that account: for, it seems he deemed the priesthood of his son informal. But instead of having now done better, he had added to all his other crimes, that of tempting a Levite to act as a priest, and to commit idolatry. (Notes, John xvi. 1-3. Acts xxvi. 9-11.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Old age will not wean the heart from love to worldly objects; and when men have lost their relish for other sinful indulgences, avarice frequently acquires double force: but every idol is liable to be torn from them, and their inordinate love increases their grief and resentment for the loss of it.—The curse causeless hurts only the person who vents it: yet when children rob their parents, they may expect from them a curse instead of a blessing, and in consequence the displeasure of God. Confession and restitution, though attendants on true repentance, do not always imply it. (Note, Matt. xxvii. 3-5.)—Those parents who have not, either by their instructions or examples, taught their children their duty to God, but have been their tempters to ungodliness, cannot reasonably expect that they should perform their duty to them.—Riches are seldom made a good use of; indeed they are commonly idolized, either in themselves, or in those things which proud and sensual men purchase with them.—Men naturally love their own inventions in religion, being more flattering to pride, and indulgent to their sloth and lusts, than the appointments of God; and the liberality of superstitious people often shames the niggardliness of the professors of true religion.—They, who once deviate from the rule of the sacred

NOTES.

CHAP. XVIII. V. 1. The tribe of Dan had its lot within that at first assigned to Judah, and near to the Philistines; so that, through their own neglect or cowardice, and concurrent causes, they had been in part kept out of possession of it; and were therefore greatly straitened at this time. (Note, ii. 35. Josh. xix. 40-48.)

V. 4. He hired me. (Note, xvii. 10-13. Marg. Ref.)

V. 5, 6. It does not appear that the Danites had consulted the Lord by his high priest, about their intended enterprize: but when the spies met with this Levite, whom they had known in his former rambles, and were informed by him that he was become a priest, they bethought themselves of enquiring by him; in which their ignorance and inattention were lamentably great.—The Levite, it is probable, having gone through his form, answered them, according to their inclinations, in the language of piety: and his words being verified by the event, raised the reputation of the oracle, and sanctioned the idolatry.—Thus all the mistakes and lies of fortune-tellers, monthly prognosticators, and other pretended prophets, are overlooked or soon forgotten, because they sometimes happen to conjecture right; and these random guesses raise their credit with the ignorant and credulous.

V. 7-10. Laish, or Leshem, lay in the northern extremity of Canaan, but within the boundaries of the promised land; and perhaps it had been originally allotted to the Danites, in addition to their too contracted inheritance. But the Israelites so neglected to prosecute their victories, that the Canaanites despised them: and this people, abiding unmolested in a plentiful country, had no magistrates, and were not secured by walls, troops, or alliances, but every one lived according to his own inclination, without either fear or shame!—(Marg. Ref.)

V. 11, 12. So small a company as six hundred men out of this large tribe, (Num. xxvi. 42, 43;) unassisted by their brethren, marching on this enter-

13 And they passed thence unto 'mount Ephraim, and came unto the house of Micah.

14 ¶ Then answered the five men that went to spy out the country of Laish, and said unto their brethren, Do ye know that there is in these houses an ephod, and teraphim, and a graven image, and a molten image? Now therefore consider what ye have to do.

15 And they turned thitherward, and came to the house of the young man the Levite, even unto the house of Micah, and saluted him.

16 And the six hundred men appointed with their weapons of war, which were of the children of Dan, stood by the entering of the gate.

17 And the five men that went to spy out the land went up, and came in thither, and took the graven image, and the ephod, and the teraphim, and the molten image: and the priest stood in the entering of the gate with the six hundred men that were appointed with weapons of war.

18 And these went into Micah's house, and fetched the carved image, the ephod, and the teraphim, and the molten image. Then said the priest unto them, What do ye?

19 And they said unto him, Hold thy peace, lay thine hand upon thy mouth, and go with us, and be to us a father and a priest: is it better for thee to be a priest unto the house of one man, or that thou be a priest unto a tribe and a family in Israel?

20 And the priest's heart was glad, and he took the ephod, and the teraphim, and the graven image, and went in the midst of the people.

21 So they turned and departed, and put the little ones, and the cattle, and the carriage, before them.

22 ¶ And when they were a good way from the house of Micah, the men that were in the houses near prize, manifested how regardless the Israelites were of the public cause, and how intent upon personal indulgence. Yet this small troop, in confidence of success, took their families with them. (21.) "Mahaneh-dan" signifies the camp of Dan. (Note xiii. 25.)

V. 13—26. The Levite's answer to the spies, having been apparently verified by the event; they seem to have concluded, that he would be a valuable acquisition, if they could induce him to accompany them; especially if they could also take Micah's images, ephod, and teraphim with them: and at their instance, the Danites were led to form a plan for that purpose. They were going to seek a settlement at a great distance from Shiloh; and, it may well be thought, were desirous of excusing themselves from the long journeys, which attending on the worship at the sanctuary would require: and here was a religion, a priest, and an oracle, ready prepared for their purpose. They were evidently very ignorant; and they absurdly concluded, that they should, by taking these, secure the presence and favour of God, in their expedition and settlement. (Note, xvii. 13.) They coveted Micah's house of gods; and, supposing that he could not be induced by fair means to part with them, they determined to plunder his temple; and after they had effected this, they found no difficulty in engaging his priest to accompany them, by a prospect of far better preferment than he then possessed. They perhaps supposed the piety of their motives, and the goodness of their end, would justify the means: but it was a base robbery of Micah, aggravated by the Levite's ingratitude, and their violence and menaces; but was a proper introduction to their subsequent idolatry and apostasy.—Micah, though ignorant and immoral, yet deemed his religion his chief treasure; and when the Danites had taken from him that in which he had gloried, and on account of which he was confident "the Lord would do him good; he counted himself to have lost all, and intimated that they might as well have taken all the rest of his substance! Yet his zeal for his images did not induce him to venture his life in attempting to recover them. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 30, 31. Jonathan was the name of this Levite; but it is not known of what family he was; for, Gershom and Manasseh were names common in Israel. The tradition of the Jews, that he was the grandson of Moses, is in all respects very improbable.—As Dan lay on the northern extremity of the land; none of the judges were able to destroy this idolatry, which continued "all the time that the house of God was in Shiloh." This proves that the captivity here mentioned, was that of the ark, by the Philistines, in the time of Eli. It may be supposed that Samuel or David put an end to it. (Marg. Ref.) For there is no proof that the Philistines destroyed the city or temple, as some have conjectured.—Jeroboam set up the worship of the golden calf in this very city. (1 Kings xii. 28—30.) to Micah's house were gathered together, and overtook the children of Dan.

23 And they cried unto the children of Dan: and they turned their faces, and said unto Micah, What aileth thee, that thou comest with such a company?

24 And he said, Ye have taken away my gods which I made, and the priest, and ye are gone away; and what have I more? and what is this that ye say unto me, What aileth thee?

25 And the children of Dan said unto him, Let not thy voice be heard among us, lest angry fellows run upon thee, and thou lose thy life, with the lives of thy household.

26 And the children of Dan went their way: and when Micah saw that they were too strong for him, he turned and went back unto his house.

27 ¶ And they took the things which Micah had made, and the priest which he had, and came unto Laish, unto a people that were at quiet and secure: and they smote them with the edge of the sword, and burnt the city with fire.

28 And there was no deliverer, because it was far from Zidon, and they had no business with any man; and it was in the valley that lieth by Beth-rehob: and they built a city, and dwelt therein.

29 And they called the name of the city Dan, after the name of Dan their father, who was born unto Israel: howbeit the name of the city was Laish at the first.

30 ¶ And the children of Dan set up the graven image: and Jonathan, the son of Gershom, the son of Manasseh, he and his sons were priests to the tribe of Dan, until the day of the captivity of the land.

31 And they set them up Micah's graven image, which he made, all the time that the house of God was in Shiloh.

distant and future, would not be neglected; and the labour, danger, and self-denial, which lie in the way, would no longer affright or deter them from seeking it.—Whatever valour, wisdom, or diligence we employ in any undertaking, we shall not be eventually successful, if we forget to consult the Lord, and seek his assistance and blessing.—Ungodly men generally find out those of their own character in every place; and an ignorant and erroneous conscience often meets with some superstition or false religion, apparently coined on purpose for it.—Success does not prove our undertakings pleasing to God, any more than a fortunate conjecture proves a man a prophet: for, the former is sometimes sent as a curse; and the latter is permitted, in order to punish those who despise and hate the truth.—We ought to be thankful for good government, and for magistrates who put men to shame for their crimes; without which they can scarcely be prevented from destroying each other. The blessings also of liberty and prosperity call for gratitude: yet when they produce sloth, self-indulgence, and carnal security, they indicate approaching destruction.—Worldly men, finding "no want of any thing that is in the earth," do not consider the disadvantages which they lie under with respect to their souls: for if their situations or occupations are not consistent with true religion, they can either do without any religion, or frame one suited to their convenience.

V. 11—31. They that are destitute of the fear of God, will seize on whatever they covet, when they possess power, and can do it with impunity: for, justice, gratitude, and the rights of hospitality form but feeble barriers in their way. Indeed, injustice and idolatry consist well with each other; for, Satan loves "robbery for burnt-offering," though "God abhors it."—They who do wrong are commonly much offended, if the injured party dares to complain or remonstrate: and thus theft is frequently an introduction to murder, through the combined influence of avarice, pride, and malignity. But those, who rob God of his glory, and tempt others to iniquity, deserve to be plundered by their fellow-creatures; and they, who trust in unprincipled persons, need not wonder if they are deceived.—Mercenary priests in every age are ready to go very disgraceful lengths to obtain preferment, and even to put up their services for sale to the highest bidder: while however they eagerly seize upon the proposed advantage, let them remember, that they are increasing guilt, shame, mischief, and condemnation.—When the removal of idols weans the heart from idolatry, the anguish of parting will be made up by the consequent advantage: but wretched are they, who are deprived of their idols, and left under the power of the idolatrous affection! Thus death will rend men from all those worldly objects, on which they have placed their hearts: their gods will be for ever gone, and "what will they have more?" But the case of self-confident hypocrites, when disappointed of all their towering hopes, will be peculiarly dreadful.—Happy they, who renounce all for Christ, and in him have the Lord for their God! no enemies or changes can take away their portion, or their comfort. But if we would have this felicity, we must

CHAP. XIX.

A Levite's concubine commits adultery, and returns to her father, 1, 2. The Levite goes to take her back, and is kindly entertained, 3-9. They depart at a late hour, and lodge at Gibeah, being entertained by an old man of Ephraim, who sojourned there, 10-21. The men of the city beset the house, with a vile intent; the Levite yields up his concubine, who is abused till she dies, 22-28. He divides her into twelve parts, and sends one to each tribe, 29, 30.

AND it came to pass in those days, "when there was no king in Israel, that there was a certain Levite, sojourning on the side of ^bmount Ephraim, who took to him ^aa concubine out of ^cBeth-lehem-judah.

2 And his concubine ^dplayed the whore against him, and went away from him unto her father's house to Beth-lehem-judah, and was there ^efour whole months.

3 And her husband arose, and ^fwent after her, to ^gspeak ^hfriendly unto her, and to bring her again, having ⁱhis servant with him, and a couple of asses: and she brought him into her father's house; and, when the father of the damsel saw him, he rejoiced to meet him.

4 And his father-in-law, the damsel's father, retained him; and he abode with him three days: so they did eat and drink, and lodged there.

5 ¶ And it came to pass on the fourth day, when they arose early in the morning, that he rose up to depart; and the damsel's father said unto his son-in-law, ^jComfort thine heart ^kwith a morsel of bread, and afterward go your way.

6 And they sat down, and did eat and drink both of them together: for the damsel's father had said unto the man, Be content, I pray thee, and tarry all night, and ^llet thine heart be merry.

7 And when the man rose up to depart, his father-in-law urged him; therefore he lodged there again.

8 And he arose early in the morning on the fifth day to depart: and the damsel's father said, Comfort thine heart, I pray thee. And they tarried ^muntil afternoon, and they did eat both of them.

9 And when the man rose up to depart, he and his concubine, and his servant; his father-in-law, the damsel's father, said unto him, Behold now, the day ⁿdraweth towards evening, I pray you tarry all night: behold, the ^oday groweth to an end, lodge here, that thine heart may be merry: and ^pto-morrow get you early on your way, that thou mayest go ^qhome.

10 But the man would not tarry that night, but he rose up and departed, and came ^rover against ^sJebus, (which is Jerusalem,) and there were with him two asses saddled; his concubine also was with him.

11 And when they were by Jebus, the day was far spent; and the servant said unto his master, Come, I pray thee, and let us turn in into this city of ^tthe Jebusites, and lodge in it.

12 And his master said unto him, We will not turn aside hither into the city of a stranger, that is not of the children of Israel; we will pass over to Gibeah.

13 And he said unto his servant, Come, and let us draw near to one of these places to lodge all night, in ^uGibeah, or in Ramah.

14 And they passed on, and went their way, and the sun went down upon them when they were by Gibeah which belongeth to Benjamin.

15 And they turned aside thither, to go in, and to lodge in Gibeah: and, when he went in, he sat him down in a street of the city; for there was ^vno man that took them into his house to lodging.

16 ¶ And, behold, there came an old man from ^wthis work out of the field at even, which was also of mount Ephraim; and he sojourned in Gibeah, but the men of the place were Benjamites.

17 And when he had lifted up his eyes, he saw a wayfaring man in the street of the city; and the old man said, ^xWhither goest thou? and whence comest thou?

18 And he said unto him, We are passing from Beth-lehem-judah toward the side of mount Ephraim; from thence am I: and I went to Beth-lehem-judah, but I am now going to ^ythe house of the Lord: and there is no man that ^zreceiveth me to house.

19 Yet there is both straw and provender for our asses: and there is bread and wine also for me, and for thy handmaid, and for the young man which is with thy servants: there is no want of any thing.

23 And ^hthe man, the master of the house, went out unto them, and said unto them, Nay, my brethren, nay, I pray you, do not so wickedly; seeing that this man is come into mine house, ⁱdo not this folly.

24 Behold, here is my daughter, a maiden, and his concubine, ^jthem I will bring out now, and ^khumble ye them, and do with them what seemeth good unto you: but unto this man do not ^lso vile a thing.

25 But the men would not hearken to him: so the man took his concubine; and brought her forth unto them; and they ^mknew her, ⁿand abused her all the night until the morning: and when the day began to spring, they let her go.

carefully attend to the word and ordinances of God, and be afraid of every deviation from our perfect rule: "for behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth!"

NOTES.

CHAP. XIX, V. 1. The events, recorded in this and the following chapters, occurred while Phinehas the son of Eleazar was high priest, and therefore could not take place very long after the death of Joshua: (xx. 28.)—There was then no king in Israel, nor any judge who exercised authority over the people in general: and the want of a regular civil government produced many fatal effects, notwithstanding the advantages enjoyed by the Israelites in all other things.

V. 2. This woman seems to have been the Levite's only wife; who was called his concubine, because not admitted to all the privileges of the conjugal relation: but her father is called his father-in-law, and he is called her husband. (3, 4.)—Having been guilty of adultery, she fled from him to escape punishment, or from dread of his resentment.—It is remarkable, that no mention is made of any other Levites in this whole book, except of him who established idolatry at Dan; and of this man, whose concubine proved the occasion almost of extirpation to the tribe of Benjamin, and of great slaughter in the other tribes: I indeed Phinehas the high priest is also named.

V. 3, 4. Perhaps the Levite heard, that his wife repented, and was dejected under conscious guilt, and alarmed lest she should be made a public example. He therefore went and spoke friendly and affectionately to her, and a reconciliation was speedily effected, at which his father-in-law rejoiced.—The Levite's choice seems to have been imprudent, and his affection inordinate; but in other respects his character appears consistent with his profession. (Note, xv. 12.)

V. 12. This conduct of the Levite, in refusing to seek a lodging among idolaters, shews that he was very unlike the Levite of whom we read in the foregoing chapters; and it was proper that he should by his example protest against the disobedience of his people in that respect.

V. 18. Shiloh lay near to the Levite's habitation in mount Ephraim. Either his employment required his attendance at the sanctuary; or he purposed to offer sacrifices, suited to the circumstances of his family, before he returned home.

V. 23-25. (Notes, Gen. xix. 4-9. Mar. Ref.) It seems the men finally refused the Ephraimite's daughter; but at length, attracted by the beauty of 26 Then came the woman in the dawning of the day, and fell down at the door of the man's house where ^hher lord was, till it was light.

27 And her lord rose up in the morning, and opened the doors of the house, and went out to go his way: and, behold, the woman his concubine was fallen down at the door of the house, and her hands were upon the threshold.

28 And he said unto her, Up, and let us be going: ^hbut none answered. Then the man took her up upon an ass, and the man rose up, and gat him unto his place.

29 ¶ And when he was come into his house, he took a knife, and laid hold on his concubine, and ^kdivided her, together ^lwith her bones, into twelve pieces, and sent her into all the coasts of Israel.

30 And it was so, that all that saw it said, There was no such deed done nor seen, from the day that the children of Israel came up out of the land of Egypt unto this day: ^m"consider of it, take advice, and speak your minds."

CHAP. XX.

Israel assembles at Mizpeh, and the Levite states his wrong, 1-7. The assembly resolve to punish the men of Gibeah, 8-11. The Benjamites, when required, refuse to deliver them up, and prepare for war, 12-17. By divine direction Judah goes first to fight with them; yet the Israelites are defeated twice with great loss, 18-25. They humble themselves before God, with fasting and sacrifices, and are promised success, 26-28. They employ a stratagem, and destroy all the tribe of Benjamin, except six hundred men, who flee to the rock Rimmon, 29-48.

THEN ^hall the children of Israel went out, and the congregation was gathered together ^las one man, ^mfrom Dan even to Beer-sheba, ⁿwith the land of Gilead, ^ounto the LORD ^pin Mizpeh.

2 And the chief of all the people, even of all the tribes of Israel, presented themselves in the assembly the Levite's concubine, they went off with her. They thought also of murdering the Levite; perhaps, because he would not at first give up his concubine, and because he resisted their brutal violence. (xx. 5.)

V. 26-30. The justice of God was displayed even by the enormous wickedness of these men: adultery was punishable by death; this woman having committed adultery was about to escape; but in this dreadful manner her iniquity found her out, and she was punished in kind: yet this by no means implies, that she did not repent and find mercy.—It had an inhuman appearance, thus to mangle the dead corpse of this unhappy woman: but it was intended to excite a more general attention, and ^mkeener resentment against so horrible a crime, which called for as tremendous a punishment. (Marg. Ref. Note, 2 Sam. xviii. 5.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-10. Men are seldom fully aware of the consequences of yielding to temptation: and few sins are followed with such fatal and durable effects as adultery. But it becomes ministers, and indeed all Christians, to shew a readiness to forgive and be reconciled, without upbraiding those who have most inexcusably injured them; and to speak comfortably to the penitent, especially when in danger of "being swallowed up of over much sorrow."—External attractions are very deceitful, and often prove an occasion to the possessors, as well as to others, of much sin and misery, nay, of final destruction: thus therefore who are thus distinguished, instead of being vain, have cause to tremble; and should be doubly watchful against temptation, and instant in prayer for the preserving grace of God.—So much depends on the character and behaviour of the ministers of religion, that if they marry with improper persons from corrupt motives, they will be sure to find either a snare or an affliction.—Kindness is due to those who behave with affection in the several relations of life; but every man hath his proper place and duty which require his attendance: pressing importunities may therefore be carried too far, and induce imprudent and prejudicial concessions. For, it is always advisable to set about our work early; and what we call time enough generally proves too little.

V. 11-30. How changeable are human affairs! Our brightest prospects are often unexpectedly clouded, and the deepest calamities suddenly overtake us. We should therefore learn to moderate our affections, to lower our hopes as to this world, and to stand prepared for the worst.—They who teach others, should put themselves to any inconvenience to enforce their precepts by their own example.—More inhumanity and villany may be found among degenerate professors of Christianity than among infidels; and in general where we expect the most kindness, we meet with the greatest injuries, that we may learn to "cease from man."—An unfeeling disregard to the wants of others generally accompanies sensuality and ungoverned lusts; and there are numbers who imitate the example of those, whose shameful crimes have been recorded in their punishment, to one who copies the examples of hospitality, integrity and piety, mentioned with commendation in the Scriptures.—When men have cast off the fear of God, they are frequently given up to their own vile lusts, even to disgrace human nature, and to exceed the very beasts in brutishness; and Israelites especially, who rebel against the light, and grow hardened under the means of grace, will become as abandoned as the inhabitants of Sodom, and vastly more inexcusable.—When iniquity becomes generally triumphant, few will dare to protest against it; and it is safer to venture into a den of lions than into such recesses of iniquity. Yet in the worst of times there are some who venture scorn and reproach, in being kind to the servants of God for his sake, and who do not grudge the expense of hospitality; for, while idleness and sensual lusts waste a man's substance, honest labour and frugality support the expense of being liberal. But such persons live as strangers in this world, and must expect to be abused by their wicked neighbours, except when an equitable government affords them benign protection.—In imitating the good actions of God's people, men are very liable to be betrayed into their faults, against which they need be doubly circumspect; and an unbelieving policy often induces them to make unwarrantable concessions; but committing sin to avoid danger, will generally involve them in still greater difficulties.—The righteous Lord permits transgressors to execute his just vengeance on one another; and if the scene described in this chapter appears exceedingly horrible, what will be the discoveries of the day of judgment? Yet such is human nature! And though few believe the humbling truth, the seeds of all this wickedness are in every human heart! and if we have not committed such abominations in our lives, we owe the more gratitude to the Lord, for the restraints of his providence, or the influences of his grace. While, therefore, it behoves those in authority to "consider, take advice, and speak their minds," by what means crimes may best be prevented by the salutary punishment of criminals; we may each of us consider, how to escape from the wrath to come, to mortify the sins of our own hearts, to resist Satan's temptations, and to avoid the pollutions that are in the world; and how we may best be prepared for our temporal calamities, and extract benefits from them.

NOTES.

CHAP. XX. V. 1, 2. No mention is here made of any judge, or great council of the nation; though it is generally thought that the council of seventy elders subsisted at this time. Each tribe also appears to have had its own internal government, (to which the Levite sent his message, xix. 29.) and by their united determination, the principal persons and the people were gathered together in arms, to the amount of 400,000 men. Doubtless the Benjamites were summoned also, but they would not come; and no doubt they were offended at the interposition of the other tribes. Mizpeh here mentioned, (for there were several places of that name,) was very near Shiloh; and perhaps the encampment of so vast a multitude might be more conveniently formed there than at Shiloh: but they "were gathered together before the LORD at Mizpeh," and not far from the tabernacle; yet it seems that Phinehas, the high priest, was only applied to officially, to consult the LORD by Urim and Thummim about such questions as they proposed to him: and indeed, considering his wisdom, zeal, and experience, he appears to have been greatly neglected by this new generation of Israel. (28. Notes, Num. xxv. 6-13. Josh. xxii. 12-33.)

V. 8-11. The abhorrence of the crime here expressed, and the determination of the Israelites to punish the criminals, were very proper; but they seem to have acted with too much precipitation and resentment. There were 12 ¶ And the tribes of Israel ^{sent men through all} the tribe of Benjamin, saying, What wickedness is this that is done among you?

13 Now therefore ^{deliver us} the men, ^{the children} of Belial, which ^{are} in Gibeah, that we may put them to death, and ^{put away evil from Israel}. But the children of Benjamin ^{would not hearken to the voice} of their brethren the children of Israel:

14 But the children of Benjamin gathered themselves together out of the cities unto Gibeah, ^{to go out to battle against the children of Israel}.

15 And the children of Benjamin were numbered at that time out of the cities, ^{twenty and six thousand men that drew sword, beside the inhabitants of Gibeah, which were numbered seven hundred chosen men}.

16 Among all this people ^{there were} seven hundred chosen men ^{left-handed}: every one could ^{sling stones} at an hair-breadth, and not miss.

17 And the men of Israel, beside Benjamin, were numbered ^{four hundred thousand men that drew sword}; all these ^{were} men of war.

18 ¶ And the children of Israel arose, and went up to the ^{house of God}, and ^{asked counsel of God}, and said, Which of us shall go up first to the battle against the children of Benjamin? And the LORD said, ^{Judah shall go up first}.

19 And the children of Israel ^{rose up in the morning}, and encamped against Gibeah.

20 And the men of Israel went out to battle against Benjamin, and the men of Israel put themselves in array to fight against them at Gibeah.

21 And the children of Benjamin came forth out of Gibeah, and ^{destroyed down to the ground of the Israelites that day} twenty and two thousand men.

22 ¶ And the people the men of Israel ^{encouraged themselves}, and set their battle again in array, in the place where they put themselves in array the first day.

23 (And the children of Israel went up, and ^{wept}

"with them also sins against the LORD:" the abomination of Gibeah was both an evidence and effect of national degeneracy; and it called for deep humiliation and lamentation, that such wickedness had been wrought in Israel, as well as for indignation against the criminals. They ought to have begun with repentance and reformation; with solemn sacrifices, and earnest supplications. This was required in other wars, much more in such a war as this. (Note, Deut. xxiii. 9—14.) No absolute resolution should have been made till these things had been thoroughly attended to; or till enquiry had been made of the Lord, what he would have them to do on so melancholy an occasion. They were not commanded to levy war against their brethren, except for idolatry; (Notes, Deut. xiii. 13—18. Josh. xxii. 12—16;) and they had attempted nothing against the idolatrous Danites; whose conduct, though less destructive to the peace of society, more immediately struck at the honour of God and the interests of religion. (Note, xviii. 30, 31.) Not attending to these previous duties, but going forth to battle under the guilt of their own sins; confiding in their superior numbers, and the goodness of their cause; and elated with self-preference, on account of their exemption from this crime, and their zeal to punish it, they met at first with severe rebukes; and the Benjamites were employed to chastise them, before they executed the vengeance of God upon the Benjamites, for their more atrocious wickedness. These observations may help to explain the difficulty, which strikes the reader at the first perusal of this chapter, how it was, that with so good a cause, and such ardent zeal, they should be for a time unsuccessful, and suffer such heavy losses. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 12—14. The conduct of the Israelites was very equitable in this demand; but perhaps the rulers of Gibeah ought previously to have been applied to, to have delivered up all the criminals to justice. The refusal of the Benjamites, however, and their protection of those who had committed this horrible wickedness, because they were of their own tribe, prove them to have been deeply corrupted, and (all their advantages considered) as ripe for Divine vengeance as the inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah had been. (Notes, Hos. ix. 9, 10. x. 9—11.)—Confiding in their own valour and military skill, they seem to have first prepared for battle, in this unequal contest with such superior numbers. (15. 17.)

V. 16. Left-handed. Whether these men could use both hands, as some think, or only the left hand, they would discharge the stones in a direction against which their opponents were not upon their guard, and thus do the greater execution. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 18. This is the only transaction in this whole book, in which express mention is made of the tabernacle, ark, priests, and sacrifices; though they had before the LORD until even, and asked counsel of the LORD, saying, Shall I go up again to battle against the children of Benjamin my brother? And the LORD said, Go up against him.)

24 And the children of Israel came near against the children of Benjamin the second day.

25 And Benjamin went forth against them out of Gibeah the second day, and ^{destroyed down to the ground of the children of Israel again} eighteen thousand men; all these drew the sword.

26 ¶ Then all the children of Israel and all the people went up, and came unto the house of God, and ^{wept}, and sat there before the LORD, and fasted that day until even, and offered burnt-offerings and peace-offerings before the LORD.

27 And the children of Israel ^{enquired of the LORD}, in ^{those days} for ^{the ark of the covenant of God was there} in those days;

28 And ^{Phinehas}, the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron, ^{stood before it in those days}, saying, Shall I yet again go out to battle against the children of Benjamin my brother, or shall I cease? And the LORD said, ^{Go up}; for to-morrow I will deliver them into thine hand.

29 ¶ And Israel set ^{liers-in-wait} round about Gibeah.

30 And the children of Israel went up against the children of Benjamin on the third day, and put themselves in array against Gibeah, as at other times.

31 And the children of Benjamin went out against the people, ^{and were drawn away from the city}; and they began to ^{smite of the people, and kill}, as at other times, in the highways, of which one goeth up to ^{the house of God}, and the other to ^{Gibeah in the field}, about ^{thirty men of Israel}.

32 And the children of Benjamin said, They ^{are smitten down before us as at the first}. But the children of Israel said, ^{Let us flee}, and draw them from the city unto the highways.

been instituted in so express and particular a manner! (Note, i. 1.)—The Israelites, however, did not on this occasion enquire of the Lord, whether they should war against the Benjamites or not; or what reformation, humiliation, or sacrifices, should precede the lamentable service; but they took it for granted that they ought to go up, and that they were worthy to be employed, and sufficient to succeed; and so they merely enquired which tribe should have the precedency. Accordingly they received an answer to this question, which neither authorized their undertaking, nor promised success in it.—In every instance of this kind, the pre-eminence was uniformly given to Judah; with reference, no doubt, to the Messiah, who descended from this tribe. (Notes, Gen. xlix. 8—10.)

V. 20—25. The people were much afflicted at the severe rebuke which they met with on this occasion, and affected with a sense of their sin, as having brought it upon them: and they accordingly made their enquiry more particular than before. But they were not duly humbled: and therefore, though the Lord commanded them to go up to battle, they were again put to the worst, and lost so many men, that the whole number slain in the two encounters amounted to many more than all the fighting men of the tribe of Benjamin! This was a public rebuke for national crimes, and shewed, that though it was their duty to punish the offenders, they had not gone about it in the proper manner, and in a proper dependence on the Lord.—Their neglect of punishing idolatry in the Danites, while they were so zealous to punish the lewdness of the Benjamites, is mentioned by some Jewish writers as the cause of these disasters, and with great justice. (Note, 1 Sam. xv. 15.)

V. 26—28. At length the people were convinced of their error; and instead of murmuring, or questioning the divine authority of the answers which they had received, as unhumiliated hearts would have been prone to do; they blamed themselves alone: and by weeping, praying, fasting, sacrifices, and particular enquiries of the Lord, conducted the solemn business, as it should originally have been undertaken. (Notes, 8—11. 2 Sam. vi. 3—13. 1 Chr. xv. 12—14.) All the company seems at this time to have met at Shiloh, and to have kept a day of fasting and prayer, with great earnestness and solemnity: thus their losses proved eventually blessings, by subserving the cause of true religion. Accordingly they received from the Lord a more particular answer, and a promise of success. In the mean time the victories of the Benjamites increased their insolence, and hardened them to their destruction.—Phinehas. (Notes, 1, 2. xvii. 1.)

V. 29—42. (Notes, Josh. viii. 7—28. Marg. Ref.) The LORD smote, &c. (35.) Though the numbers of the Israelites were vastly superior to those of Benjamin; though their stratagem was well laid and executed, and the battle

33 And all the men of Israel rose up out of their place, and put themselves in array at Baal-tamar; and the liars in wait of Israel came forth out of their places, even out of the meadows of Gibeah.

34 And there came against Gibeah ten thousand chosen men out of all Israel, and the battle was sore: but they knew not that evil was near them.

35 And the LORD smote Benjamin before Israel; and the children of Israel destroyed of the Benjamites that day twenty and five thousand and an hundred men: all these drew the sword.

36 So the children of Benjamin saw that they were smitten: for the men of Israel gave place to the Benjamites, because they trusted unto the liars in wait which they had set beside Gibeah.

37 And the liars in wait hasted, and rushed upon Gibeah: and the liars in wait drew themselves along, and smote all the city with the edge of the sword.

38 Now there was an appointed sign between the men of Israel and the liars in wait, that they should make a great flame with smoke rise up out of the city.

39 And when the men of Israel retired in the battle, Benjamin began to smite and kill of the men of Israel about thirty persons; for they said, Surely they are smitten down before us, as in the first battle.

40 But when the flame began to arise up out of the city with a pillar of smoke, the Benjamites looked behind them, and, behold, the flame of the city ascended up to heaven.

41 And when the men of Israel turned again, the men of Benjamin were amazed: for they saw that evil was come upon them.

42 Therefore they turned their backs before the men of Israel unto the way of the wilderness; but the battle overtook them: and them which came out of the cities they destroyed in the midst of them.

43 Thus they inclosed the Benjamites round about, and chased them, and trode them down with ease, over against Gibeah toward the sun-rising.

44 And there fell of Benjamin eighteen thousand men: all these were men of valour.

45 And they turned, and fled toward the wilderness unto the rock of Rimmon: and they gleaned of them in the highways five thousand men; and pursued hard after them unto Gidom, and slew two thousand men of them.

46 So that all which fell that day of Benjamin were twenty and five thousand men that drew the sword: all these were men of valour.

47 But six hundred men turned, and fled into the wilderness unto the rock Rimmon, and abode in the rock Rimmon four months.

48 And the men of Israel turned again upon the children of Benjamin, and smote them with the edge of the sword, as well the men of every city, as the beast, and all that came to hand: also they set on fire all the cities that they came to.

CHAP. XXI.

The people lament over Benjamin; are in difficulty, having sworn not to give a wife to any of that tribe; and enquire after such as had not joined them, having sworn also to put them to death, 1—7. On that account they destroy the inhabitants of Jabesh-Gilead, except four hundred virgins, whom they give to that number of the remaining Benjamites, 8—15. The elders consult how to find wives for the rest, consistently with their oath, and by their advice they carry off the virgins who danced at Shiloh, 16—23. The people separate, and return home, 24, 25.

NOW the men of Israel had sworn in Mizpeh, saying, There shall not any of us give his daughter unto Benjamin to wife.

2 And the people came to the house of God, and abode there till even before God, and lifted up their voices, and wept sore;

bravely fought; yet the inspired historian ascribes the victory to the Lord as entirely as if he had smitten the Benjamites by miracle. (Notes, Josh. x. 9, 10. Judg. iv. 15.)

V. 43—48. When the number slain, and that of those who escaped, are put together, it comes short of the numbers first mentioned, by three hundred men; (35;) who may be supposed to have been slain in the foregoing engagements: and it seems that the whole tribe of Benjamin, with all their women and children, were destroyed, except six hundred men. (xxi. 10—16.) This indiscriminate slaughter cannot be vindicated: for none but Canaanites, and idolatrous cities in Israel, were to be thus punished. But the people being actuated by vehement indignation, had hastily devoted the whole tribe, by a solemn curse, to utter destruction: and the Lord was pleased to permit these dire transactions, as an awful example to future ages, of his vengeance against those who commit, and those who countenance and protect others in such abominations.—But yet it did not prevent the growth of ungodliness in Israel; so that “the battle in Gibeah against the workers of iniquity did not overtake them.” (Hos. x. 9—11.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—25. We are again called to contemplate the fatal effects of indulged lusts, and taught to mortify every sinful inclination.—Indignation against sin, zeal, promptitude, self-denial, unanimity, and resolution in bringing criminals to justice; when united with a careful investigation of facts and circumstances, that the innocent may not be involved with the guilty, are very commendable: yet repentance of sins, personal and national, with fruits meet for repentance, a dependence on the mercy of God in Jesus Christ for forgiveness and grace, and an application to him for direction and success, are indispensably necessary to ensure his acceptance and assistance.—Nature can abhor the crimes of others; but grace teaches us to loathe our own. Nature prompts us to punish others with severity; grace inclines us to exercise severity against our own lusts, and tenderness toward the persons of others.—If we attempt, however, to execute wrath upon offenders, or even to reprove and reform them, while we are under the guilt of unrepented and allowed sin in our hearts and lives; it is merciful in God to rebuke us sharply for our hypocrisy, and not to leave us to be hardened through impunity; nor can we reasonably hope to be useful to others without our own sins are pardoned: (Notes, Matt. vii. 1—5. Rom. ii. 1—3. 17—24.)—We should not judge of the final event of things, unless we can determine it by the divine law. And if we are baffled in our endeavours, (though honestly meant and zealously persisted in,) to serve the cause of God; we ought not to infer that we should desist, or content ourselves in our ill success: but we are reminded to enquire, whether we have begun our work in the proper manner? whether our private conduct do not blight our public endeavours? whether we have not been precipitate in our measures? whether we have duly adverted to our own character as sinners, and are habitually exercising “repentance towards God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ?” whether we have not failed of humility and tenderness towards others; and, by self-preference and self-confidence, provoked the Lord to leave us experimentally to learn what we are in ourselves, and what we can do without him? Many an honest and zealous endeavour, in a good cause, has attained but little success, for such reasons as these. We should therefore strictly examine ourselves, and be deeply humbled for our sins; praying earnestly, that God “would not condemn us, but shew us wherefore he contendeth with us.”

V. 26—48. Solemn times set apart for fasting and prayer are never more seasonable, than when we are constrained to lament the ill success, which has attended our labours to glorify God and promote his cause, whether as ministers or private Christians. When our failures have this effect, they will promote our success; our very mistakes will be over-ruled to teach us wisdom, and our weakness will prove an occasion of increasing our spiritual strength; Satan, and his most formidable agents will in due time be constrained to give ground; and whatsoever we attempt shall prosper. In the mean time we should thankfully accept of chastisement, and not despair of that success which we at first prematurely expected.—But it is very difficult to temper zeal with tenderness, and boldness with meekness and wisdom: impetuosity hurries us into unwarrantable excesses, or timidity stops short of proper decision. We ought therefore to watch carefully over our own spirits, and to pray continually to be preserved from this “strange fire” in the work of God: and the same considerations should induce us to make candid allowances for those who are betrayed into similar or contrary mistakes.—But “evil pursueth sinners;” their triumphing is short, and increases their hardness and presumption: and how dreadful will be their case, when they shall see destruction coming upon them, without any possibility of escape! Hitherto there is space given for repentance, a refuge provided, mercy proclaimed, and a throne of grace erected: thither let sinners come, and plead the Saviour’s name, and they shall yet be safe and happy. But “how will they escape, who neglect so great salvation?” all things will combine to hasten and enhance their condemnation; especially that of men who live under the light of the gospel. And all, who patronize and delight in the workers of iniquity, will as accomplices share their awful doom.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXI. V. 1. The vehement indignation, excited by the brutal conduct of the men of Gibeah, and the support given them by the tribe of Benjamin, induced the Israelites, without due consideration, to bind themselves by a solemn oath and awful curse, that none of them would give his daughter to wife to any Benjamite. (Notes, 20, 21. xi. 30, 31. 1 Sam. xiv. 24—46. xxv. 21, 22. 39—42. Matt. xiv. 8—11.) They deemed those, who were capable of such vile conduct towards the wife of another man, or of vindicating it, unworthy to be married to any of the daughters of Israel; and thus they ranked them with the Canaanites, and other idolaters! Had this been rigidly adhered to, either the whole tribe must have been extirpated, or the survivors must have violated the law by marrying heathen wives.

V. 2, 3. When the anger and resentment of the people began to subside, and they had time for cool reflection; they bewailed the consequences of their victory, with every expression of vehement sorrow: and they seem even to

3 And said, O LORD God of Israel, 'why is this come to pass in Israel, that there should be to-day one tribe lacking in Israel?

4 And it came to pass on the morrow, that the people 'rose early, and 'built there an altar, and offered burnt-offerings and peace-offerings.

5 And the children of Israel said, Who is there among all the tribes of Israel, that came not up with the congregation unto the LORD? for they had made 'a great oath concerning him that came not up to the LORD to Mizpeh, saying, He shall surely be put to death.

7 How shall we do for wives for them that remain, seeing we have 'sworn by the LORD, that we will not give them of our daughters to wives?

8 ¶ And they said, What one is there of the tribes of Israel that came not up to Mizpeh to the LORD? And, behold, there came none to the camp from 'Jabesh-gilead to the assembly.

9 For the people were numbered, and, behold, there were none of the inhabitants of Jabesh-gilead there.

10 And the congregation sent thither twelve thousand men of the valiantest, and commanded them, saying, 'Go and smite the inhabitants of Jabesh-gilead with the edge of the sword, with the women and the children.

11 And this is the thing that ye shall do, Ye shall utterly destroy 'every male, and every woman that 'hath lain by man.

12 And they found among the inhabitants of Jabesh-gilead four hundred young 'virgins, that had known no man by lying with any male: and they brought them unto the camp to 'Shiloh, which is in the land of Canaan.

13 And the whole congregation sent some to 'speak to the children of Benjamin that were in 'the rock Rimmon, and to 'call peaceably unto them.

14 And Benjamin came again at that time; and they gave them wives, which they had saved alive of the women of Jabesh-gilead: and yet so 'they sufficed them not.

15 And the people 'repented them for Benjamin, because that the LORD had made a breach in the tribes of Israel.

16 ¶ Then the elders of the congregation said, How shall we do for wives for them that remain, seeing the women are destroyed out of Benjamin?

17 And they said, 'There must be 'an inheritance for them that be escaped of Benjamin, that a tribe be not destroyed out of Israel.

18 Howbeit, we may not give them wives of our daughters: for the children of Israel have 'sworn, saying, Cursed be he that giveth a wife to Benjamin.

19 Then they said, Behold, there is 'a feast of the LORD in Shiloh 'yearly, in a place which is 'on the north side of Beth-el, on the east side 'of the highway that goeth up from Beth-el to Shechem, and on the south of Lebonah.

20 Therefore they commanded the children of Benjamin, saying, Go and lie in wait in the vineyards;

21 And see, and, behold, if the daughters of Shiloh come out to 'dance in dances, then come ye out of the vineyards, and catch you every man his wife of the daughters of Shiloh, and go to the land of Benjamin.

22 And it shall be, when their fathers or their brethren come unto us to complain, that we will say unto them, 'Be favourable unto them for our sakes; because we reserved not to 'each man his wife in the war: for ye did not 'give unto them at this time, that ye should be guilty.

23 And the children of Benjamin did so, and took have kept a day of fasting and prayer; yet it is evident that they did not properly repent of their own misconduct, or they would not have acted, as they afterwards did, to the inhabitants of Jabesh-gilead. (Note, 9-12.) If it was likely, that "a tribe should be lacking in Israel," it might be justly imputed to their un-commanded slaughter of the women, who could not reasonably be supposed to approve the conduct of the men of Gibeah, or refuse to give them up to be punished; and of the children, who had committed no fault, and ought not to have been put to death for the crimes of their parents. (Notes, xx. 43-48. Num. xxxi. 14-18. Deut. xxiv. 16.) In respect to the devoted Canaanites and cities in Israel, wholly given up to idolatry; the Lord himself had commanded the women, (who were as prone to idolatry as the men,) and the children also, to be slain: but the case of Benjamin was of a very different nature.

V. 4. As so great a multitude was assembled, and there were so many occasions for burnt-offerings, thank-offerings, and vows; it is probable that the brazen altar was found insufficient, and this was erected at Shiloh as a temporary addition to it for the present occasion. (Note, 1 Kings viii. 63-65.)

V. 5. They who, when summoned, refused to join on this occasion, were doubtless blameworthy, and deserved punishment; but this did not warrant their brethren to devote them to destruction by "a great oath." (Note, Lev. xxvii. 28, 29.) They were far too backward in attempting to extirpate the Canaanites, the devoted enemies of God; and they neglected to punish the idolatrous Danites: yet they without hesitation consigned to utter destruction, as accursed of God, all such of their brethren as should slight their authority! (Marg. Ref. Note, 1 Sam. xiv. 24-34.)

V. 9-12. Jabesh-gilead lay at a distance, beyond Jordan, on the borders of Ammon, and perhaps the inhabitants had not heard of the vow which Israel had made. (Note, 1 Sam. xi. 1-3.) But if they had been guilty of neglect, or disaffection to the common cause; they had not assisted the Benjamites; and yet when the people were lamenting the desolations of that tribe, they proceeded to treat those, who were far less criminal, with equal rigour! They seem, however, to have considered themselves, as engaged by their oath to destroy them utterly: yet they directed the detachment sent on this service, to spare the virgins, or unmarried women, of good character; probably with reference to the orders given concerning the Midianitish women. (Note, Num. xxxi. 14-18.) But if the vow would admit of this limitation; why could they not spare the other women and children, and innocent persons, and only punish the criminals? It does not appear that they asked counsel of the Lord before they proceeded to action: and the habit of military executions, contracted in the wars of Canaan, in obeying the express command of God, had no doubt too great influence on them, in this transaction, which was entirely of a different nature. (Note, xi. 30, 31.) Indeed convenience, rather than justice or piety, seems to have induced them to spare the virgins, that they might extricate themselves from the difficulties in which their other rash oath had involved them; hoping, perhaps, that a sufficient number would be found.—The four hundred, here mentioned, seem to have been marriageable: and it is not certain, whether the female children were spared or not.—"The land of Canaan" here denotes the country west of Jordan.

V. 16-18. The whole inheritance allotted to the tribe belonged to the survivors, and therefore wives must be procured them, that they might be replenished to occupy it. Thus the remnant of the Benjamites were unexpectedly advanced to great affluence, by the miserable destruction of their relations; and had it not been for the oath, many in the other tribes, would no doubt have readily contracted alliances with them. Hence it appears that the people acted conscientiously, as reverencing an oath, though they erred in judgment concerning it; being only bound to repent of having rashly entered into such a perplexing and unwarrantable engagement. (Note, 1. Marg. Ref.)

V. 20, 21. Sacred dances formed a part of the religious solemnities under the Mosaic dispensation: and as this feast was observed at Shiloh, it may be supposed that it was a religious festival, perhaps the feast of tabernacles. These dances, however, were of young women alone, without either men, or married women.—The counsel, and implied permission, given to the Benjamites, were a mere evasion of the vow; and also licensed fraud, violence, and the marriage of children without the consent of their parents: and if that might have been dispensed with, the Benjamites could have found themselves wives, without the others giving them their daughters.

V. 22. Each man, &c. In this diminished state of the tribe, when every Benjaminite could have maintained several wives, and when the restoration of it seemed to require this measure, the elders only devised how to procure one for each man; whence it appears, that polygamy, though connived at, was not generally practised or countenanced. (Note, Gen. vii. 7.) Neither did any one propose sending them to the neighbouring nations to procure wives; by which it is probable that marriages with them were not common at that time.

V. 23. Thus the remains of the tribe began to increase; and it is thought, that Ehud was raised up to be the judge of Israel, of this tribe, after it had been thus diminished.

V. 24. (Notes, xvii. 6. xviii. 7.)

that time, every man to his tribe, and to his family, and they went out from thence every man to his inheritance.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—15. When the passions are vehemently excited, those measures appear needful, which are afterwards perceived to be unreasonable and unlawful: and therefore, when we at all suspect this to be our case, we should be sure to proceed with great caution and deliberation, if we would not make work for bitter repentance. This danger attends all contests, public and private; and a good cause often becomes the occasion of great crimes, as the excess of zeal carries men beyond all the bounds of equity and humanity.—Well might the politic Romans refuse a triumph to the commander who conquered in civil war; in which the common interest is weakened, and the common enemies exult, whatever party acquires the ascendancy. Such unnatural contentions are generally conducted with the most pertinacious fury, and envenomed resentment, through the depravity of the human heart and the subtlety of Satan.—But this enemy is most of all gratified, when he can excite divisions and contentions in the church, by which the truth is disgraced, the weak and prejudiced are stumbled, and the enemies of religion alone rejoiced. Yet many persons of apparent godliness use greater asperity against their brethren, who are not exactly of their mind, than against the avowed opposers of all religion! But contests thus managed end in bitterness; and the combatants will ere long weep over the effects of their own success.—Nothing can be more absurd, than solemn oaths and vows made in the heat of passion; many have by them entangled themselves in inextricable perplexity; and been thus induced to add one crime to another, or to use the most disingenuous evasions and equivocations. Of all things, such solemn and important engagements require the most cautious reflection on future probable consequences.—Our penitent confessions, and devotional exercises, are too often succeeded by relapses into sin, for want of simply seeking direction from God, and depending on him to uphold us.—Even necessary justice should be executed with deep concern: and men would not be forward in inflicting vengeance on the less guilty, while more atrocious criminals were spared; were they not more ambitious of dominion for themselves, than zealous for the glory of God.—Even lawful employments may induce habits, which will be apt to influence the conduct in concerns of another nature, and with very bad effect: we should therefore seek for self-knowledge, keep a strict watch over our hearts, and daily consult the word of God as the rule of our duty.

V. 16—25. When even great offenders are much cast down, they should be treated with gentleness, and preserved, if possible, from temptations to despair and total apostasy: and every act of apparent severity should be connected with evident disinterestedness.—Too often the very ordinances of God degenerate into a mere form, and carnal mirth supplants holy rejoicing: but those scenes, which the sensual most delight in, expose them to unthought of consequences, and give Satan and designing men their utmost advantage against them: all our cheerfulness should therefore be tempered with reflection and watchfulness.—Children, who marry without the consent of their parents, are in general very culpable; and those are still more vile who entice them to do so: yet when the matter cannot be remedied, it is commonly the parent's duty and wisdom to be favourable, and to make the best of it.—That men can be so absurd, as to counsel others to acts of treachery or violence, and to countenance them in such evils, from a sense of duty, forms a striking proof of the blindness of the human mind when left to itself, and of the fatal effects of an ignorant or erroneous conscience.—Our troubles in this world may be succeeded by seasons of comfort, and end in our advantage; but they who are cut off in their sins, sink into evil, only evil, and that for ever.—Finally, we should be thankful for good magistrates, to restrain the violence of wicked men: but the fear and love of God, if we are Christians, will deter us from "doing what is right in our own eyes," except as they are opened to behold the excellency of his most holy law.

THE BOOK OF

R U T H.

This book is a kind of appendix to that of Judges, and an introduction to the subsequent history: and it is most probable, that it was written by Samuel, after he had anointed David to be king.—Ruth, a Moabitess, having been married to the son of Elimelech, of the tribe of Judah; after the death of her husband and father-in-law, accompanied Naomi, her mother-in-law, into the land of Israel, from love to her, and to true religion: and there she was married to Boaz, a near kinsman, and thus brought into the line of David, and consequently of Christ the Son of David. The chief events occurred at Bethlehem, the city of David; whose genealogy from Pharez, the son of Judah, concludes the book, and is attested by the Evangelists Matthew and Luke.—It is not easy to fix the Chronology of these events: they occurred in the days when the judges ruled; but there is no evidence to determine exactly under which of them. The narrative itself is very interesting, and instructive. It shews the condescending providential care of God to the minutest concerns of his people: and the circumstance, of a Moabitess becoming an ancestor of Christ, seems to have been a pre-intimation of the calling of the Gentiles into his church.

Elimelech driven by famine into Moab dies there, 1—3. His two sons, having married women of Moab, die without children; and Naomi, Elimelech's widow, prepares to return to Israel, 4—6. They arrive at Beth-lehem, and Naomi answers the enquiries of her neighbours, 19—22.

2 And the name of the man was Elimelech, and the name of his wife Naomi, and the name of his two sons Mahlon and Chilion, Ephrathites of Beth-lehem-judah: and they came into the country of Moab, and continued there.

3 And Elimelech, Naomi's husband, died; and she was left, and her two sons.

NOTES.

CHAP. I. V. 1, 2. Elimelech seems to have been blameable, in removing from the ordinances and people of God. The famine was not so extreme but others could endure it; and he evidently was a person of property, and not likely to want the necessities of life, though the Jewish tradition of his rank and dignity are entitled to little credit. (Note, 19—22.) Probably, he thought that he could live better and at less expense, in the land of Moab, than in Canaan; but it terminated in the impoverishing and wasting of his family.—

"Elimelech" signifies my God a king, and "Mahlon" and "Chilion" seem to denote sickness and consumption; they having perhaps been children of a weakly constitution.

V. 4, 5. There is no reason to think, that either Orpah or Ruth were proselyted to the religion of Israel, before marriage; and consequently Mahlon and Chilion evidently violated the divine law; for which some think their premature death without children was a punishment. But their marriage with Moabitish women was the natural effect of Elimelech's conduct, in bringing them sakes, that ^{the} hand of the LORD is gone out against me.

14 And they lifted up their voice, and wept again: and ^aOrpah kissed her mother-in-law, but ^bRuth clave unto her.

21 I went out full, ^{and} the LORD hath brought me home again empty: why then call ye me Naomi, seeing ^{the} LORD hath testified against me, and the Almighty hath afflicted me?

22 So Naomi returned, and Ruth the Moabitess, her daughter-in-law, with her, which returned out of the country of Moab: and they came to Beth-lehem in ^{the} beginning of barley-harvest.

acquainted with the women of Moab, and to a distance from the worshippers of God. Thus they settled among idolaters: and had they left families, they would have been in great danger of being incorporated among them. (Notes, Gen. xix. 1. 14, 15. 26. 31—38.) Probably Elimelech died soon after he came into the land of Moab, and his two sons followed him before ten years were expired; but it does not appear, how long after their marriage this took place.

V. 6—10. Perhaps Naomi had stayed in Moab contrary to her inclination, from regard to her husband, and afterwards to her sons: and she was now encouraged to return into Canaan, by hearing that the Lord had visited the land with plenty; for it would have been very hard for a destitute widow to return home in a time of great scarcity. (Note, 19—22.) She seems to have been a person of eminent faith and piety, and to have diligently instructed her daughters-in-law in true religion, which she recommended by her example. They both had a great affection for her, and at first purposed to go with her, notwithstanding her afflicted condition: though Orpah's resolution failed upon the trial. Their good behaviour to their husbands, and to Naomi, likewise endeared them to her, and excited her good wishes and fervent prayers for them: and they were all greatly distressed at the thoughts of parting.

V. 11—14. The custom of the surviving brother marrying the widow of the deceased, who left no children, seems to have prevailed in other countries besides Israel; but no prospect of a settlement according to it, could possibly be held out by Naomi to her daughters-in-law. She therefore expressed great concern at the afflictions with which God had visited her: because she was deprived of all power to help them: and she intimated, that if they were not disposed to accompany her out of disinterested love to God, and to the people of Israel, she could hold out no other inducement. Upon this Orpah, not being prepared to venture all consequences and renounce all her worldly prospects for the sake of religion; returned back to her country, her relations, and her gods, though with reluctance, and tokens of affection for Naomi. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 15. Naomi was doubtless very far from desiring that Ruth should return: but she intended to make trial of her sincerity, and to lead her to consider how she could bear poverty and hardship, for the sake of the God of Israel; that if she were not in earnest, and only induced by affection for her, and some general convictions, it might now be discovered; or that she might set out with steady determination of mind, and entire dependence on the grace of God. (18. Notes, Josh. xxiv. 15—19. Luke xix. 25—33.)

V. 16, 17. The example and instructions of Naomi seem to have given Ruth the most favourable opinion of the character and religion of the Israelites, so that she desired to have her lot with them at any rate: and for the sake of this, she was willing to renounce all her connexions and prospects in the land of Moab, and to embrace hardship and penury in a strange country. She was also determined to cleave to Naomi, however destitute and afflicted, until death separated them. For her sincerity in this profession she called the LORD to witness, and to multiply her troubles if she did not fulfil this solemn engagement. Thus she renounced idolatry, and became a worshipper and servant of the living God, and counted all but loss for the sake of his favour and salvation; and her subsequent conduct proved that her faith was genuine and her profession sincere. (Notes, 1 Chr. xii. 18, 19. John vi. 66—71.)

V. 19—21. Naomi had probably lived in affluence, and been much respected: her neighbours were therefore much surprised to see her return home, so altered in her circumstances; for she and Ruth seem to have travelled on foot, without any attendants: all the property which Elimelech had taken with him, having been spent.—“Naomi” signifies pleasant, but “Mara,” bitter. She humbly considered her afflictions as coming from the Lord's hand upon her and her family, for sin. For thus “the LORD testified against her, and the Almighty afflicted her.” Perhaps she considered herself as guilty, in not having left Moab, immediately on the death of her husband.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—14. No judgment can be formed from mere outward circumstances; whether we have, or have not, “found favour with God:” for, whom he loves he often chastens for their profit; and he leaves his enemies to be hardened in prosperity.—Afflictions should be submitted to as the Lord's rebuke, and they remind us to exercise repentance, and seek forgiveness; as every endeavour, by carnal policy, so evade corrections, will eventually entangle us in greater difficulties.—They who, by inconveniences or hardships, are easily induced to change their situations, seldom prosper in this world; and prove that they do not understand the real causes of their uneasiness. For, the displeasure of God, and the pride and impatience of our hearts, cannot be avoided by change of place or situation; and while these remain, they will produce misery whithersoever we remove. But when we are tempted to quit the ordinances of God, and the communion of his people, out of secular motives, we should remember Lot and Sodom. (Note, 4, 5.) In such measures our children and families are deeply concerned; for if they are estranged from the servants and house of God, and brought acquainted with persons of no religion, or a false religion, it cannot be expected, but that they will conform themselves to them, and have their portion with them living and dying. Better would it be, to be pinched with poverty, and worn down with labour, in the Lord's land, than to live in luxury and ease by hazarding such consequences: for our earthly trials or enjoyments are of short continuance; death is continually removing those of every age and situation; suddenly breaking in upon the most endeared unions, and marring all our outward comforts: we cannot therefore too decidedly prefer those advantages which shall endure for ever, that we may be ready for every separating stroke. And if constrained to dwell for a season in places of temptation, we should retire when the necessity ceases; and consider every rebuke in Providence as a call to us, to “come out, and be separate” from the workers of iniquity.—When “the LORD visits his people in giving them

7 And she said, I pray you, let me glean and gather after the reapers among the sheaves: so she came, and hath continued even from the morning until now, that she tarried a little in the house.

8 Then said Boaz unto Ruth, Hearest thou not, my daughter? Go not to glean in another field, neither go from hence, but abide here fast by my maidens.

9 Let thine eyes be on the field that they do reap, and go thou after them: have I not charged the young men that they shall not touch thee? and when thou art athirst, go unto the vessels, and drink of that which the young men have drawn.

10 Then she fell on her face, and bowed herself to the ground, and said unto him, Why have I found grace in thine eyes, that thou shouldst take knowledge of me, seeing I am a stranger?

bread" they ought to be content and thankful, though they have not abundance of silver and gold: and the assurance, that he will supply the real necessities of his true servants, should encourage us cheerfully to cast our lot among them.—In every situation and relation in life, especially among such as are strangers to the truths of the gospel, believers should aim to "adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things." (Note, Tit. ii. 9, 10.) And when they behave with prudence, integrity, meekness, and kindness; when they well perform the duties of relative life; and shew attention to the temporal comfort, and compassion for the sufferings, of those around them; and when they commend what is right in the moral and relative conduct of those who are not acquainted with spiritual things; they win much upon them, and render them more disposed to take in good part any endeavours made to do good to their souls: and thus, (beside the comfort of domestic harmony,) the Lord often blesses such a conduct, as the means of bringing those who were ignorant, careless, or prejudiced, to enquire after his truth and salvation; while the contrary behaviour of too many professors of the gospel, forms a grand objection against it, in the minds of thousands.—Many feel an affection for such believers as have been kind to them, and entertain favourable sentiments of religion, who are not decided in renouncing all their worldly pleasures, connexions, and prospects, and join themselves to the poor and despised people of God, for the sake of Christ and his salvation. They more desire "rest in the house of a husband," or in some worldly settlement or satisfaction, than that rest to which Jesus invites our souls; and therefore when tried, they depart from him, though sorrowful and reluctant. (Note, Matt. xix. 16-22.)

V. 15-22. Nothing, but a deep sense of the importance of eternal things, and a conviction of our guilt, and need of a Saviour: nothing but that faith, which is inseparably connected with true repentance and hatred of sin, and which works by love of Christ, and his people, his truth, ordinances, and precepts, will, in such a world as this, carry a man through all possible temptations. And therefore the Lord proves those who profess themselves his disciples, by setting the consequences before them in this world, and by some experience of them in his providence; by which they, who have not faith, are discouraged, and go back to their own people and idols: and this, though lamentable, is principally their own loss. We ought indeed greatly to desire the increase of true Christians; yet we should be cautious in our endeavours to multiply professors; lest we engage those who will betray the cause that they are expected to defend. Especially we ought to examine, whether we ourselves are thus steadfastly minded, and determined to cast in our lot with the people of God, however poor, despised, or persecuted; and that, living or dying, and for ever? We should enquire, whether this be our aim and prayer? Whether the prospect of secular advantage have not some influence upon our minds? and whether, if that were withdrawn, or changed for the prospect of poverty and suffering, we should not be tempted to draw back? But if we are thus decided in our judgment for the Lord and his service and salvation, he will assuredly accept and provide for us; he will make up all our losses, support us under all our trials, and communicate unspeakable consolations; and while many "draw back unto perdition," we shall "believe unto the saving of our souls:" nay, we shall even grow more determined by their apostacy, and by our own difficulties and temptations. If reduced in our circumstances, we shall often be more grieved for the sake of others, than for ourselves; the consciousness of our sins will teach us to submit to our trials, without murmuring; and our mourning will be mingled with heavenly sweetness.—While we remark, with compassion, the sad changes which numbers suffer, we should be reminded to prepare for changes ourselves, especially for our last great change; when the true believer will find that all things have worked together for his everlasting good.

NOTES.

CHAP. II. V. 2. When Naomi and Ruth were settled in some homely lodging at Bethlehem; the latter, expecting nothing in Canaan but a life of hard labour and mean fare, proposed to go and glean in some field, where she might obtain permission; for her own subsistence, and that of her mother-in-law, who probably was unable to endure the fatigue and heat of such an employment. The Lord indeed intended other things for Ruth; but he was pleased thus to prove her sincerity, humility, industry, and patience; and her dutiful affection to Naomi for his sake. Orpah could not have stood this trial; but had she been assured of a settlement in Israel, as desirable as that which Ruth at length obtained, she would have come also, and have made an hypocritical profession of religion for the sake of secular advantage. (Note, Matt. viii. 18-20.)

V. 3. Her hap, &c. This circumstance was with Ruth merely accidental, and not the result of choice or contrivance; but it was the effect of the Lord's secret direction, in whose providence great events depend upon apparently trivial incidents. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Eccl. ix. 11, 12. Luke x. 30-37—conclusion.)

V. 4. The LORD be with you. This is the first time that this emphatical expression occurs in Scripture.—(Marg. Ref.) The name of Boaz signifies, strength is in him, (Note, 1 Kings vii. 15-22); and he was a "mighty man of wealth;" yet he personally superintended his own reapers.—The pious affectionate language interchanged betwixt him and his reapers, and which appears to have been familiar to them, shews that there were many godly persons in Israel, notwithstanding national defections; and it beautifully illustrates the genuine effect of true religion, in producing affability in superiors, and respect and affection in inferiors, and mutual unaffected good will in all.—It is lamentably true, that such language as this is seldom heard in our fields, while the bounty of Providence is gathering in, but frequently the reverse; yea, whatever can inflame the passions, and corrupt the morals. So that a stranger, who should be occasionally present, would be apt to form a very different opinion of the religion of England, than Ruth did of that of Israel, from the conversation and conduct of Boaz and his reapers.

V. 5-10. There is a beautiful simplicity in this narrative. The servant's account of Ruth was suited to give Boaz a high opinion of her modesty, humility, and industry; and Boaz's discourse to Ruth exhibits genuine humanity, kindness, and consideration for the stranger and destitute.—It seems evident, that the same language was understood by all parties.—"Seeing I am a stranger." "I am not of Israel, but a heathen, born and brought up; a Moabitess, unworthy the regard, and unmeet for the society of the people of God, even for that of the handmaidens, (13.) the poorest of them; much less of the attention of one so eminent in Israel as thou art." (Note, Matt. viii. 8, 9.)

V. 11, 12. Ruth had renounced the idols of Moab, and become the worshipper and servant of the God of Israel. In proof of her sincerity, she had left the land of her nativity, where she might have expected a comfortable settlement; and her parents, (who it seems were still living,) as well as her other relations and friends, to come to a people, with whom she had had no previous acquaintance, but against whom she had been educated in prejudice and enmity; and to attach herself to a poor widow, whom by her industry she must help to maintain. This she had done, because she believed that JEHOVAH was the only true God, and Israel his people: and therefore she desired to be associated with them, and to have the benefit of the ordinances and instructions with which they were favoured. (Note, Josh. ii. 8-11.) Thus she came "to trust under the wings of the LORD God of Israel;" depending on his power, care, and love, both for the blessings of salvation, and for the things which were needful for the body; and seeking protection in every danger and alarm, as the chickens shelter themselves under the wings of the hen, from whatever incommodes or affrights them. (Marg. Ref. Note, Matt. xxiii. 37-39.) This conduct of a Moabitess had been greatly noticed; and Boaz had thence formed a favourable opinion of her faith and piety. He therefore shewed her much kindness, encouraging her industry, and affording her protection; and praying for her, "that the LORD would recompense her work." &c.—In all ages and nations, conversion is substantially the same: irreligion, or false religion, is exchanged for the spiritual worship of the true God, through the appointed Mediator, and in his instituted ordinances; the practice of sin, for the pursuit of true holiness; self-dependence, for reliance in every thing on the mercy, grace, and providence of God; the expectation of felicity from the world, for his favour as our portion; and the company of the workers of iniquity, for the society of those who love and serve him. But many circumstances depend upon men's outward situation. Such as have godly parents and relations, are engaged in lawful and useful employments, and live in peaceable times, will not be immediately required to make the same sacrifices, as they who are called out of the families of imbittered opposers, from occupations inconsistent with the precepts of Scripture, or in times of furious persecution. The more,

11 And Boaz answered and said unto her, It hath fully been shewed me "all that thou hast done unto thy mother-in-law since the death of thine husband; and how thou hast left thy father and thy mother, and the land of thy nativity, and art come unto a people which thou knewest not heretofore.

12 The LORD recompense thy work, and a full reward be given thee of the LORD God of Israel, under whose wings thou art come to trust.

13 Then she said, "Let me find favour in thy sight, my lord; for that thou hast comforted me, and for that thou hast spoken friendly unto thine handmaid, though I be not like unto one of thine handmaidens.

14 And Boaz said unto her, "At meal-time come thou hither, and eat of the bread, and dip thy morsel in the vinegar. And she sat beside the reapers: and he reached her parched corn, and she did eat, and was sufficed, and left.

15 And when she was risen up to glean, Boaz commanded his young men, saying, Let her glean even among the sheaves, and reproach her not:

16 And let fall also some of the handfuls of purpose for her, and leave them, that she may glean them, and rebuke her not.

17 So she gleaned in the field until even, and beat out that she had gleaned: and it was about an ephah of barley.

18 ¶ And she took it up, and went into the city; and her mother-in-law saw what she had gleaned: and she brought forth, and gave to her that she had reserved, after she was sufficed.

19 And her mother-in-law said unto her, Where hast thou gleaned to-day? and where wroughtest thou? "blessed be he that did take knowledge of thee. And she shewed her mother-in-law with whom she had wrought, and said, The man's name with whom I wrought to-day is "Boaz.

20 And Naomi said unto her daughter-in-law, "Blessed be he of the LORD, who "hath not left off his kindness to the living and to the dead. And Naomi said unto her, The man is near of kin unto us, "one of our next kinsmen.

21 And Ruth the Moabitess said, He said unto me also, "Thou shalt keep fast by my young men, until they have ended all my harvest.

22 And Naomi said unto Ruth her daughter-in-law, "It is good, my daughter, that thou go out with his maidens, that they "meet thee not in any other field.

23 So she kept fast by the maidens of Boaz to glean unto the end of barley-harvest and of wheat-harvest; and dwelt with her mother-in-law.

CHAP. III.

By Naomi's instruction Ruth lies down in the night at the feet of Boaz, 1-7. He allows the duty of a kinsman, but shews that another has a prior claim, 8-13. He sends her away in the morning with six measures of barley, and she confers with Naomi, 14-18.

THEN Naomi her mother-in-law said unto her, My daughter, "shall I not seek rest for thee, that it may be well with thee?

2 And now "is not Boaz of our kindred, with whose maidens thou wast? behold, he winnoweth barley to-night in the threshing-floor.

3 Wash thyself therefore, and "anoint thee, and "put thy raiment upon thee, and get thee down to the floor: but make not thyself known unto the man, until he shall have done eating and drinking.

however, men venture, renounce, or suffer for the Lord's sake, the clearer evidence they have, that their faith is genuine, and that they shall "receive a full reward." The principle and the precept are in all cases alike; but the application varies, according as different trials are allotted in the providence of God.

V. 14. 'The Midrasch, (an ancient Jewish book,) makes these words, Come thou hither, to signify as much as Come to thy kingdom; and the morsel dipt in vinegar, to denote the reproaches and torments of the Messiah. Which is an argument, that they expected such a king as should be exposed to such sufferings, as our blessed Saviour endured, who saith in the Psalmist, They gave me vinegar to drink.' (Bp Patrick.) The interpretation is indeed most absurd; yet it is remarkable as tending to prove that point.

V. 18, 19. The quantity of barley which Ruth had gleaned, and the residue of her plentiful meal, which she brought to Naomi, shewed that she had met with uncommonly kind usage.

V. 20. Boaz had been kind to Elimelech's family, before his removal to the land of Moab: and Naomi rejoiced that his care of her had revived after the death of her husband, when she so much needed his assistance; and she besought the Lord to repay him with his blessing. (Notes, 2 Sam. ix. 1-3. Phil. iv. 10-13.)

V. 22. If Ruth had gone into any other field to glean, it would have seemed a slight put upon the kindness shewn her, as well as an evidence of an inconstant temper of mind, which might have given Boaz and his family an unfavourable opinion of her. (Note, Matt. x. 11-15.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-10. The distinctions which we are apt to form concerning the persons and affairs of men, do not comport with the judgment of the Lord: and the gleanings of a poor Moabitess, who trusted in him, was deemed more worthy of his condescending notice, than the transactions of the greatest princes then living, which are now almost entirely consigned to oblivion! We ought not therefore to "mind high things, but to condescend to men of low estate."—Honest industry, humble patience in poverty and hardship, and a willingness to labour for aged parents, relations, or benefactors, who are unable to provide for themselves, if these spring from faith, are both honourable and acceptable to God.—True religion will teach men to behave with propriety in every circumstance and relation of life: it will form kind masters, faithful servants, and harmonious families: it will produce mutual love among persons of different ranks; and while it engages the rich to condescension, it will teach the poor to be humble and respectful in their behaviour to their superiors and benefactors: above all, it will naturally express itself in prayer and praise. This return the poorest may render for favours bestowed; and for the neglect of it, no liberality can excuse the affluent.—The good examples of those placed in eminent stations, and who employ many in their service, are most extensively beneficial.—With what gratitude to God and liberality to the poor, should the bounty of a kind Providence be received by us unworthy sinners! and how inexcusable are they who abuse plenty in intemperance, or covetously neglect the indigent, or allow themselves in wickedness, when they are thus experiencing the goodness of the Lord!—In shewing kindness to the destitute, we ought to avoid ourselves, and try to prevent in others, every thing that may appear like reproaching them: for, a generous mind in distress has very exquisite sensibilities.

V. 11-23. All persons should be careful what connexions they form, and what places they frequent; but especially young women, both for conscience and credit's sake: and parents and other superior relations should have a watchful eye over them, and require an account, where, and with whom, they have spent their time.—In the path of duty is safety; and we should keep close to those employments and situations, in which the Lord hath blessed us, without being desirous of change. He will not suffer those who trust in him to want the necessities of life, and will often far exceed their expectations: and an abundant recompense for every loss, and of every really good work, yea, a full but gracious reward, shall surely be given to all those, "who come to trust under the wings of the LORD our God."—A tender concern for each other's welfare, affectionate and edifying conversation, with true piety and contentment, will render the lowest circumstances and the meanest fare comfortable.—The Lord will prove those, who enter upon a religious profession, whether they are sound hearted, and willing to stoop and suffer for his sake: and then he will stir up the minds of his more experienced servants, to speak comfortably to them, and deal kindly with them. This is a good work, which all Christians should embrace every opportunity of performing; especially to those who are cheerfully industrious, and willing to endure hardship for conscience' sake.—But to accommodate this subject, ought not parents to ask their children what they have gleaned from the sermons which they have heard, the books which they have read, and the conversation that they have joined in? May we not also ask ourselves the same question? He that would increase in wisdom must be always thus gleaning, and call himself frequently to account respecting it; determining, if possible, to get some profitable hint from every person and occurrence. And they, who thus daily collect knowledge from others, and keep close to the word and ordinances of God, will become "thoroughly furnished for every good work."—Finally, let us, in the kindness of Boaz to Ruth, contemplate the kindness of Jesus to poor sinners; to whose meanness he most freely condescends; on whom, though most unworthy, he liberally confers his benefits; and whom he neither upbraids himself, nor suffers others to upbraid with their former transgressions.

NOTES.

CHAP. III. V. 1-6. If the measure, here proposed by Naomi, had been of as ill appearance in those days, as it would be at present, it can hardly be supposed that she would have advised it, or that Ruth would have complied with it.—The law, concerning a man's marrying his brother's widow when he died childless, was by custom extended, as it seems, to the other near relations, when there were no brethren. (Note, Deut. xxv. 5-10.) This gave Ruth, now proselyted to the true religion, a legal claim upon Boaz; as Naomi supposed, who either did not know of another nearer kinsman, or was aware that it would 18 Then said she, ^{*}Sit still, my daughter, until thou know how the matter will fall : for the man will not be in rest, until he have finished the thing this day.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It behoves aged persons to recollect their younger days, and not to exclude young persons from those lawful satisfactions, of which themselves have given up all thoughts. (i. 12.) Indeed, we ought not to make our own conduct a standard for that of others, in any matter which the law of God leaves to our choice; but should, without censure, allow them in many things which we deem inexpedient for ourselves.—The word of God hath pronounced “marriage honourable in all;” and therefore they, who from inclinations, prudential regard to the interests of their families, a pious desire of being more at leisure, and having more in their power for the service of God, and preparation for the eternal world, choose to abide in a single state, should not condemn those who may have as good reasons for preferring a married life. If they are imprudent, they “will have trouble in the flesh; but their brethren should spare them,” and not censure what the divine law does not condemn. (Note, 1 Tim. v. 13—15.)—The married state, when properly entered into, is a rest, as much as any thing on earth can be so called; seeing it ought to fix the affections, and form a connexion for life: it therefore should be engaged in with great seriousness, and with earnest prayers for the direction and blessing of God upon it, and with an eye to his precept and providence: and parents should carefully advise their children in this important concern, “that it may be well with them,” especially as to the interests of their souls.—The more willing any one is, for conscience’ sake, to renounce worldly interests, the greater care should others employ in promoting his advantage.—But good intentions will not justify improper means; and it is well for us, that we have to do with a God of mercy, who takes better care of our interest, purity, credit, and peace, than we often do of our own and of each other’s.—Parents should be very cautious what injunctions they lay upon their children; lest filial affection and deference should ensnare their consciences, and lead them into temptation; for the authority even of a parent will not justify a sinful action.—Few men have such command of their passions, and candour of mind, as to injure neither the virtue, nor the reputations, of females, who indiscreetly put themselves in their way: and yet to take advantage of a woman’s affection and confidence, for her irreparable detriment, is much baser than defrauding those who implicitly trust in us. They, however, who value either their chastity or their character, should flee from such situations; in which they can only be preserved by the same power, that preserved the young men in the fiery furnace.—All our plenty should be shared with the poor and industrious: and all our feasting should be so moderated, that it may neither unfit us for our ordinary employments, nor for the exercises of devotion. When in such circumstances men can retain the dominion over their passions, and conduct themselves with tenderness, prudence, piety, justice, and regard to the law of God, their wealth may be pronounced blessed, and their use of it honourable.—We must not, however, rest satisfied even with a clear conscience in the sight of God; but should endeavour to preserve a clear character, and to avoid whatever may occasion slander, or excite suspicion: and we ought to be as tender of the reputation of others as of our own.—In every undertaking we should be diligent in using proper means, and then calmly leave the whole to the Lord’s decision.—But without any impropriety we poor polluted sinners may apply to Jesus Christ, our nearest kinsman and brother, as dwelling in human nature, to spread his skirt over us, and to espouse our souls to himself, to take us under his almighty care, and to admit us to share in all his unsearchable riches. He will never blame us for doing this unseasonably, if we desire to be his: he will graciously accept us, and all our endeavours to serve him; and most kindly receive our love to him, and our desire of his salvation. When we have applied to him, he will not rest till he hath accomplished our desires; and in the mean time he will communicate blessings to us and ours, in answer to be in vain to apply to him. (Note, iv. 1.—8.) It was customary for widows to assert this claim; and, considering Boaz’s character and superiority of station, she supposed that this was best done in a private manner. She deemed herself bound to promote this desirable settlement for Ruth, and had an entire confidence in both her and Boaz; whose character in all respects appears to have been very excellent, and who seems to have been advanced in life. And as Ruth supposed Naomi to be best acquainted with the laws and customs of Israel, she implicitly followed her counsel. Yet, when all allowances are made, perhaps neither party can be entirely exculpated. At least, though their plan was graciously rendered successful, it was not recorded for imitation in the present state of society; nor must it be judged of by modern customs and maxims. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 7. When the work of the day was finished, it seems that Boaz feasted with his labourers; and, according to the simplicity and hardness of the times, afterwards lay down to sleep on some couch prepared for him in the barn, or in an adjoining tent. It is said “his heart was merry;” but it may be translated, “his heart was good;” and may be used to mark his cheerfulness, and thankfulness for the plenty, which the Lord had sent after the famine; and his subsequent conduct shews that his feast was consistent with temperance and piety. In the mean time Ruth concealed herself, till he was left alone; and then lay down at his feet, waiting her opportunity of speaking to him; and by that very action she implicitly preferred a claim to be received by him into the marriage-relation.

V. 9. Spread—thy skirt. This is supposed to have been a customary ceremony in contracting marriage, and implied the woman’s being taken under the protection of her husband, and admitted to share all his comforts. (Note, Ez. xvi. 6—8.) It was therefore a direct claim upon Boaz to marry her; which she grounded on the law of God, and on his being the nearest relation of her deceased husband.

V. 10—13. The conduct of Boaz in this transaction is worthy of the highest encomiums. He neither attempted to take advantage of Ruth’s exposed situation, nor reproached her with impropriety of conduct, nor disdained her as a poor destitute stranger, nor suggested that she was swayed by interest in preferring her claim. On the contrary, instead of suspecting her of any ill intentions, he imputed her whole conduct to her affection to the family of Elimelech, and to Naomi; as if she had thus shewn her greater kindness, than in coming with her into the land of Israel: and he commended her, for giving him, an elder man, the preference to younger persons, whether rich or poor, Moabites or Israelites: and for her regard to the law of God. Perceiving her confused, as it is probable, upon the recollection of her situation, he also obviated her fears, applauded her as a woman of known and approved virtue, and made her a promise of marriage, (in case a still nearer kinsman who had a prior claim, would waive it, as it might be supposed he would.) This he confirmed for her fuller satisfaction with a solemn oath; and in the morning he sent her away with a present to her mother-in-law, (15.)

V. 14. Let, &c. We may consider these words as containing his reasons for dismissing her so early; for he said within himself, “Let it not be known that a woman came into the floor:” or, as his caution to Ruth not to speak of it to any one. For it does not appear that there was any servant privy to the interview.

V. 15. This present was a token of Boaz’s favourable construction of the transaction, and affectionate regard for Ruth and Naomi.—It is not known of what quantity these measures consisted.

V. 16. Who art thou? Or “What hast thou done?” What has passed? For so the words may be interpreted.

CHAP. IV.

Boaz proposes to the nearest of kin to redeem Elimelech's land, and to marry Ruth; which he declines to do. 1-3. Boaz buys the inheritance, and marries Ruth, 9-12. She bears Obed the grandfather of David, 13-17. The genealogy from Pharez to David, 18-22.

THEN went Boaz up ^ato the gate, and sat him down there; and, behold, ^bthe kinsman of whom Boaz spake came by; unto whom he said, ^c'Ho, such a one, turn aside, sit down here. And he turned aside, and sat down.

2 And he took ten men of ^d'the elders of the city, and said, Sit ye down here. And they sat down.

3 And ^e'he said unto the kinsman, Naomi that is come again out of the country of Moab, selleth a parcel of land which ^fwas our brother Elimelech's:

4 And ^g'I thought to advertise thee, saying, ^h'Buy it ⁱ'before the inhabitants, and before the elders of my people. And he said, I will redeem it.

5 Then said Boaz, What day thou buyest the field of the hand of Naomi, thou must buy it also of Ruth the Moabitess, the wife of the dead, ⁿ'to raise up the name of the dead upon his inheritance.

6 ¶ And the kinsman said, I cannot redeem ^oit for myself, lest I mar mine own inheritance: redeem thou thy right to thyself; for I cannot redeem it.

7 Now this ^pwas the manner in former time in Israel, concerning redeeming, and concerning changing, for to confirm all things: ^q'a man plucked off his shoe, and gave ^rit to his neighbour: and this ^swas a testimony in Israel.

8 Therefore the kinsman said unto Boaz, Buy it for thee: so he drew off his shoe.

9 ¶ And Boaz said unto the elders, and unto all the people, ^t'Ye are witnesses this day, that I have our prayers; nor can we too earnestly desire and seek this same rest for our children and friends, that it may be well with them also. (Note, Matt. xi. 23—30.)

NOTES.

CHAP. IV. V. 1-8. Considerable difficulties arise, in explaining this transaction consistently with the laws before given; and it does not appear in whose possession the estate of Elimelech was at this time. It is, however, probable, that it had been sold till the year of jubilee. (Notes, Lev. xxv. 14-17. 25-28.) and as Elimelech had no male issue surviving, and it could not be alienated from his family, the nearest relation would have a right to redeem it, by repaying the proportion of the purchase-money; except as Ruth, Elimelech's daughter-in-law, was entitled to his inheritance, according to the law given in the case of those who left only daughters, (Notes, Num. xxvii. 1-11.)—To obviate therefore all doubt and difficulty in this matter, Boaz proposed to this kinsman of Elimelech that he should both redeem the estate and marry Ruth; in which case the estate would certainly belong to his eldest son by her: but if he was unwilling to do it, he desired him to renounce his claim, and he would marry her, and redeem the land for himself. As, however, the kinsman was not willing to marry the poor widow, lest he should injure his circumstances, or create himself disturbance; (for perhaps he had at this time a wife and family;) he therefore resigned all claim to the estate also. This transaction respects all the several laws above referred to, and doubtless the whole was settled in the most regular, legal, and customary manner: and as the pulling off the shoe was not done by Ruth with the prescribed ceremonies, but, as it appears, by the kinsman himself, it seems not to refer merely to the law about refusing to marry a brother's widow, but to have been the custom in transferring inheritances. (Note, Deut. xxv. 5-10.)—The manner in which Boaz brought forward this business evinced a strict regard to equity; and also an affection for Ruth, whom it is evident he was desirous of marrying, provided the kinsman was willing to relinquish his prior claim.

V. 9, 10. As Orpah had preferred her connexions in Moab to her prospects in Israel, she was not considered in this transaction; and Naomi transferred all her claim to Ruth. Consequently when the nearest kinsman, before the elders of his city, by legal process, gave up his claim, Boaz by marrying Ruth possessed the whole right of Elimelech. Yet according to the law of God, and the custom in Israel, the eldest son of this marriage must be considered as the heir of Elimelech, and of Mahlon the former husband of Ruth: so that the land would be called by the name of one of them, and not by that of Boaz; that the family might not be considered as extinct. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 11, 12. Gate. (Note, Job xxix. 7-11. Marg. Ref. on (a) first verse.) The public recognition of Boaz's taking Ruth to wife, by the elders of his city, accompanied by benedictions and prayers, may be considered as the customary method of distinguishing honourable marriage from illicit connexions.—It is observable, that only Rachel and Leah are mentioned, as having "built the house of Israel;" and that Bilhah and Zilpah, Jacob's concubines, are not named.—The law, forbidding the admission of Moabites into the congregation of Israel, seems not to have related to marriages with such as embraced the true religion, especially in such peculiar circumstances: for there is no intimation in Scripture that Boaz acted improperly on this occasion. (Note, Deut. xxiii. 3-5.)

V. 13-15. Naomi was congratulated on this occasion, more than either Boaz or Ruth; as she had the ruins of her family thus providentially repaired, and her old age solaced after the death of her husband and sons, through her daughter-in-law, who had loved her, and been a greater blessing to her than seven sons. The piety of the language, and the conduct of all parties on this occasion, should not pass unnoticed.—The term kinsman or redeemer, seems here applied to Naomi's grandson, as inheriting the rights of the whole family. (14.)

V. 17. The women named the child, doubtless by the approbation of all parties. "Obed" signifies a servant, or serviceable: probably intimating a confidence, that Obed would be very useful to his family and people. From him Christ descended: and thus peculiar blessings and honour redounded to Boaz, who had not disdained the low estate of Ruth, but had paid due honour to his deceased relations, and their decayed family; whilst the kinsman, who refused so to do, is not allowed a name in the book of God, but is disgracefully consigned to oblivion.

V. 18-22. Pharez was born about 1714 years before Christ, and David was born about 1085, B. C. so that about 630 years intervened: and ten generations seem too few for such a length of time. But the difficulty is vastly increased, when it is recollected, that Salmon married Rachab, (doubtless the same as Rahab, Matt. i. 5;) about 1450 B. C. leaving 365 years, or more, to only four generations! Some learned men have attempted to shew, that possibly Salmon, Boaz, Obed, and Jesse, were remarkably long-lived; and that Boaz, Obed, Jesse, and David were born in the extreme old age of their respective fathers: but this at least is not probable, and it is certain that Jesse lived, till David arrived at full manhood, (Notes, 1 Sam. xvii. 12, 13. 42-44. xxii. 3, 4.) It is therefore much more natural to suppose, that some names are omitted in the genealogy; as we know the case to have been in the genealogies given by the evangelists. (Note, Matt. i. 2-17.)

ready to embrace opportunities of increasing their estates, but few know the value of godliness: nor can it be expected, that they, who supremely value carnal things, will make a due estimate of spiritual excellency in the character of others. Such are frequently the wise men of this world; they do not attend to the concerns of their souls, and they reject the salvation of Christ, for fear of "marring their inheritance!" Indeed, selfishness not only obliterates all charity and justice, but extinguishes natural affection; and causes men to treat with disdain their nearest relatives, however excellent, if poor and in need of their assistance. But the loss, in the final event of things, will be their own alone: as the Lord will raise up other friends for such as love and trust in him: and especially for those, who have shewn themselves willing to bear hardship for his sake. Nay, such persons, however poor, are a blessing to all connected with them. Especially they are to be valued in the marriage-relation: "A prudent wife is of the Lord," and "The price of a virtuous woman is above rubies."—As marriage is honourable in the sight of God, it ought to be publicly contracted and recognized, that it may be distinguished from those deeds of darkness which require concealment: and it is likely to be comfortable when the law of God is regarded, and his blessing supplicated. In this important concern, (as in all others,) pious people should pray for each other, that the parties may live together in peace, be good examples, do worthily in the church and in the world, and train up families for future usefulness, when they have served their generation, and are fallen asleep.—The birth of children also calls for united prayers, that they may be indeed a comfort to their parents, blessings to society, and blessed themselves; for without the blessing of God, none of these things can be expected; and the general disuse of this pious language and behaviour, by professing Christians, too plainly evinces that true religion is at a low ebb among us.—We should never promise ourselves much comfort from any earthly object; for our heaviest trials often arise from those quarters whence we expected most satisfaction, and our greatest solace, from those whence we expected none: indeed, one true Christian friend may be better to us than all our children and relations.—But if these streams are so refreshing, what may we not expect from the fountain? Let us then look to Jesus, our Redeemer, who "though he was rich, for our sakes became poor:" and at the price of his sufferings both ransomed our inheritance, and purchased us to be espoused unto him in truth and righteousness; not induced by our worthiness or excellency, but by his own unfathomable love to our polluted souls. To this union he invites the perishing sinner. This relation to the poor despised believer he avows, and glories in. May we therefore joyfully accept of his salvation, expect all our felicity from him, and devote ourselves to his service; and being "bought with a price, let us glorify him with our bodies and spirits, which are his;" obeying his commandments, imitating his example, and recommending him and his salvation by word and deed to all around us!

THE FIRST BOOK OF SAMUEL,

OTHERWISE CALLED

THE FIRST BOOK OF THE KINGS.

This book and the following form but one in the Hebrew canon, and derive their name from Samuel; though he could not write more than the former part, (perhaps twenty-four chapters,) of the first book.—The remainder of them is, with great probability, ascribed to the prophets, Nathan and Gad: for we read in Chronicles, "Now the acts of David, first and last, behold they are written in the book of Samuel, and in the book of Nathan the prophet, and in the book of Gad the seer." (1 Chr. xxix. 29.) It is therefore very reasonable to conclude, that Samuel wrote the first acts of David; and Nathan and Gad, continuing the history after Samuel's death, wrote his last acts, or the records of his reign till near his death; and that the whole was formed into one book, which was ascribed to Samuel, as the more eminent person, and as the latter part formed a sort of appendix to the history which he had begun.—It may also be observed, that in the time of Samuel a new epoch commenced: the government by judges was changed for that of kings; and Samuel anointed both those kings, whose history is here given, and was himself a principal person in all these transactions.—From the Vulgate Latin translation, these books are also called "The first and second books of Kings;" and consequently the two following are "The third and fourth books of Kings."—When Eli was judge and high priest of Israel, Samuel was born: and while Eli's indulged sons were bringing destruction on themselves and their family, and almost on the nation; Samuel was growing up in wisdom and piety, to be an illustrious prophet, and the reformer, deliverer, and judge of Israel. Yet the people, at length ungratefully weary of his mild government, desired a king; and Saul having been placed over them, his family was soon set aside for his disobedience to God; and David was anointed as his successor. The rest of the book is taken up with an account of David's illustrious actions, and the harassing persecutions which he endured, till the death of Saul opened his way to mount the throne. It is not agreed, how many years elapsed during these events; some confining them within eighty years, and others extending them to a hundred and fifteen.—It is evident that this book was extant when the first book of Kings was written. (1 Kings ii. 27.) Almost every subsequent part of Scripture refers to the events recorded in it, as of undoubted certainty; and especially very many of the Psalms are poems made on occasion of one or other of them.—Our Lord and his apostles quote it, as a part of the sacred oracles. (Matt. xii. 3, 4. Acts vii. 45, 46. xiii. 21—23.)—The history of David, the son of Jesse, forms a sort of introduction to all the prophecies concerning his family; and especially concerning Christ, who sprang from the root of Jesse, was distinguished as the Son of David, and inherited the throne of David. (Ps. ii. lxxii. lxxxix. 19—28. Is. ix. 6, 7. xi. 1. 10. Acts ii. 25—31.) The narrative itself may in some sense be considered as prophetical, recording many typical events, which had their accomplishment in Christ. The book likewise contains several direct prophecies concerning the families of Eli and Saul, which were speedily fulfilled: and the song of Hannah concludes with a prophecy of our Lord, in which he is, for the first time, predicted expressly as the Messiah, or the anointed of God. (ii. 10.)

3 And this man went up out of his city ^cyearly ^eto worship, and to sacrifice unto the LORD of hosts in ^bShiloh: and the ^dtwo sons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, the priests of the LORD, were there.

NOW there was a certain man of ^aRamathaim-zophim, of ^bmount Ephraim, and his name was ^cElkanah, the son of Jeroham, the son Elihu, the son of Tohu, the son of Zuph, an ^dEphrathite:

NOTES.

CHAP. I. V. 1. Elkanah appears to have been a Levite, of the family of Kohath. (Marg. Ref.) Ramathaim-zophim was the place which is afterwards called Ramah; (19. Marg. Ref.;) and from the dual number here used, it is supposed to have been divided into two parts, upon distinct hills. The word "Zophim," signifies watchmen, perhaps because some watch-towers, and watchmen, were stationed there; for "Ramah," signifies exaltation; or it might be so called from Zuph, Elkanah's ancestor. Ephrath is the same as Bethlehem; and, probably, Elkanah, or his ancestor, Zuph, was called an Ephrathite, from being allied, in the female line, to a family of the tribe of Judah, whose inheritance lay there, or because he was born at Ephrath. (Gen. xlviii. 7.)

V. 2. Hannah seems to have been the first wife of Elkanah; but as she

4 ¶ And when the time was that Elkanah ^offered, he gave to Peninnah his wife, and to all her sons and her daughters, portions.

5 But unto Hannah he gave a ^tworthy portion: for ^{he} loved Hannah: but the LORD had ^mshut up her womb.

6 And her ^advversary also ^tprovoked her sore, for to make her fret, because the LORD had shut up her womb.

7 And as he did so ^oyear by year, ^swhen she went up to the house of the LORD, so she provoked her: therefore she wept, and did not eat.

8 Then said Elkanah her husband to her, Hannah, ^why weepst thou? and why eatest thou not? and why is thy heart grieved? ^aam not I better to thee than ten sons?

9 ¶ So Hannah rose up after they had eaten in Shiloh, and after they had drunk: (now Eli the priest sat upon a seat by a post of ^{the} temple of the LORD:)

10 And she ^{was} ⁱn bitterness of soul, and ^prayed unto the LORD, ^{and} wept sore.

11 And she ^vowed a vow, and said, O LORD of hosts, if thou wilt indeed ^took on the affliction of thine handmaid, and ^remember me, and not forget thine handmaid, but wilt give unto thine handmaid a ^man-child, then I will give him unto the LORD all the days of his life, and ^there shall no razor come upon his head.

12 ¶ And it came to pass, as she ^tcontinued praying before the LORD, that Eli marked her mouth.

13 Now Hannah, she ^spake in her heart; only her lips moved, but her voice was not heard: therefore Eli thought ^she had been drunken.

14 And Eli said unto her, ^{How} long wilt thou be drunken? ^{put} away thy wine from thee.

15 And Hannah answered and said, ^{No}, my lord; was barren, it is probable that he took Peninnah, (as Abraham took Hagar,) from an impatient desire of children; but the event shewed, that, in deviating from the original law of marriage, though in a manner then tolerated, he little consulted his own peace and comfort.

V. 3. The stated worship at Shiloh was observed, but, probably, in an irregular manner, or Elkanah, a Levite, would have had employment at the sanctuary. In those times of apostasy and idolatry, when "men abhorred the offering of the LORD," through the wickedness of Eli's sons, (ii. 17.) it was commendable in Elkanah to go up, though but once a year, perhaps at the passover, to worship the LORD: the original words, however, may mean, that he went up at stated times—probably, at the three great feasts. The Israelites were confined to one place, one altar, and one priesthood; and, therefore, Elkanah could not go elsewhere. But, though the wickedness of ministers doth not deprive the pious Christian of the blessing, nor furnish a sufficient excuse for neglecting the ordinances of God, yet we, not being under a similar limitation, should certainly prefer attending on the ministry of those who appear, at least, to be walking heavenward themselves, as well as teaching others the true way thither, and not countenance either heretical teachers, or ungodly men.

V. 4-7. After the other appointed sacrifices had been brought, the peace-offerings were presented, on part of which the offerer and his family feasted; he giving each a portion. On these occasions, Elkanah shewed his peculiar attention to Hannah, by the customary indications; which, probably, excited the envy and jealousy of Peninnah, as well as her proud contempt of Hannah's barrenness; and thus great uneasiness was occasioned. (Note, Gen. xxxvii. 3.) For Hannah laid it far more to heart than she ought; and her perpetual sorrow distressed Elkanah, and greatly interrupted the comfort and benefit of their religious ordinances, and might be one reason why Hannah refused to partake of the sacrifices, lest the LORD should be displeased by her eating them mourning. (Deut. xxvi. 14. Neh. viii. 9-12. Hos. ix. 4. Mal. ii. 9, 10.)

V. 8. Elkanah seems to have endured Peninnah's ill-temper with great patience; and he most tenderly remonstrated with Hannah concerning her immoderate grief, and reminded her, that, though she had no children, she possessed his affection, which would conduce more to her real comfort than ten sons, without it, would; and that, therefore, her situation was more desirable than that of Peninnah. This gentle rebuke prevailed with her to repress her grief, and, perhaps, to partake of the sacrifice; but that did not comfort her heart, till she had poured it out in prayer.

V. 9-11. The tabernacle, now become stationary, was frequently called "the temple," especially in the Psalms of David. (Marg. Ref.) Hannah, with

I am a woman ^tof ^m sorrowful spirit: I have drunk neither wine nor strong drink, but have ^poured out my soul before the LORD.

16 Count not thine handmaid for ^a daughter of Belial: for ^hout of the abundance of my ^scomplaint and grief have I spoken hitherto.

17 Then Eli answered and said, ^{Go} in peace: and ^the God of Israel grant ^{thee} thy petition that thou hast asked of him.

18 And she said, ^{Let} thine handmaid find grace in thy sight. So the woman ^went her way, and did eat, and her countenance was no more ^{sad}.

19 ¶ And they rose up in the morning ^early, and worshipped before the LORD, and returned, and came to their house to Ramah: and Elkanah knew Hannah his wife; ^{and} the LORD remembered her.

20 Wherefore it came to pass, ^{when} the time was come about, after Hannah had conceived, that she bare a son, and called his name ^sSamuel, ^{saying}, ^{Because} I have asked him of the LORD.

21 And ^the man Elkanah, and all his house, went up to offer unto the LORD the yearly sacrifice, and his vow.

22 But Hannah went not up; for she said unto her husband, ^{I will not go up} until the child be weaned, ^{and then} I will bring him, that he may appear before the LORD, ^{and} there abide ^{for} ever.

23 And Elkanah her husband said unto her, ^{Do} what seemeth thee good: tarry until thou have weaned him; only ^the LORD establish his word. So the woman abode, and gave her ^son suck until she weaned him.

24 ¶ And when she had weaned him, ^she took him up with her, with three bullocks, and one ephah of flour, and a bottle of wine, and brought him unto the ^{house} of the LORD in Shiloh: and the child ^{was} young.

great earnestness and importunity, intreated the LORD to grant her a son; and vowed that he should be a perpetual Nazarite, devoted to the service of God alone, all his days. Some learned men compute that Samuel was born before Samson, whom God thus separated to himself, and for a special purpose, before his birth; but others think he was born about the same time, or a few years after him. (Notes, Judg. xiii. 4, 5. xvi. 17-21.)

V. 12-16. Perhaps Eli had many times seen such intemperance as he here charged upon Hannah; and, perhaps, he sat near the tabernacle to repress these enormities, though he did not adopt the only effectual method. (Note, ii. 23-25.) Perceiving her great discomposure, and observing that her lips moved, he too hastily attributed it to drunkenness. But Hannah had now obtained such inward consolation, that this severe reflection neither distressed her, nor excited her anger; so that she intimated her abhorrence of the crime with which she had been charged, and calmly and respectfully explained to him the real cause of her agitation. In doing this, she emphatically described the nature of fervent prayer; "I poured out my soul before the LORD." For prayer doth not consist merely in using good words, but in opening before the LORD the inmost soul, and in unreserved confidence, pouring out before him all our fears, sorrows, desires, and purposes; as a child would before a loving father, from whom alone he had expectations of relief, and who, he was satisfied, was able and disposed to help him.

V. 17, 18. The character of Eli was very defective; yet there are several traces in it of true piety, and this answer is one. He was open to conviction, and willing to acknowledge himself mistaken, and to make Hannah amends, by his commendation, blessing, and prayers, for the injury which he had done her. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 19-22. It is probable that Elkanah established Hannah's vow, in ^a solemn act of worship, before he left Shiloh. (Notes, Num. xxx. 3-8.) Samuel's name would remind his mother, every time it was mentioned, of the LORD's kindness in remembering her affliction, and in answering her prayer. The women were not commanded to go up to the sanctuary; and Hannah, after Samuel's birth, had a sufficient engagement at home.

V. 23. Establish, &c. As no promise of God respecting Samuel is recorded, it is thought that the clause may be rendered, "Only the LORD complete his work;" namely, in accepting of the child given in answer to prayer, as his devoted servant, all his days.

V. 24, 25. One of these bullocks might be intended for ^a burnt-offering, and the other two for thank-offerings, or peace-offerings; on part of which, and of the flour and wine, Elkanah, with his family and friends, and with the Levites, might feast before the LORD. (Notes, Lev. iii. vii. 12-14. Deut. xii. 5-7.) After the burnt-offering had been sacrificed, they seem to have presented Samuel to Eli before the other offerings were slain. The original words rendered, "The child was young," seem to imply that he was exceedingly dear to his parents, who exercised great self-denial in leaving him at the sanctuary at so early an age. (Note, ii. 18, 19.) Some think he was about three years old, others that he was seven.

V. 26, 27. Hannah's heart was too full of joy and gratitude upon this occasion, to notice the injurious reflection Eli had cast upon her; but she well remembered her prayer and vow, and the Lord's gracious answer. The words rendered, "as thy soul liveth," are supposed by some to have been intended merely as an expression of good-will; May thy soul live. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 28. The word rendered "lent," is nearly similar to that translated asked; and refers to the name of Samuel. Hannah had asked him of God, and now she returned him to him. It was her intention, that, as a Levite and a Nazarite, he should spend all his life in the immediate service of the sanctuary; but the Lord was pleased afterwards to employ him as a prophet and a judge in the public affairs of Israel. Some think that Elkanah is meant, when it is said, "He worshipped the Lord;" but others understand it of Samuel, who thus gave some early indications of piety. But, perhaps, it should be read, "They worshipped the Lord there."

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-8. Experience universally evinces the kindness, as well as equity, of the original institution, and the divine law, of marriage; for every deviation makes way for domestic contention, envy, malice, impatience, and every evil work, to the interruption of the worship of God, and the ruin of family-religion. None of our troubles, however, should be allowed to interfere with our attendance on the ordinances of God; for if Satan can induce us to yield to discouragement in one respect, he will attempt it in another, and never cease to harass us, when engaged in the duties of religion, till he hath driven us from every thing; so that resolute resistance and perseverance, with earnest cries to the Lord for his assistance, are our only successful weapons; and we should not at all "give place to the devil." The human heart can neither bear prosperity without insolence, nor adversity without impatience. Instead of being contented and thankful in our appointed situation, and rejoicing in the happiness of others, we are prone to murmur and to vex ourselves, because others are more favoured, or prospered, than we suppose ourselves to be; yet, could we change conditions in every respect with them, we should generally increase our uneasiness; whereas, impartial reflection upon our own situation in life, compared with our unworthiness and the condition of others, would silence our complaints, or convert them into thankful praises. All inordinate passions are irrational, as well as inimical to our comfort; and even pious Christians, who are shocked at the thought of yielding to other temptations, often rebelliously and ungratefully indulge excessive grief, against which they should watch and pray. But if our earthly comforts, when duly estimated, being greater than our sorrows, ought to console us under the other, surely the favour of God is better to his people than all beloved relations, or outward satisfactions, and sufficient to compensate for the loss or the want of them all. Every one should comfort those who are in bitterness of soul; yet a mild and tender rebuke is frequently the greatest kindness, when we see our friends forgetting their mercies, or their duty.

V. 9-18. Nothing can give solid comfort to those who are in anguish of spirit, but the persuasion and experience of the love of God in their hearts; nor will that cordial in general be communicated, till they have "poured out their souls" repeatedly in earnest secret prayer. This must bring down the blessings which flow from the atoning blood of Christ, and are vouchsafed through his intercession; and it is necessary to render public ordinances profitable and joyful: nor can a concurrence of all possible distresses and temptations render that man miserable, or long uncomfortable, who rightly improves the precious privilege of access to the mercy-seat of a reconciled God in Christ Jesus. Yet, through Satan's temptations, and the evil of our hearts, we are often reluctant to begin, slight in presenting, and hasty in concluding, our petitions! Hence it is that we go mourning all the day long, instead of "casting our burden upon the Lord;" and our miseries will increase upon us till we take this course. The more we experience the sweet consolations which are communicated, whilst the soul is poured out before the Lord, the more we shall determine "to call upon him as long as we live;" (Note, Ps. cxvi. 2.) We ought to be very cautious how we condemn those who are uncommonly earnest in religion, as if guilty of hypocrisy, enthusiasm, or some other iniquity; and ministers especially, in their zeal against sin, ought to be careful that they do not grieve such as are "in bitterness of spirit;" but if we have rashly censured those who are not faulty, we should be ready to hear their plea, to retract our decision, to give them encouragement, and to assist them with our prayers. Among the various trials to which we are exposed, none is in general more bitter than the suspicions and censures of those whom we love and esteem. But whilst "the God of all grace" hears our prayers, we may bear even this with patience, and answer it with meekness: for though it is painful to be counted "a child of Belial" by our brethren, yet, if our loving Father sees that correction needful, and favours us with the assurance of his acceptance, and the light of his countenance, we may thankfully submit to his will. Even before those blessings which we have asked in prayer are vouchsafed, or expected with certainty, he sometimes communicates such supports to the soul as exceed every temporal advantage, as no outward trouble can destroy, and as give a relish for those mercies which before we undervalued, or overlooked. We are most likely to obtain our desires when we are rendered willing to submit them to the will of God.

V. 19-28. No temporal satisfaction can be durably comfortable, that we cannot name Samuel "Asked of the Lord," and which we do not receive from him with gratitude as an answer to our prayers, and uprightly desire to use to his glory, and in his service. If he give us children, we shall have the most comfort in them when they are most entirely his; and therefore we should devote them to him from the first; bring them up for him; and pray continually that we may see early proofs that he hath received them into his family, and made them his to serve him all their days. The vows or prayers that we have made in our distress, must be performed with gratitude, when our desires have been granted, that others may praise our God along with us, and be encouraged to trust and call upon him. It does not become the worshippers of God to be soon weary of his ordinances, but to leave them reluctantly to attend on other duties; and when men are in such haste to set out on journeys, or to engage in business, that they have not time to worship God, they are likely to proceed without his presence and blessing. There are times when domestic employments may render it a duty to be occasionally absent from public ordinances; but those seasons should abound the more in the exercises of secret devotion; and when special blessings have been conferred, and restraints are removed, the true believer will go with more eager desires to the courts of the Lord to pay his vows, and render his grateful praises. With what transport, then, will the true believer at last leave this distant land below, to ascend to the courts above, to receive the full answer of all his prayers, and to offer everlasting praises, with an uninterrupted flow of holy affections and ineffable delight!

NOTES.

CHAP. II. V. 1. The word prayer is sometimes used for any act of devotion, whether it be confined to petition, or include thanksgiving and praise, or chiefly consist of the latter. (Marg. Ref.) When Hannah requested a son, she spake in her heart, but "her voice was not heard;" but when, according to her vow, she presented Samuel to God, his glory, and the edification of his people, required a public acknowledgment. Whilst her heart was enlarged with love and gratitude, she was led on by the Holy Spirit, to speak with great enlargement and fervency, and with clear discernment of divine things, on the gracious dealings of God towards Israel, and of his dispensations towards men in general in every age.—"Her heart rejoiced," not in Samuel, but "in the Lord;" in his power, faithfulness, and love.—"Her horn," (the weapon for defence and annoyance in animals,) "was exalted in the Lord, and her mouth was enlarged over her enemies." Being delivered from the taunts and reproaches of her rival, she took that as an earnest of more important victories, and rejoiced in the hope of triumphing over the adversaries of her soul; for she "rejoiced in the salvation of the Lord," and in looking for the coming of Him, who is the salvation of his people. (Notes, Hab. iii. 17-19. Luke i. 46-55. Phil. iv. 4.)

V. 2. From personal mercies, Hannah proceeded to contemplate the perfections of God. Holiness, which comprises perfect wisdom, purity, justice, truth, goodness, and mercy, is in him alone, undivided, immutable, and complete. "There is none holy as the Lord;" all created holiness is derived dependent, mutable, and scanty; all human holiness mixed with impurity; and all the idols of the nations are abominable demons. Nay, says she, "there is none beside thee," no other God; and all creatures are "less than nothing, and vanity," in the comparison with him; neither is there "any rock, like our God;" he is our only protector, refuge, and support; and they only are safe and strong, who trust entirely in him. (Notes, Is. xliii. 8-13. xlv. 6-8. xlv. 1-7.)

V. 3. With allusion to Peninnah's misconduct, Hannah seems here to address the enemies of true religion; who, confiding in numbers, courage, or ability, glory in themselves, and insultingly despise believers. But let them

7 The LORD "maketh poor, and maketh rich: he "bringeth low, and lifteth up.

8 He raiseth up "the poor out of the dust, and lifteth up the beggar from the dunghill, to "set them among princes, and to make them inherit the throne of glory: for the pillars of the earth are the LORD's, and he hath set the world upon them.

9 He "will keep the feet of "his saints, and the wicked shall "be silent in darkness; for "by strength shall no man prevail.

10 The "adversaries of the LORD shall be broken to pieces; out of heaven shall "he thunder upon them: the LORD shall "judge the ends of the earth; and "he shall give strength unto his king, and "exalt the horn of his "anointed.

11 And Elkanah went to Ramah to his house; and cease from these proud boastings, arrogance, and reproaches; remembering, that "the LORD is a God of knowledge, and by him actions are weighed." He distinguishes men's characters, and weighs their actions in the balance, and knows when to interpose in behalf of his people: he also knows those who despise and hate him, and will in due time effectually punish them, though for a season they may seem to prosper.—The last clause may be rendered, "By him works are prepared." He orders every thing in perfect wisdom and power, and none can defeat his purposes. Or still more exactly according to the text; Are not works by him prepared? (Marg. Ref.)

V. 4—8. The events, which these verses speak of, are often called the caprices of blind fortune: but they in fact are the settled purposes of God, thus manifesting his own perfections by saving those who trust in him; and pouring contempt upon all the distinctions, in which ungodly men confide and glory. Are they proud of valour, military skill, or strength? their bows shall be broken, and themselves crushed by an inferior and despised company. Do they glory in riches, and riot in ease and luxury, whilst they despise and oppress the poor? They are often impoverished, and reduced to the necessity of hiring themselves out for bread, whilst the poor and hungry are surprisingly advanced to affluence. Do any glory (as Peninnah did) in the increase of their families, and despise the childless? Providence may soon by unexpected death reduce their numbers; whilst the desolate are as wonderfully increased. The Lord gives life, and takes it away; the most vigorous are by the stroke of his hand brought down to the gates of the grave; and the feeble are unexpectedly restored to health and strength. Such vicissitudes may likewise be often observed in men's circumstances and families; in which capacity and industry often prove utterly unavailing to prevent the adversity of some; while others are wonderfully prospered, and rise even from the lowest and most abject condition to the throne of glory. (Notes, Ps. cvii. 33—43. cxiii. 7—9. Ec. ix. 11, 12.) Events of this kind occasion surprise, and many attempt to account for them; but "the pillars of the earth are the LORD's, and he hath set the world upon them:" and the same power, which first created and established the earth in its settled course, without human help, and in such a manner as no human power can change; by his secret overruling providence does every thing, and should be acknowledged in every thing. These things are equally applicable to the dispensations of his kingdom of grace; in which he respects, not men's wisdom, learning, greatness, or imagined excellency; but selects the vile, the poor, the foolish of the world, having taught them to feel their guilt and misery, and to value his free and precious salvation. Thus he "takes the poor from the dust, and the beggar from the dunghill, to set them among princes, and to make them inherit the throne of glory;" "according to the eternal purpose, which he hath purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord." (Notes, Eph. i. 3—12.)

V. 9. The saints are those, whom the grace of God has separated from a sinful world, and sanctified unto himself: and "he will keep their feet;" so that they shall be directed and upheld in his ways; they shall not so stumble as utterly to be cast down, nor be so snared as finally to be taken captive by their enemies. But, however sinners may now boast, and fill the world with clamour and confusion, they will ere long be put to silence, and sink speechless, under the divine sentence of condemnation, into everlasting darkness and despair. "For by strength shall no man prevail," either to injure and overturn the interest of true religion, or secure themselves from merited destruction. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 10. Whilst the adversaries of God shall be totally ruined, his church shall prosper: not only as it did under the government of David, his king, whom Samuel by his command anointed: but under the government of his Son, the Messiah who hath "all power given him in heaven and earth," who shall go on conquering, till all the ends of the earth submit to his mediatorial sway, and till he come "to judge the quick and dead at his appearing;" when all enemies shall finally be put under his feet, and his glory be displayed in their destruction, and in the complete salvation of his people. the child did minister unto the LORD before Eli the priest.

12 ¶ Now "the sons of Eli were "sons of Belial; they "knew not the LORD.

13 And the priest's custom with the people was, that when any man offered sacrifice, the priest's servant came, while the flesh was in seething, with a flesh-hook of three teeth in his hand;

14 And he struck it into the pan, or kettle, or caldron, or pot; "all that the fleshhook brought up the priest took for himself. So they did in Shiloh unto all the Israelites that came thither.

15 Also "before they burnt the fat, the priest's servant came, and said to the man that sacrificed, Give flesh to roast for the priest; for he will not have sodden flesh of thee, but raw.

16 And if any man said unto him, Let them not fail to burn the fat "presently, and then take as much as thy soul desireth; then he would answer him, Nay; but thou shalt give it me now: and if not, I will take it by force.

17 Wherefore the sin of the young men was very great "before the LORD; for men "abhorred the offering of the LORD.

spake this song, there was no king over Israel, so that her words here must be prophetic, both of David the type, and Christ the antitype. "Who doth not see that the spirit of this woman, (whose name was Anna, which signifies grace,) prophesied of the Christian religion, the city of God, whose King and Founder is Christ; and of the grace of God, from which the proud are estranged, that they may fall; but the humble are filled with it, that they may rise?" (Augustine.) "Indeed this is the first time that the name of Messiah, or anointed, is found in Scripture. With this song, that of the blessed Virgin has such a perfect resemblance, that one cannot but think Hannah had respect to something higher than the quarrel between her and Peninnah," &c. (Bp. Patrick.)

V. 11. The Levites were not called to any of their peculiar services, until they were twenty-five years of age; but Samuel, being devoted to God in an especial manner, was, from a child, employed about the sanctuary in those things of which he was capable, and thus he "did minister unto the LORD." (Notes, Num. viii. 24—29.)

V. 12. The sons of Eli had been brought up in the courts of God, and instructed out of the law, and perhaps had some speculative knowledge of divine things: yet being sons of Belial, men of a rebellious and disobedient spirit, (Note, Deut. xiii. 13—18;) it is said, that "they knew not the LORD." They had neither that acquaintance with the Divine perfections, nor that disposition of heart to love them, which are essential to true religion; nor that experience of the faithfulness and loving-kindness of God, to which those attain, who trust him and call on him, and have real communion with him.—Eli appears to have been a godly man, and probably set his sons a good example in private life, and gave them good advice and instruction; but he yielded to a natural timidity and feebleness of mind, and shunned trouble and exertion. Thus he was induced to indulge his children, instead of exercising his parental authority to restrain and correct them when young; and he connived at many abuses in the service of the sanctuary, till they became customs, and made way for greater abominations; and even then he did not exert himself, as it became the high priest and judge of Israel, to punish and repress them. (Notes, 23—29. iii. 13.)

V. 13—16. The priests had the whole breast, the right shoulder, the cheeks, and the maw, allotted to them by the law out of every peace-offering. (Lev. vii. 31, 32. Deut. xviii. 3.) But in addition to this, it had become customary for the servants of the priests to come, while the flesh was boiling for the use of the offerer and his friends, (in vessels of various sizes, according to the nature of the oblation, placed in the court of the tabernacle;) and to carry away whatever the flesh-hook, or three-pronged fork, brought up: and the people, in veneration for the priesthood, quietly submitted to it; by which the appetites of the priests were gratified with greater variety, and their avarice with an additional perquisite. The sons of Eli, however, were not satisfied with this innovation, which did not always secure the choicest parts: but, whilst they neglected, or postponed, "burning the fat," (which, typifying the sacrifice of Christ, and being the appointed expression of the offerer's repentance and faith, was essential to the acceptance of the sacrifice;) they insisted upon having such portions of the flesh, as they chose, for roasting; and when any one, however conscientiously and mildly, remonstrated against this abuse in a sacred ordinance, though willing to yield every other point, the very servants were so insolent, as to threaten to take it by force! Thus these priests "lorded it over God's heritage," and "kicked at his sacrifice which he had commanded!" (Notes, Is. lvi. 9—12. Hos. iv. 6—11. Mal. i. 12—14.)

V. 17. The contempt of God and his ordinances, shewn by the sons of Eli, was in all respects very great; and the sin was aggravated by their public character and eminent station. But it is especially noted, that through them, "men abhorred the offering of the LORD." Many were so prejudiced by their scandalous behaviour, as entirely to neglect religion; others would deem it unnecessary to put themselves to the trouble and expense of going up to Shiloh with their sacrifices, there to witness such enormities; and even they, who 18 ¶ But Samuel "ministered before the LORD, being a child, girded with a linen ephod.

19 Moreover his mother made him a little coat, and brought it to him from year to year, when she came up with her husband to offer the yearly sacrifice.

20 ¶ And Eli "blessed Elkanah and his wife, and said, The LORD give thee seed of this woman, for the loan which is lent to the LORD. And they went unto their own home.

21 And the LORD "visited Hannah, so that she conceived, and bare three sons and two daughters. And the child Samuel "grew before the LORD.

22 ¶ Now Eli "was very old, and heard all that his sons "did unto all Israel; and how they lay with the women that "assembled at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

23 And he said unto them, "Why do ye such things? for "I hear of your evil dealings "by all this people.

24 Nay, my sons; for it is "no good report that I hear; "ye make the LORD's people to "transgress.

25 If one man "sin against another, the judge shall judge him: but "if a man sin against the LORD, who shall intreat for him? notwithstanding they "hearkened not unto the voice of their father, because the LORD would slay them.

26 And the child Samuel "grew on, and "was in favour both with the LORD, and also with men.

27 ¶ And there came "a man of God unto Eli, and said unto him, Thus saith the LORD, "Did I plainly appear unto the house of thy father, when they were in Egypt, in Pharaoh's house?

28 And "did I choose him out of all the tribes of Israel to be my priest, to offer upon mine altar, to burn incense, to wear an ephod before me? and "did I give unto the house of thy father all the offerings made by fire of the children of Israel?

29 Wherefore "kick ye at my sacrifice, and at mine offering, which I have commanded in my habitation; and "honourest thy sons above me, to "make yourselves fat with the chiefest of all the offerings of Israel my people?

30 Wherefore the LORD God of Israel saith, "I said indeed that thy house, and the house of thy father, should walk before me for ever; but now the LORD saith, "Be it far from me; for "them that honour me "I will honour, and they "that despise me shall be lightly esteemed.

persevered in attending, were so grieved, that they hated to go, and had no comfort in the sacred ordinances. So that the stated worship of God was likely to be quite forsaken, and general ignorance, ungodliness, profligacy, or idolatry, to ensue. It does not appear that Eli reproved his sons for these things, or refused feasting with them, on those portions which they sacrilegiously obtained! (Notes, 29. Mal. ii. 4—9.)

V. 18, 19. The contrast between the child Samuel and the wicked sons of Eli, betwixt his docility and early piety and their daring impiety, seems intentionally marked, by the accounts of them being thus interwoven.—It was a trial of the faith of Elkanah and Hannah to leave their son with such abandoned priests; but they were performing a vow, and the Lord with whom they trusted him preserved him from the contagion. Eli likewise was peculiarly pleased with him, and clothed him when employed at the sanctuary in a linen ephod, such as the ordinary priests wore, and others occasionally in the service of God; (Notes, xxii. 18. Ex. xxviii. 40, 41;) thus denoting the great expectations that he had from him. His parents also, who persevered in coming to the courts of the Lord, notwithstanding the misconduct of the priests, supplied him with every thing further that he wanted.

V. 20, 21. It seems that Elkanah and Hannah, having so hopeful a son, (whom yet they seldom saw,) were satisfied, though for several years they had no more children. It appears also that Eli, notwithstanding his misconduct in respect to his sons, really loved those who loved the Lord; and was so pleased with the conduct of Samuel, and with the piety of his parents, that his heart was enlarged in blessing them, and in praying that they might be recompensed, for devoting their only son to the service of God's sanctuary, by the comfort of more children: and his prayer in this respect was abundantly answered.

V. 22. (Note, Ex. xxxviii. 8.) These "women that assembled at the door of the tabernacle," are said by some writers to have dedicated themselves, by courses, to the service of the sanctuary, doing any work pertaining to it, which belonged to their sex; such as spinning, weaving curtains, and various services of a similar nature: and by their attendance for these services, the priests at the sanctuary had an opportunity of forming that acquaintance with them. Their business, however, was doubtless professedly of a religious nature: but when those, who ought to have been their instructors in piety, used their influence to solicit them to wickedness, the most shameful consequences followed.—A more horrible abomination can scarcely be conceived: and it can hardly have been deemed credible; did not every age produce similar examples, to the great dishonour of the gospel, and to the hardening and rejoicing of the hearts of infidels and profligates. (Notes, Hos. vi. 9, 10. Matt. xviii. 7—9. 2. Pet. ii. 12—14.)

V. 23—25. This last enormity induced Eli to reprove his sons; which he did in language very reasonable, and suited to the case of those who, though faulty, possess a tender conscience; but much too mild for such atrocious offenders. Indeed, no words ought in this case to have sufficed: the execution of condign punishment upon them was absolutely due to the insulted honour of God, and in order to counteract, by a salutary example, the fatal effects of their crimes upon the minds of the people. To have finally excluded them from the execution of every priestly office, was the least, that Eli, as the high priest and the judge of Israel, ought to have done: and if he had imitated the zeal of his tribe, "who said to his father and mother, I have not seen him, neither did he acknowledge his brethren, nor know his own children;" (Note, Deut. xxxiii. 9;) and had honoured God more than his ungodly sons, he would have done it, (29.) There were priests enough without employing such monsters of iniquity: and his neglect was chastised in the most terrible manner, in their destruction, with the slaughter of thirty thousand Israelites, in the captivity of the ark, in his own violent death, and in the ruin of his family. (Notes, iv.) His words, however, are worthy of consideration: he endeavoured to convince his sons, that their conduct was notoriously evil; that their characters were publicly infamous; that religion was scandalized; and that the Lord's people in various ways were made to transgress. If their crimes had only injured their fellow-creatures, the judge might have appointed a penalty, which being paid, or submitted to, the guilt might have been taken away: or if their sin had been of an ordinary kind, the priest, who was judge in such cases, having offered their sin-offering, and intreated the Lord for them, they might have been forgiven. But their offence was so directly against the Lord, and so interwoven with their ministrations as priests, in offering the sacrifices for sin; that no expiation could be accepted for the presumptuous crime; no intreaty or intercession could be made for them; and none could dare to stand between them and the wrath of God to which they were exposed. For the intercession of sinners with a holy God, is grounded upon the atonement of the promised Saviour, which the sacrifices that they had so horribly polluted were intended to typify; (Notes, Heb. x. 26—29.) This seems to have been the meaning couched under Eli's words, though, perhaps through his timidity, not very plainly expressed.—The case of these men was indeed bad, when their own father could not intreat the Lord for them, though he had not resolution to restrain and punish them!—It seems that they utterly disregarded his reproof; for the Lord was determined to restore the honour of his own ordinances by executing signal vengeance upon them, and therefore he left them to total obduracy. (Note, 2 Chr. xxv. 14—16.)—The original signifies, that it was pleasing to him to slay them.

V. 27, 28. This prophet was sent, as an extraordinary messenger from God, to reprove the neglect and wickedness of his ordinary ministers the priests, as most of those in after ages were: and this humiliating circumstance was in itself a token of the Lord's displeasure, and a preparation to Eli's being further warned by the mouth of the child Samuel. (Notes, iii. 8—14.) The signal favours, which the Lord had conferred on the house of Aaron and the family of Eli, were mentioned as an aggravation of his sin, which was thus marked with black ingratitude.—"Wearing an ephod," here refers to the sacred ephod with the breastplate of judgment, with which the high priest consulted the Lord.

V. 29. Eli, as high priest and judge, was bound to repress wickedness without partiality, and to maintain the worship of God in purity; so that he was deemed an accomplice in the crimes of his sons, because he connived at them. He therefore, (as well as they,) was charged with "kicking at," and despising, the sacrifices; only regarding them as the means of their gratification. (Note, 13—16.) This arose from undue regard to his sons, whom he honoured more than God himself; by preferring their safety, interest, and indulgence, to his glory: whereas he ought not to have "known his own children," but to have disregarded even their lives, suppressing paternal tenderness, in his zeal for God and his ordinances. (Marg. Ref. 2 Cor. v. 16. 1. Tim. v. 20, 21.)

V. 30. The promise of a perpetual priesthood, given first to Aaron, was afterwards made to Phinehas, the son of Eleazar, Aaron's eldest son. (Notes, Num. xxv. 11—13. 1 Chr. vi. 4—15.) but Eli was of the line of Ithamar; and it is not known on what account, and at what time, the high priesthood was transferred from Eleazar's family to that of Ithamar. In both instances a tacit condition must have been implied; namely, while "they walked before God," in faith and piety. (Note, Num. xiv. 34.) (For the meaning of the word rendered "for ever," see Note, Gen. xvii. 7, 8.)—Some think, that the abolishing of the Aaronic priesthood was also predicted.—The reason assigned for setting aside Eli's family is of universal application; "Them that honour me I will honour, and they that despise me shall be lightly esteemed." They, who choose God for their portion, trust him for salvation, love him above all

The Lord reveals himself to Samuel, and informs him of his purposes against the house of Eli, 1—14. Samuel, adjured by Eli, tells him the vision; and Eli answers submissively, 15—18. Samuel is established to be a prophet of the Lord, 19—21.

AND ^athe child Samuel ministered unto the LORD before Eli. And ^bthe word of the LORD was precious in those days; ^cthere was no open vision.

2 And it came to pass at that time, when Eli was laid down in his place, and ^dhis eyes began to wax dim, that he could not see;

3 And ere ^ethe lamp of God went out in ^fthe temple of the LORD, where the ark of God was, and Samuel was laid down to sleep; created objects, renounce worldly interests and connexions for his glory, and count nothing too valuable to part with, too hard to do, or too sharp to suffer, for his sake, and to promote his cause, shall be honoured by him, perhaps in this world, certainly in the world to come: but they who despise his authority, his salvation, cause, or glory; in comparison of the interests, ease, credit, or pleasure, of themselves or families, shall sink into contempt in this world, or in the world to come, or in both.

V. 31—34. This prediction began to be fulfilled, when the Philistines vanquished the Israelites with vast slaughter, and killed Eli's two sons in one day; and afterwards in the massacre of his descendants by Saul; and in the deposition of Abiathar for treason by Solomon, with the subsequent degradation of his family. (Notes, iv. 10—18. xxii. 17—19. 1 Kings ii. 26, 27.) As Eli had so greatly offended in old age; it was also foretold, that his descendants, even in future ages, should die in the prime of life; which no doubt was exactly fulfilled, though little dependence can be placed on the stories given by the Jewish writers as examples of it.—When Eli witnessed the removal of the ark from Shiloh, he might be said, according to the marginal reading, to “see the affliction of the tabernacle, for,” or instead of, “all the wealth which God would have given Israel.” for thus the tabernacle was spoiled of its chief glory; and when the ark was taken by the Philistines, Israel was deprived of their richest treasure.—The tidings of these events hastened the death of Eli: and had he lived to see the subsequent calamities of his family, the sight would have been most painful to his eyes, and grieving to his heart. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 35, 36. Zadok, of the line of Eleazar, was made high priest by Solomon, whose posterity continued in that office till the captivity; and concurred with the pious princes in promoting true religion: while the descendants of Eli, being excluded from the more honourable and lucrative parts of their office, would abjectly petition the priests for the lowest services, in order to obtain the meanest maintenance.—The concurrence of the priests of Aaron's line, with the kings of David's family, while they thus walked before the anointed of the Lord, typified the union of the kingly and priestly offices in Jesus Christ: which seems also to have been predicted. No mention had been made of anointing a king over Israel, when this prophecy was delivered. (Notes, 10. Deut. xvii. 14, 15.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—10. The mercies, which we receive in answer to our prayers, should not only be acknowledged with thankful praise, but should lead us to rejoice in the Lord, as the Fountain of felicity and the God of salvation; and to anticipate with cheerful hope our complete deliverance, and victory over all the enemies of our souls. From what the Lord hath done for us, we should be led to meditate upon his glorious perfections, as displayed in all his works, but especially in his dealings with sinners who hope in his mercy.—An established judgment, concerning his perfect wisdom, power, love, and faithfulness, as exercised with sovereign authority, in all the administrations of his kingdom of providence and grace; and an habitual regard to his operations in all those events, which take place through the instrumentality of second causes, or rational agents, of whatever kind or character, will confirm our belief, that they, and they only, are safe and happy, who trust in him and enjoy his favour; and that the present success, boastings, and confidence of the wicked, will shortly terminate in disappointment, misery, and despair; and the troubles of every humble believer, in triumph and exultation.—Vain and transitory are all other distinctions, except that betwixt the godly and the ungodly, which will swallow up all the rest, and endure to all eternity.—“The Lord is a God of knowledge, and by him actions are weighed.” He knows and approves his people, and he marks with abhorrence the presumptuous offender: with uncontrollable authority he dispenses to every man, as he pleases: and in his own most wise and gracious time and manner will terminate the afflictions, and advance the comforts, of his people, and over-rule every event for their good. Let us then wait his time, and submissively trust him; and we shall acknowledge at last that he hath done all things well. Every circumstance of our life and death is already appointed in the secret purpose of our God: we shall live, however exposed, till he pleases to take our breath, and then we must die, whatever efforts be made to prolong our lives. As this period, unknown to us, cannot be far distant, it is our wisdom and duty to prepare for it: making it our one great business to obtain the favour of God, and do his will; in assured hope, that, however abject our condition in this world, we shall at length inherit the throne of glory.—Though our path be dark and slippery, and beset with snares and enemies, the Lord will keep our feet, and uphold our goings, by the same power which established the earth: nor can any power prevail against his saints, or prevent the destruction of his enemies. May the Lord hasten that day, when his anointed Priest and King shall establish his authority throughout the earth, upon the ruins of all opposition!

V. 11—26. Our gracious God accepts thanks for mercies received, as prayers for further benefits; and when we offer him his own, he considers the service as a loan, and as such will recompense it. (Note, Prov. xix. 17.) Out of the mouth of babes he can perfect his praise, and by their example expose the shame of those sons of Belial who, with every advantage, know him not, but rebel against him.—We have great encouragement to devote our children to the Lord in prayer from their birth, yea, from their conception, to bring them early to his courts, and to train them up in his ways; for in this manner he generally takes them into his service, and gives them that spiritual and experimental knowledge of himself, which fortifies the heart against temptation, and is the source of all godliness. (Note, 2 Chr. xxviii. 9.)—The feeble attempts of children to serve God are noticed with condescending regard, as peculiarly pleasing to him; for in all cases, “where there is a willing mind, it is accepted according to what a man hath, and not according to what he hath not.” and the grace of God is sufficient for his feeblest servants, when in their proper place, though in the midst of the worst examples, and struggling with the most powerful temptations.—The neglect of properly educating children, and the indulgence of their wayward inclinations, is a sin which God severely

Chastises in his own people: because it seems to imply a contempt of his authority and special favour, and a disregard to his glory, as well as to their immortal souls; and because it tends to the most fatal crimes and apostasies, and to the utter decay of true religion. None are generally more abandoned than the degenerate offspring of pious persons, when they have broken through all the restraints of shame, conscience, and regard to character: and thus the cause of religion suffers, both in losing those families which were its support, and in the prejudice which their base conduct excites in the minds of beholders. And when such children of Belial have been admitted into the sacred ministry, and to go on with the forms of godliness, for the sake of emolument or authority; they prove the most fatal enemies to the cause of God, and the most destructive murderers of the souls of men. Many they mislead, but more they set against all religion; they furnish infidels and scoffers with their most formidable weapons; they supply excuses to the careless and slothful; they discourage the hearts, and damp the zeal of those, who are seriously disposed, and "cause even the LORD's people to transgress;" they buoy up the confidence of hypocrites, and by their enticements and examples tempt many to those sins, which they would otherwise have trembled to think of.—We ought not, however, on account of such men, to neglect the ordinances, truths, or precepts of God's word; but by persevering in a contrary conduct, we should enter our protest against them, and evince the difference betwixt the name and the reality of religion.—Abuses, when once introduced, are soon sanctioned by custom, and conformed to without hesitation: and when wicked men have gained one point for their own lucre, they will attempt another, and not shrink from the basest crimes to serve their selfish purposes. In such a case mild arguments and gentle rebukes are feeble weapons; the coercive arm of authority should impartially and decisively interpose: for, though the magistrate must not use his sword in matters of conscience; yet he ought to use it in punishing atrocious immorality in persons of every description: and the rulers of the church are bound, by the strongest responsibility, to exercise their spiritual authority, in excluding them from the sacred office. If, however, they escape with impunity, through the false tenderness, or partial negligence, of those who ought to execute condign punishment upon them, they will not escape the vengeance of God: and wretched indeed is the case of those, who, by their contempt of the sacrifice of Christ, are excluded from the benefit of his intercession; and who have so long hardened themselves, as to be left to judicial hardness, in the righteous judgment of God; because he hath determined to destroy them! (Note, 2 Thes. ii. 8—12.)

V. 27—36. If the servants of God yield to temptation, and repeatedly commit iniquity; he will persevere in his rebukes and chastenings, till he hath brought them to repentance: and in this process the offenders will suffer unspeakable anguish. The dishonour, which they have occasioned to the name of the Lord, shall redound in disgrace upon themselves and their families; the crimes, which they have connived at in others, through self-indulgence or partial affection, will be corrected in themselves; their expectations will be blasted, their distinctions withered, their usefulness precluded, and their honour laid in the dust, or rather transferred to those who honour God: and perhaps the repeated and severest strokes of the Lord's chastising rod shall pursue them down to the grave.—That improper regard to the interest of his family, which induces a man to offend God, often proves the immediate cause of its ruin; whilst a disregard to all personal or relative interests, when the glory of God is concerned, forms the best method of promoting its welfare.—Many of the Lord's offending people live to witness terrible effects of their misconduct; but how it would grieve their hearts, if they could foresee all the future consequences of every kind, to their families, and to the church, and in hardening sinners to their destruction! Let us endeavour to conceive of them, that we may be led to greater abhorrence and dread of sin, and to more constant watchfulness and prayer: for these things were written for our warning, that we might the more earnestly resist temptation, and strive against the beginnings of iniquity, and train up our families "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord."—But whosoever misbehaves, or is degraded, the work of the Lord shall not be stayed for want of instruments: and though others have been and are useful and faithful, as servants, in their several generations; yet the Son of God is the faithful and merciful High Priest, who doeth according to all that is in the heart of his heavenly Father, and whose priesthood shall be unchangeable and eternal. The meanest office under him is great preferment; his pleasant service is perfect freedom; he will here feed, and hereafter glorify, all who disinterestedly serve him: but the hirelings he will utterly exclude.—May he furnish and send forth many faithful ministers, who may seek his glory, and follow his example; and never henceforth suffer any, who resemble Hophni and Phinehas, to prostitute the sacred ministry to their avarice and ambition, or to disgrace it by their crimes!

NOTES.

CHAP. III. V. 1. Samuel, under the direction of Eli, diligently performed such services at the tabernacle as he was capable of. (Notes, ii. 14. 18, 19.) He is supposed at this time to have been about twelve years of age; and he was early prepared to enter on the prophetic office, for which the Lord intended him.—From the death of Moses, no more than two prophets have been mentioned; (except Deborah who is called a prophetess;) and these only delivered an occasional message, and then retired; so that their names are not recorded. (ii. 27. vi. 8—10.) Samuel was therefore the first eminent prophet after Moses; and with him prophecy was openly established: so that for several ages prophets were raised up in Israel by a regular succession. But before this time there had been "no open vision:" whatever revelation might be made to individuals, or occasional messages publicly delivered, there was no acknowledged prophet, to whom the people might resort, to know the mind and will of God: and therefore such intimations, as were then given, were more highly valued, than when the gift of prophecy became more common. (Notes, Is. xlii. 12. Am. viii. 11—14.)

V. 2, 3. The lamp in the sanctuary ought to have been constantly kept burning. (Notes, Ex. xxvii. 20, 21. Marg. Ref.)—Eli being old and infirm, had lain down long before; but Samuel was just retired to rest.

V. 4—6. The Lord called Samuel by name, in an audible voice; which he mistook for the call of Eli, who probably often disturbed him in the night through the infirmities of old age. But when Eli assured him that he did not call him, he went again to his bed, and supposed that he had been mistaken.—His respectful and affectionate assiduity, in waiting on the aged high priest, is well worthy of our notice. For he came, yea ran, at the first call; and that repeatedly: and Eli's language to him is expressive of affection.

V. 7. Samuel was not destitute of the knowledge of God, in that sense which implies the absence of true piety; as Eli's sons were: (Note, ii. 12.) but he did not know his manner of making his will known to the prophets; and was not therefore sensible that this was the voice of God. The LORD, however, over-ruled his mistake, to make Eli acquainted with his purpose of revealing himself to Samuel, and to excite his enquiry about it.

V. 8, 9. Eli could not but consider the preference, which the Lord thus shewed to a child, before himself and family, as a severe and humiliating rebuke; especially as he had reason to suspect, that the message which he was about to receive, would be a denunciation of judgments on him and his family: yet, without envy, resentment, or impatience, he gave Samuel proper directions how to behave on the occasion!

V. 10. And stood, &c. This seems to imply a visible appearance, as well as an audible voice.—It is also mentioned that the name Samuel, was twice repeated; and that Samuel omitted the word, LORD, in answering as Eli had instructed him, probably through uncertainty and timidity.

V. 11. Shall tingle. The very report would exceedingly affect the hearer, and would seem to thrill in his ears long after; as very loud and stupendous noises are used to do. (Notes, iv. 13—22. Is. xxviii. 17—19. Marg. Ref.)

V. 12. It is probable, that this message was sent to Eli some years before his death; and this forbearance of God tended to harden the hearts of Eli's sons, in presumptuous expectations of impunity: but when he had once begun to execute the threatened vengeance, he repeated his strokes till the whole had been accomplished.

V. 13. Eli did not use coercive measures to restrain his sons, as he ought to have done, and he by this omission brought ruin on his family. (Notes, ii. 12. 23—25. 29, 30.)

V. 14. The sins of pious individuals in Eli's house would be pardoned, through the sacrifice of Christ, for their eternal salvation: but the Lord had irrevocably determined, that no number of sin-offerings, or oblations, should prevail with him to continue that family in the high priesthood, or to deliver them from the awful temporal judgments which had been denounced; as perhaps both Eli and his sons hoped would be the case. (Note, Num. xv. 30, 31. Is. xxii. 8—14.)

V. 15. In the morning, Samuel opened the gates of the court of the tabernacle, into which the people came to worship, as if nothing had occurred; neither elated with the distinction, nor neglecting his business, nor mentioning the matter, nor shewing the least disrespect to Eli; but rather through his great deference and affection for him, being reluctant to inform him of the distressing message.

V. 16—18. Eli was solicitous to know the revelation which God had made to Samuel, and afraid that he would not fully inform him of it: but he must not doubt have been greatly alarmed and distressed, when he heard the awful message, from the mouth of a child, who was so respectfully affectionate to him, and dependent on him; and whom he could not possibly suspect of either artifice, or corrupt motives, or harshness of language. Yet his answer was very remarkable. He reflected on the wisdom, justice, truth, and goodness of God, as well as on his sovereignty. He acknowledged that he had a right to do as he saw good, and was assured that he would do nothing wrong. He was conscious that he deserved the terrible sentence, and acquiesced in the will of God, casting himself entirely on his mercy.—The meekness, patience, and humility of these words are very admirable; and prove that Eli was truly penitent and pious; though, in his old and infirm age, he had not sufficient courage, vigour, or even authority, to execute punishment upon his sons, who would now set him at defiance.

V. 19—21. Samuel, it seems, was after this frequently favoured with revelations from God, which he delivered to the people: and as these were

The Israelites, smitten by the Philistines, send for the ark, 1-4. The Philistines are afflicted; but encourage one another, 5-9. Israel is again smitten, with great slaughter: the ark is taken, and Eli's two sons are slain, 10, 11. On hearing these tidings Eli falls and breaks his neck, 12-18. The wife of Phinehas travails, names her child Ichabod, and dies, 19-22.

AND the word of Samuel *came to all Israel. Now Israel went out against the Philistines to battle, and pitched beside ^aEben-ezer: and the Philistines pitched in ^bAphek.

2 And the Philistines *put themselves in array against Israel: and when they joined battle, ^cIsrael was smitten before the Philistines; *and they slew of ^dthe army in the field about four thousand men.

4 So the people sent to Shiloh, that they might bring from thence the ark of the covenant of the LORD of hosts, ^hwhich dwelleth between ⁱthe cherubims: and the two sons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, were there ^jwith the ark of the covenant of God.

punctually accomplished, his appointment to be "a prophet of the LORD" was known and acknowledged, throughout the land. (Marg. Ref.) "By the Word of the LORD" may either mean, by an audible voice from God; or by the appearance of him, "whose name is called the Word of God."

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS

Men are seldom duly sensible of the value of their mercies, till they are deprived of them: and this perversity operates even in matters pertaining to religion. We, who are favoured with the written word, and the public preaching of the gospel by ministers of varied talents and endowments, can scarcely conceive how greatly our forefathers, in days of ignorance and persecution, valued a Bible, or the opportunity of hearing a faithful sermon; and how much numbers still value them in different parts of the world. (Note, Deut. xxxi. 10-13.) This should teach us to be thankful, and to improve our privileges, lest the Lord should shew us the preciousness, by the loss, of them.—He disposes of his special favours in wise and holy sovereignty, without confining himself to age, station, or office in his church; but he orders every thing so as to correct such as offend him, and to "honour those who honour him."—Docility, diligence, and an humble self-denying disposition in youth, are happy indications of an honourable and useful life.—They, who reduce to practice what they have been already taught, shall be favoured with further discoveries concerning the truth and will of God: and where the heart is upright, mistakes and infirmities will be pardoned, rectified, and over-ruled for good.—Young persons ought to behave with assiduous and attentive kindness to the aged; and to shew a submissive respect to their superiors, even when faulty and under Divine rebukes. But no deference to men, because every way superior to themselves, must influence those, whom the Lord employs as his messengers, to conceal or mutilate their message: and they are most unwise in their spiritual concerns, who wish to be flattered; nay, who do not desire above all things to know the whole of the revealed will of God, and the worst of their own state and case. For though temporal punishment may be unalterably determined; yet, blessed be God, the blood of Jesus cleanses the penitent believer from all sin, and assuredly delivers from eternal misery; and He casts out none that come to him, however vile they have made themselves.—Presumptuous hopes of impunity, because the Lord is long-suffering, ruin multitudes who postpone repentance till God hath "sworn in his wrath that they shall not enter into his rest:" and when he begins to take vengeance, he will also fully execute his most tremendous threatenings.—If temporal sufferings may be so terrible, as to "cause the ears of all who hear of them to tingle," what will be the everlasting punishment of the wicked! Let us then humble ourselves before God, ere the door of mercy be for ever shut: let us accept of his chastisement, however sharp: let us submit to him, because he is a mighty Sovereign, and because he is perfectly wise, righteous, and merciful: let us cast ourselves upon his mercy, and seek his salvation; and study to shew our repentance, not only by good words, but by good works; by restraining others from sin, as well as avoiding it ourselves, and by faithfully improving every talent committed to us. Then, though the infirmities of age disable us for usefulness, and we meet with many humiliating dispensations; we may rejoice to see others likely to be useful when we are gone; and should willingly impart to them the best counsel we can, though their rising reputation be attended with our dishonour. In this case, should the prospect for our families, our country, or the church of God, be gloomy; we may encourage ourselves in the hope of that state, where "the wicked cease from troubling, and where the weary are at rest."

came into the camp, ^aall Israel shouted with a great shout, so that the earth rang again.

6 And when the Philistines heard the noise of the shout, they said, ^bWhat meaneth the noise of this great shout in the camp of the Hebrews? And they understood that the ark of the LORD was come into the camp.

7 And the Philistines ^cwere afraid; for they said, God is come into the camp. And they said, Woe unto us! for there hath not been such a thing ^dheretofore.

8 Woe unto us! who shall deliver us out of the hand of these mighty Gods? these ^eare the Gods that smote the Egyptians with all the plagues in the wilderness.

9 *Be strong, and quit yourselves like men, O ye Philistines, that ye be not servants unto the Hebrews, ^fas they have been to you: *quit yourselves like men, and fight.

10 ¶ And the Philistines fought, and ^gIsrael was smitten, and they fled ^hevery man into his tent; and there was ⁱa very great slaughter: for there fell of Israel thirty thousand footmen.

11 And the ^jark of God was taken, and ^kthe two sons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, ^lwere slain.

immediately after the death of Samson; and that the slaughter at that time made of the Philistines encouraged the Israelites to attack them. If so, Eli judged Israel during the whole life of Samson, who lived about forty years; as he too judged Israel twenty years. (18. Notes, Judg. xv. 20. xvi. 30. 31.) Again, some are of opinion, that these events happened about the middle of the forty years, during which the Philistines oppressed Israel: but on that supposition, Samson must have been born at least twenty years before that oppression began, which does not accord with the narrative: (Note, Judg. xiii. 1:) and if his exploits only made way for the defeats recorded in this chapter; how could it be said that he began to deliver Israel? Others, however, think that the forty years, during which the Philistines oppressed Israel, ended about seven months after Eli's death, when the ark of God was restored: and in that case the subsequent oppression by the Philistines must be considered as distinct from that mentioned in the book of Judges. The chronology of these times is, in fact, to us abstruse and uncertain. (Notes, Judg. iii. 11. xi. 26.)—Perhaps Samuel was at this time about twenty years of age. It does not appear that he was consulted on this occasion.

V. 3. These elders seem to have been miserably sunk in ignorance and formality, which was the genuine consequence of the impiety of the priests. Though ripe for dreadful judgments, they had no idea that the defeat which they had received, was intended as a warning to repent; and they proposed a very foolish expedient, to secure the assistance of JEHOVAH. They had heard what wonders had formerly been wrought for Israel, when the ark, the symbol of the Lord's presence, was by his command carried before the people, under the care of holy men, who trusted and glorified him; and when Israel was comparatively an obedient people, fighting under his banner; and they did not make the obvious and important distinction, between the outward sign or token, and the invisible presence of the Almighty, as assisting his servants. In fact, they made an idol of the ark, and imagined that, (without humiliation before God or repentance of their sins,) by fetching it into the army, by two sons of Belial, who were doomed to destruction, and whose presence brought a curse into the camp, (Notes, ii. 12. 31-34. Josh. vii. 10-13. xxii. 20.) they could induce God to fight for them, though he was evidently contending against them! Nay, they spake as if the ark itself could deliver them! (Marg. Ref.)

V. 4, 5. It is probable, that Hophni and Phinehas did not so much as ask the consent of their aged father on this occasion. Being hardened to their destruction, they were left to venture presumptuously into the holy of holies, and to carry the ark into the army: and thus, without any proper call, they were found within the reach of the sword of the Philistines, by which they were destined to be slain. (ii. 25. Notes, ii. 31-34.)—Doubtless they were much pleased with the office, and proud of coming as the supposed deliverers of Israel, bearing the ark of the covenant. (Notes, Lev. x. 1-3.) And when they entered the camp, the whole army was infatuated with the same groundless presumption, and shouted for joy as if already triumphant!—It is very doubtful, whether it was ever lawful to carry the ark into the army, without the express command of God. (Notes, xiv. 16-23. 2 Sam. xi. 10, 11.)

V. 7-9. It is no wonder, that the Philistines made no distinction betwixt the ark, and that invisible God, whose presence with his believing people it denoted, when the Israelites themselves entirely overlooked it. (Notes, 3-5.) The Philistines, probably thought that JEHOVAH was indeed a God, the God of Israel; but then so was Dagon a god, the god of Philistia. (Notes, v. 1, 2, Judg. xvi. 23, 24.) This therefore did not exclude the hope of gaining the mastery, and tended on this occasion to increase their intrepidity and resolution. They spake of the works of JEHOVAH in Egypt and in the wilderness, in language very expressive of their partial information and confused apprehensions concerning them. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 10, 11. On the former defeat, the Israelites returned to the camp: but this was so entire, that the survivors were totally dispersed. Probably Hophni and Phinehas fell fighting in defence of the ark. (Note, 4, 5.)

12 ¶ And there ran a man of Benjamin out of the army, and came to Shiloh the same day, ^bwith his clothes rent, and ^cwith earth upon his head.

13 And when he came, lo, Eli ^dsat upon a seat by the wayside, watching: for ^ehis heart trembled for the ark of God. And when the man came into the city and told ^fit, all the city cried out.

14 And when Eli heard the noise of the crying, he said, What ^gmeaneth the noise of this tumult? And the man came in hastily, and told Eli.

15 Now Eli ^hwas ⁱninety and eight years old; ^jand his eyes were ^kdim, that he could not see.

16 And the man said unto Eli, ^lI am he that came out of the army, and I fled to-day out of the army. And he said, ^mWhat ⁿis there done, ^omy son?

17 And the messenger answered and said, ^pIsrael is fled before the Philistines: and there hath been also a great slaughter among the people; and thy two sons also, Hophni and Phinehas, are dead; and the ark of God is taken.

18 And it came to pass, ^qwhen he made mention of the ark of God, that he fell from off the seat backward, by the side of the gate, and ^rhis neck brake, and he died; for he was an old man, and heavy: and he had judged Israel forty years.

19 ¶ And his daughter-in-law, Phinehas' wife, was with child, ^snear to ^tbe delivered: and when she heard the tidings that the ark of God was taken, and that her father-in-law and her husband were dead, she bowed herself and travailed; for her pains ^ucame upon her.

V. 13—18. Though Eli had been most criminally indulgent to his sons, and had abundant reason to expect to hear of their death, as well as of the defeat of Israel; yet his chief anxiety was about the ark of God. Accordingly he bare the tidings of Israel's calamity, and of the death of his sons, in the midst of their unrepented crimes, with fortitude and resignation; but when he heard that "the ark of God was taken;" his reflection on the dishonour to God, and to religion, and the dreadful loss to his people, which his negligence had occasioned, was more than he could support; and falling down in a swoon, his neck brake and he died. Thus his death, under a divine rebuke for his sins, has been a salutary warning to others, even to this present day; yet in the circumstances of it he testified his supreme regard to the honour of God, and the interests of religion, above all personal and relative considerations; and notwithstanding all his faults, he died in, and even by, a lively exercise of love to God and his ordinances.

V. 19—22. The wife of Phinehas (though married to so wicked a priest,) appears to have been a person of eminent piety. The death of her father-in-law and of her husband contributed to hasten her death; but her dying regret was for the captivity of the ark, and the departure of the glory from Israel; for with her parting breath she named her son Ichabod, or inglorious. In this her judgment was right; the presence and ordinances of God were the chief glory of Israel; and the loss of them was the departure of that glory. 'This chiefly lay at her heart, as the concerns of religion do on all pious spirits.' (Bp. Patrick.) But if she supposed that the Lord had finally departed from Israel, she was under a great mistake. From Shiloh, indeed, the ark, the glory of Israel, was finally removed; (for probably the inhabitants of that city had too much resembled the abandoned priests;) but it was restored to Israel, and established in another place: (Notes, Ps. lxxviii. 61—64. 68, 69. Jer. vii. 12—15:.) neither was the ruin of Eli's family the destruction of the Aaronic priesthood.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When the judgments denounced in the word of God do not bring sinners to repentance, the speedy execution of them may be expected.—The nearer any persons are to the Lord in profession, and the greater privileges they are favoured with, the more certain and dreadful will be their punishment, if they thence take encouragement to commit iniquity.—Unhumbled professors of true religion are apt to think that they are entitled to help from God, because they are called by his name, though they disgrace it with their crimes; and to murmur at those rebukes, by which they are warned to repent and to amend their lives. As their dependence is placed upon external forms, the increase of their hypocrisies buoys up their presumptuous hopes; and they often take the name of the Lord in vain, and dishonour him more in attending on his ordinances, than they could do by neglecting them; so that he abhors those services for which they expect his favour. (Notes, Ps. l. 16—21. Is. i. 10—20. xlvi. 1, 2. lviii. 1—4. Ez. xx. 39. Matt. xxiii. 14.) But he will rather let his avowed enemies triumph for a season, than encourage hypocrites, whose crimes still more dishonour his holy name.—The most avowed infidels and atheists, and the most atrocious and depraved offenders, have their pangs of conviction and disquietude of mind: with all their efforts, they cannot utterly exclude forebodings of fatal effects from their rebellion against the God of heaven; and though they conceal and quiet this apprehension for a time, and

CHAP. V.

The Philistines place the ark in the temple of Dagon at Ashdod, 1, 2. Dagon falls down before it, and is broken in pieces, 3—5. The Philistines are smitten with emerods at Ashdod, Gath, and Ekron, when the ark is brought to those cities, 6—12.

AND the Philistines ^atook the ark of God, and brought it from ^bEben-ezer unto ^cAshdod.

2 When the Philistines took the ark of God, they brought it into the house of ^dDagon, and set it by Dagon.

3 ¶ And when they of Ashdod arose early on the morrow, behold, ^eDagon was fallen upon his face to the earth, before the ark of the Lord. And they took Dagon, and ^fset him in his place again.

4 And when they arose early on the morrow-morning, behold, Dagon was fallen upon his face to the ground before the ark of the Lord; and ^gthe head of Dagon and both the palms of his hands were cut off upon the threshold; only ^hthe stump of Dagon was left to him.

5 Therefore ⁱneither the priests of Dagon, nor any that come into Dagon's house, ^jtread on the threshold of Dagon in Ashdod unto this day.

even prosper in their ungodliness, yet their fear will come upon them, and even far worse than they ever foreboded. (Notes, Prov. x. 24.)—Whilst the impenitent are consigned to final ruin, the offending servants of God, who tremble at his judgments, and for the dishonour which they have occasioned to his name, may die in an awful manner, for a warning to those who are left behind; (Notes, 1 Kings xiii. 20—32;) yet, when death in its most formidable shape finds men humbled for their sins, crying for mercy, and more anxious for the cause of God and truth, than for the most valued earthly comforts, it will eventually prove a blessing; yea, every dispensation is mercy, which rescues the immortal soul from hell.—What miseries do some ungodly men entail upon all connected with them! And what an awful lesson is here for parents, who are tempted to connive at the first appearances of vice in their children! Let them reflect on Eli's death; on the still more dreadful condition of his sons; on the dying agonies and sorrows of Phinehas's wife; on the slaughter of Israel, the ark taken captive, "the glory departed," and Shiloh forsaken; and let them tremble to think "how great a matter a little fire kindleth." (Notes, 2 Kings, xi. 1, 2. 2 Chr. xviii. 1. xix. 2, 3. xxi. 3, 4.) —'In the midst of life we are in death;' but some situations peculiarly remind those placed in them to be ready for a sudden call; and few more than pregnancy.—But they who belong to the Lord, need not desire to survive when the ordinances of God are withdrawn, and his cause is run down; little comfort can they take in their children, or in life itself, under such circumstances: yet even these trials will prove blessings, where the ark and cause of God are thus dear to the heart.—Though the glory may successively be withdrawn from sinful nations, cities, or villages; yet it shall never depart from Israel, but shall shine forth in one place, when it has been eclipsed in another; for Jesus, our High Priest, ever liveth to maintain his own cause, and the gates of hell shall never prevail against his church; whatever may be the triumphing boasts of his enemies, or the desponding fears of his people.

NOTES.

CHAP. V. V. 1, 2. Besides the other wickedness of Israel, the idolatry of the Danites yet remained unpunished and unrepessed; and this might be one reason why the Lord was pleased to deliver his ark into the hand of these idolaters. (Notes, Judg. xx. 8—11. 21—25.) The Philistines concluded that they had overcome the God of Israel, by the help of Dagon, and placed the ark in his temple as a trophy of their victory. (Note, Judg. xvi. 23, 24.) But they did not attempt to destroy it, as Israel destroyed the images of the Canaanites. (Note, 1 Sam. v. 21.) It has, indeed, been conjectured, that they intended to have worshipped it, in conjunction with their former idol, though in subordination to him.

V. 3—5. The image of Dagon is supposed to have been framed, above like a man, and below like a fish; when, therefore, the head and hands were broken off, a deformed trunk alone remained. Thus the helplessness and insensibility of the dumb idol were made apparent; yet the Philistines, in this respect as senseless as their idol, instead of despising so contemptible a stock, revered as sacred the very threshold on which the idol had been disgraced and broken; and thus perpetuated the memory of JEHOVAH's triumph by their own foolish superstition! They likewise either continued to worship the stump of Dagon, or got a new image of him formed as soon as possible. (Notes, Ps. cxv. 3—8. Is. xli. 5—7. xlii. 12—20.)

6 ¶ But ^{the} hand of the LORD was heavy upon them of Ashdod, and he destroyed them, and smote them with emerods, even Ashdod and the coasts thereof.

7 And when the men of Ashdod ^{saw} that it was so, they said, "The ark of the God of Israel shall not abide with us: for his hand is sore upon us, and ^{upon} Dagon our god.

8 ¶ They sent therefore, and gathered all the lords of the Philistines unto them, and said, "What shall we do with the ark of the God of Israel? And they answered, Let the ark of the God of Israel be carried about unto ^{Gath}. And they carried the ark of the God of Israel about thither.

9 And it was so, that after they had carried it about, ^{the} hand of the LORD was against the city with a very great destruction: and he smote the men of the city, both small and great, ^{and} they had emerods in their secret parts.

10 ¶ Therefore they sent the ark of God to Ekron. And it came to pass, as the ark of God came to Ekron, that the Ekronites cried out, saying, They have brought about the ark of the God of Israel to ^{us}, to slay us and our people.

11 So they sent and gathered together all the lords of the Philistines, and said, Send away the ark of the God of Israel, and let it go again to his own place, that it slay ^{us} not, and our people: for there was ^a deadly destruction throughout all the city; the hand of God was very heavy there.

12 And the men that ^{died} not were smitten with the emerods; and ^{the} cry of the city went up to heaven.

CHAP. VI.

At the end of seven months the Philistines consult about sending back the ark, 1-9. They bring it on a new cart, with oblations, to Beth-shemesh, 10-18. The Beth-shemeshites are smitten for looking into it, 19, 20. They send to the men of Kirjath-jearim to fetch it, 21.

AND ^{the} ark of the LORD was in the country of the Philistines seven months.

V. 6-12. As the Philistines were not convinced by this defeat of Dagon that their attempt to keep the ark in captivity was foolish and ruinous, they were visited with some fatal judgment—probably a pestilence, which swept away multitudes; while the rest were afflicted very generally with emerods, which put them to excruciating pain, and extorted the most doleful lamentations. The emerods are supposed to have been the worst sort of the disease called the piles. Under this terrible visitation, they sent the ark of God from city to city, probably in hopes of thus obtaining deliverance; but the same calamities attended the inhabitants wherever they carried it. (Notes, Ps. lxxviii. 65, 66. Zech. xii. 3-5.) Thus, while the Israelites were so degenerate as to make no attempt for the recovery of this sacred symbol of JERUSALEM'S gracious presence—and, indeed, were utterly unworthy of being honoured in such a service—he himself rendered the Philistines willing to send back the ark; and so over-ruled these events, as to expose idolatry to the deepest contempt, and to convince the obstinate idolaters that they could not profane his sacred institutions with impunity. (Note, Josh. vii. 6-9. Ps. cxv. 1, 2.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The Lord may, for a season, permit his cause to be run down, in order to expose the hypocrisy, to undermine the vain confidence, or to chastise the wickedness, of his professed people; for he knows how, without any human help, and in defiance of all enemies, to recover it from the ruins, and to establish it in greater splendour; and this may account for the successes of infidels and atheists through so many countries, which have long professed, but corrupted and disgraced, Christianity. But the short-lived triumphings of the wicked on such occasions, will terminate in their deeper disgrace, and more dreadful punishment. Men may be convinced by the judgments of God that he is a terrible enemy; that it is in vain to contend with him, and be constrained to render him a feigned submission; (Notes, Ps. lxxvi. 1-3. lxxxi. 15;) but nothing, except his renewing grace, will produce genuine repentance, faith, and love, and conversion from every idol to his worship and service. Yet those confessions, which are extorted by torment or terror, are honourable to God, though useless to the impenitent, (Mark v. 7;) and he will glorify his name in the punishment of his enemies, as well as in the salvation of his people. When he contendeth, he will overcome; and all endeavours to evade or escape his wrath will only increase the sinner's misery, till he be either brought to true repentance, or sunk under final condemnation. When the Lord's appointed time shall arrive, all attempts to uphold the falling kingdom of idolatry, superstition, infidelity, or profaneness, will be utterly unavailing; and destruction will overtake all those who are not then led to repentance. It is equally dangerous to oppose those partial revivals of true religion, which take place from age to age; for the ark of God will cause every Dagon to fall down

5 Wherefore, ye shall make images of your emerods, and images of your ^{mice} that mar the land; and ye shall ^{give} glory unto the God of Israel: peradventure he will ^{lighten} his hand from off you, and from ^{off} your gods, and from off your land.

6 Wherefore then do ye ^{harden} your hearts, as ^{the} Egyptians and Pharaoh hardened their hearts? When he had wrought ^{wonderfully} among them, ^{did} they not let ^{the} people go, and they departed?

7 Now therefore make a ^{new} cart, and take two milch-kine, ^{on} which there hath come no yoke, and tie the kine to the cart, and bring their calves home from them:

8 And take the ark of the LORD, and lay it up in the cart; and put the ^{jewels} of gold, which ye return him ^{for} a trespass-offering, in a coffer by the side thereof; and send it away, that it may go.

9 And see, if it goeth up by the way of his own coast to Beth-shemesh, then ^{he} hath done us this great evil: but if not, then we shall know that it is ^{not} his hand that smote us; it was ^a chance that happened to us.

before it, till all of them be broken in pieces. The zeal and pertinacity with which the grossest idolatries and most stupid superstitions have been supported, against the cause of God and truth, display the blindness of fallen man's understanding, as much as the depravity of his affections. Thus, convinced sinners, also, with perverse assiduity, set up again those false confidences and worldly idols, which seemed to be thrown down under the preaching of the gospel; or when the old delusion will no longer soothe their consciences, they exchange it for another equally absurd, as long as they continue to love sin, and to hate the spiritual service and humbling truth of God. But when Christ, the true ark of the covenant, really enters the heart of fallen man, (which is indeed Satan's temple,) all idols will fall before his presence and power; every endeavour to set them up again will be in vain; all iniquity will be forsaken; all unrighteous gain restored; and the Lord will claim and possess the throne. Yet pride, self-love, and worldly lusts, though dethroned and crucified, still remain within us. Let us, then, watch and pray against their prevalence; let us seek to have them more entirely destroyed; and let us consider death as the final destruction of our worst enemy, "the sin that dwelleth in us."

NOTES.

CHAP. VI. V. 1. Seven months. So long the Philistines endured the judgments of God before they yielded to restore the ark, and so long the Israelites neglected all endeavours to recover it! But it was far more honourable to the Lord to constrain the Philistines to send it back of their own accord, than that war should wrest it, or that money should ransom it, out of their hands. (Note, iv. 6-12.)

V. 2-9. It has been conjectured, that when the emerods and pestilence exceedingly afflicted the inhabitants of each city, to which the ark was carried, the Philistines placed it in the open field; and that then a vast multitude of mice began to destroy their crops, and spoil the land. At length, however, being no longer able to endure, they determined to send back the ark, and consulted their priests and diviners about it; whose answer contains such inconsistencies, as aptly develop the workings of the human heart in difficult circumstances. From the tradition of Pharaoh's rebellion, and the destruction of him and his subjects, they seriously exhorted the people not to harden their hearts, but to let the ark go; but they did not advise them to repent, to renounce idolatry, or to worship JERUSALEM. Nay, they were reluctant to conclude that their afflictions were from him, and framed an artful device for putting it to the trial; and, if not convinced by another complicated miracle, they seemed determined to keep the ark, and ascribe their sufferings to chance. (Notes, Is. xxvi. 10, 11. Matt. xvi. 1-4.) Some trespass-offerings they supposed to be necessary, if the ark must be restored, in order that "the Lord might lighten his hand from off them;" or that they "might know wherefore

CHAP. VII.

The ark is removed to Kirjath-jearim, and remains there twenty years, 1, 2. At Samuel's exhortation the Israelites repent, and humble themselves before God at Mizpeh, 3-6. The Philistines prepare to assault them: but, while Samuel prays and sacrifices, the Lord discomfits them with thunder before Israel, 7-11. Samuel calls the place Eben-ezer, and sets up a memorial, 12. The Philistines are subdued, and Samuel judges Israel, 13-17.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When transgressors, under Divine rebukes, harden themselves in sin, they are sure to prolong and multiply their own miseries; and it is so much more pleasant to learn wisdom by the experience of others, than by our own, that it would be deemed madness to do otherwise, were it not so general.—Those convictions, which spring from terror without humiliation, will never produce more than a reluctant and submissive obedience: and the indignant hearts of proud rebels avail themselves of every pretence to ascribe afflictions to chance, rather than to the hand of God, and to infer that it is not absolutely necessary to part with every sin.—If correction be withdrawn, while the heart is thus disposed, the respite proves an encouragement to proceed in transgression: if the affliction be continued after a partial amendment, this is deemed an argument that repentance and reformation are useless; and every dispensation of Providence eventually occasions increasing guilt and condemnation.—Natural reason and conscience, with the fragments of traditional revelation, may convince men that some method should be used to appease the anger of God, and enable them to give plausible advice on the subject; and when sinners are suffering under afflictions, and the terrors of an awakened conscience, they are ready to put themselves to much expense and self-denial, in order to purchase peace with God: but faith alone, appropriating the information of the sacred Scriptures, can discover what oblation he will accept, or in what way he will be approached by his sinful creatures. (Note, Mic. vi. 6-8.)—The inconsistencies and superstitions of idolaters, and the lukewarmness of his professing people, will in due season combine to display his glory to greater advantage. The very brute creation, when he pleases, shall shame man's ingratitude and disobedience: his enemies shall furnish memorials of their own disgrace, and all shall be constrained to say, "This hath God wrought!"—Many appear joyful at the revival of religion, and favourable to its truths and ordinances, who are too busy about the world to be at much trouble or expense about them: and numbers unite in external observances, who have no inward reverence for the divine majesty.—The true glory of religion consists in its spiritual excellency: and that simplicity, which the carnal mind despises, forms its highest ornament. But presumptuous intrusion into "the secret things which belong to God," forms a heinous provocation, and springs from a careless and impenitent heart: and the nearer to the Lord such an intruder is, in profession, and in office, the greater is his guilt, and the more terrible will be his punishment: for though we are not under the same dispensation that Israel was; yet "our God is still a consuming fire," and must be "worshipped with reverence and godly fear." Instead of this reverence, the carnal heart substitutes a slavish fear; and when rebuked for presumption and contempt, or alarmed with discoveries of the justice and holiness of God, it will, with the Gadarenes, or these Beth-shemites, request the Saviour to depart, and vainly seek to escape the Lord's displeasure, by an entire forgetfulness of him. (Note, Matt. viii. 23, 24.) Thus, many stifle their convictions, and put away salvation from them: and by running into one extreme or another, the very truths and ordinances of God, which are the means of life and salvation to some, become the occasion of deeper condemnation to others. Let us always consider what a holy LORD God he is, with whom we have to do; and may he give us a spirit of humble fear, filial love, and heavenly hope, that we may be preserved from fatal mistakes, and profit by the salvation of the gospel, and the sacred ordinances with which we are favoured in his providence!

NOTES.

CHAP. VII. V. 1, 2. Kirjath-jearim lay in the road between Beth-shemesh and Shiloh. (Marg. Ref.) The inhabitants, being convinced that the ark was indeed the pledge of their prosperity, and only dangerous when treated he did not." These were indeed such oblations as he had not required; but well suited to be monuments of their shame, and of the Lord's triumph over them. In short, they evinced how unwilling they were to yield, and how unable to resist. As the Egyptians hired Israel with jewels of gold to depart from them, yet were unwilling to let them go quite away, (Note, Ex. vii. 35, 36.) so did the Philistines respecting the ark, in taking which they had so greatly triumphed.

V. 10-16. That two kine, which had never been yoked, and whose calves were left at home, should draw quietly, and keep the road without a driver, for several miles, neither stopping, turning aside, nor attempting to return; and that, while they shewed the force of instinct in lowing for their calves, they should be urged forward with a stronger impulse to the very place which the Philistines had mentioned, and stop there, constituted, in all respects, a most astonishing miracle; and the obedience of the animals in carrying back the ark, reproached the negligence of Israel. The presumption of the Philistines in requiring this additional proof of JEHOVAH'S power, was very great; but it was over-ruled for the manifestation of his glory, and to their deeper condemnation in cleaving to idolatry. The triumph of the ark was completed, when it was thus miraculously restored, with oblations, and the distant attendance of the lords of the Philistines.—Beth-shemesh was a city of the priests in the border of the land; (Josh. xxi. 16.) and no doubt some of that order, very properly, offered the kine in sacrifice before the ark, though kine in ordinary circumstances were not appointed for burnt-offerings: (Notes, Lev. i. 1-4. iii. 1.) but nothing, which had been used in this sacred service, could lawfully be employed to any common use. Their other sacrifices also were suitable expressions of joy and gratitude: but placing the ark upon a great stone, rather than taking it into their houses, or preparing a tent for it, seems to have been improper. The inhabitants of Kirjath-jearim gave it a different reception, and were accepted in so doing. (vii. 1, 2.)

V. 18. It seems evident that no more than five golden mice were sent; (4;) but the inhabitants of the villages, as well as of the cities, contributed to the expense.—The great stone of Abel, (or weeping, being probably, so called on account of the mourning of the people over those who were smitten,) seems to have been the boundary, at that time, between the land of the Philistines and that of Israel.

V. 19-21. The Beth-shemites availed themselves of this opportunity to gratify their curiosity, by presumptuously looking into the ark; even the outside of which was not to be seen uncovered by the Levites who carried it. (Num. iv. 5. 6. 15.) Perhaps they pretended to examine whether the Philistines had taken away the tables of the law: but it does not appear, that they had so much as looked into it. Some might have presumed on the priestly office, which aggravated the offence; and others on having first received the ark, and offered sacrifices before it. But the Lord was provoked by their irreverent intrusion, to punish many of them with sudden death. (Notes, Lev. x. 1. 3. 2 Sam. vi. 6, 7.)—The number, as it stands in our version, is so large to be found in one small city, and the expression in the original is so uncommon, that it is generally allowed some mistake is made: Josephus mentions only seventy. The passage may be rendered "He smote—seventy men, even fifty out of a thousand men;" which supposes that about 1400 persons were present, and that a twentieth part was slain: and this appears to be the genuine meaning of the passage. The Beth-shemites seem not to have been duly humbled for their offence; but they were so terrified, that, like the Philistines, they wanted to have the ark removed from them, and solicited the men of Kirjath-jearim to fetch it; though that was not a city of the priests. (Notes, Num. xvii. 12, 13. 2 Sam. vi. 8-11. Marg. Ref.) house of ^bAbinadab in the hill, and sanctified Eleazar his son to keep the ark of the LORD.

2 And it came to pass, while the ark abode in Kirjath-jearim, that the time was long; for it was twenty years: and all the house of Israel lamented after the LORD.

3 ¶ And Samuel spake unto all the house of Israel, saying, If ye do ^creturn unto the LORD with all your hearts, ^dthen ^eput away the strange gods and Ashtaroth from among you, and ^fprepare your hearts unto the LORD, and ^gserve him only; and he will deliver you out of the hand of the Philistines.

4 Then the children of Israel did put away ^hBaalim and Ashtaroth, and served the LORD only.

6 And they gathered together to Mizpeh, and ^ldrew water, and poured ^mit out before the LORD, and ⁿfasted on that day, and said there, ^o"We have sinned against the LORD." And Samuel ^pjudged the children of Israel in Mizpeh.

7 ¶ And when the Philistines heard that the children of Israel were gathered together to Mizpeh, the lords of the Philistines went up against Israel. And when the children of Israel heard ^qit, they were ^rafraid of the Philistines.

8 And the children of Israel said to Samuel, ^s"Cease not to cry unto the LORD our God for us, that he will save us out of the hand of the Philistines."

with irreverence, were ready to entertain it. It does not appear that Abinadab, and Eleazar his son, were priests, or Levites, though some expositors take it for granted that they were. But it may be questioned, whether an intended neglect of that tribe for their wickedness, were not shewn on this occasion; so that no notice was taken of them in a matter, which peculiarly belonged to them wholly. We are not so much as informed, whether any of them were employed to fetch the ark to Kirjath-jearim, or whether the Lord dispensed with the irregularity of the inhabitants of that city, in carrying it themselves.—Here the ark remained, till David removed in the beginning of his reign over all Israel, (2 Sam. vi.) but it is not agreed how many years intervened, certainly many more than twenty; so that the expression twenty years, refers to the time that passed previously to the events recorded in the rest of this chapter.—The Israelites continued in subjection to the Philistines, and in general at first careless about the ark or the worship of the Lord: but we may suppose that Samuel was labouring, incessantly and successfully, from town to town, throughout the whole land, to bring them to repentance, and to revive true religion among them; and at length his success was so great, that "all the house of Israel lamented after the LORD."—Some learned men think that the tabernacle had before this been removed from Shiloh, perhaps to Nob. (xxi. 1.)

V. 3, 4. When Samuel, by the Divine blessing, had brought numbers of the people to a sense of their sin and of their duty, he urged the heads of their several tribes to concur in a public and avowed reformation, and re-establishment of the worship of JEHOVAH. (Note, Judg. ii. 11. 13.) Few words are indeed used; but they are so expressive, that we cannot hesitate in pronouncing this to have been one of the most general and effectual revivals of religion which ever took place in the church of Israel.

V. 5, 6. (Note, Judg. xx. 1, 2.) The ceremony of "drawing water, and pouring it out before the LORD," might be an emblem of the effects of divine grace upon the heart; which disposes it to pour forth itself as water before the Lord, in penitential confessions, with tears of godly sorrow, and in fervent prayers and thanksgivings.—Some indeed think, that the water was used in a kind of baptismal ablution or purification; others, that it was an expression of their holy joy in God; and others, that it was intended to purify the ground on which the altar was built.—On this occasion Samuel publicly acted as judge, or chief magistrate, in settling differences, and perhaps in punishing criminals and obstinate idolaters; though he seems to have previously exercised authority in a more private manner.—Fasted. (Notes, Judg. xx. 26-28. 2 Chr. xx. 3, 4.)

V. 7. The Philistines considered this general convention of Israel, as the signal of war; and therefore determined immediately to attack them, before they were prepared for resistance; and consequently the Israelites were at first alarmed: but repentance of sin, and earnestness in serving the Lord, formed their best preparation; and the event shewed their enemies the difference betwixt attacking them whilst thus employed, and when impenitent, and buoyed up with presumption. (Notes, iv. 2 Chr. xix. 2-11. xx. 1-25.)

V. 9. Samuel was not a priest; but he acted by an extraordinary authority in this and in many other instances, as a prophet of the Lord, and under his immediate direction. (Note, Judg. vi. 25, 26. Marg. Ref.) This single lamb, it for a burnt-offering wholly unto the LORD: and Samuel cried unto the LORD for Israel; and the LORD heard him.

10 And as Samuel was offering up the burnt-offering, the Philistines drew near to battle against Israel: but the LORD thundered with a great thunder on that day upon the Philistines, and discomfited them; and they were smitten before Israel.

11 And the men of Israel went out of Mizpeh, and pursued the Philistines, and smote them, until they came under Beth-car.

12 Then Samuel took a stone, and set it between Mizpeh and Shen, and called the name of it ^uEben-ezer, saying, ^vHitherto hath the LORD helped us.

offered in humble faith, was immensely more acceptable than the most costly sacrifices offered in pride and hypocrisy.

V. 10, 11. It does not appear, that the people came armed to Mizpeh: and it is probable, that they smote the Philistines with the swords of those who had been killed by the lightning. (Notes, ii. 10. Ex. xiv. 26-30. 2 Sam. xxii. 7-16. Rev. xvi. 17-21.)

V. 12. The transgressions and chastisement of Israel had been many; they had repeatedly humbled themselves before God and obtained deliverance; and they had again relapsed into sin, and fallen into distress: but they had not been given up to total apostasy, or utter ruin; and had now once more been brought to repentance, and made partakers of a singular deliverance, by the immediate interposition of the Almighty. This, Samuel and the people acknowledged with gratitude; and set up this stone to be a monument of the Lord's goodness, for his glory, and the encouragement of their descendants to future ages. (Notes, Josh. iv. 3-9. 20-24. P. O.) The word Eben-ezer, signifies the stone of help.—The same place was before mentioned by anticipation, with reference to the name given it on this occasion. (iv. 1. v. 1.)

V. 13, 14. After this success, the Philistines were constrained to restore such cities of Israel, as they had seized, even those which were situated in the neighbourhood of Ekron and Gath.—It is not probable, that the Israelites entered into treaty with the Amorites who dwelt among them; but they were so kept under as to create them no disturbance. This peaceful state, within the land, was preserved till the people rejected Samuel, and Saul was made king: and the Philistines were constantly defeated by Israel, till after the death of Samuel. (Marg. Ref. Notes, xxviii. 3. xxxi.)

V. 15. Probably, Samuel retained considerable influence as a magistrate, as well as a prophet, during the reign of Saul, especially in the neighbourhood of Ramah. Some, however, understand the passage as meaning, that Samuel was so diligent in the discharge of his office, that he sat to judge causes every day. (16. Notes, Ex. xviii. 13-23.)

V. 17. It is very remarkable, that in this great revival of religion, the ark was neither removed to Shiloh, nor placed with the tabernacle in any other situation.—It is uncertain whether or not the sanctuary-service was carried on at Shiloh, or Nob, or elsewhere, during this period: but probably it was either neglected, or very improperly conducted. As the ark, its glory, was departed, the more pious Israelites seem to have disregarded the tabernacle; and to have preferred joining with Samuel in the sacrifices and worship; which, doubtless by divine direction, he performed near his own house. This disregard to the Levitical institutions clearly intimated, that the typical meaning formed their chief use; and, when this was overlooked, they became a lifeless carcase, by no means to be compared with repentance, faith, and love to God and man. (Notes, ix. 12-14. Ps. i. 7-15.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-6. When the stated ministers of God's word neglect their duty and disgrace their profession, He will render them contemptible in the eyes of the people, (Mat. ii. 8, 9;) and employ others to reform religion, and uphold his worship: it is better that external institutions should be dispensed with, than that irreligion should be permitted to diffuse its baneful influence.—The truths

Samuel is displeased, and prays; but the Lord requires him to comply, and to shew them the manner of a king, 6-18. They persist in their request, and Samuel by divine direction yields to them, 19-22.

AND it came to pass, when Samuel was old, that he made his sons judges over Israel.

2 Now the name of his first-born was Joel, and the name of his second Abiah: they were judges in Beer-sheba.

3 And his sons walked not in his ways, but turned aside after lucre, and took bribes, and perverted judgment.

4 Then all the elders of Israel gathered themselves together, and came to Samuel unto Ramah,

5 And said unto him, Behold, thou art old, and thy sons walk not in thy ways: now make us a king to judge us like all the nations.

6 ¶ But the thing displeased Samuel, when they said, Give us a king to judge us. And Samuel prayed unto the Lord.

7 And the LORD said unto Samuel, 'Hearken unto the voice of the people in all that they say unto thee: for they have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me, that I should not reign over them.

8 According to all the works which they have done, since the day that I brought them up out of Egypt, even unto this day, wherewith they have forsaken me, and served other gods; so do they also unto thee.

9 Now therefore hearken unto their voice; howbeit, yet protest solemnly unto them, and shew them the manner of the king that shall reign over them.

10 ¶ And Samuel told all the words of the LORD unto the people, that asked of him a king.

11 And he said, "This will be the manner of the king that shall reign over you: He will take your sons, and appoint them for himself, for his chariots, and to be his horsemen; and some shall run before his chariots.

LORD helped him." (Note, 2 Cor. i. 8-11.) If this be our happy case, let us raise up our Eben-ezers in rendering him our unreserved praise; let us renew our application to God our Saviour for increasing strength in our soul, and power against our enemies; let us speak to the encouragement of others concerning his love and truth, that they may be animated to trust and rejoice in him: let us push still farther every advantage against our enemies, aspiring after entire liberty and complete deliverance: let us submit to those, who have approved themselves faithful, and have been made useful to us, in watching for our souls: let us keep close to the means of grace, and the worship of God, diligently improve our talents, and lay ourselves out for the good of all around us.—At stated seasons, as at the conclusion of the year, when about to approach the Lord's table, or when we have received some remarkable mercy, we shall find it peculiarly useful thus to review our ways, and to wait upon the Lord; to renew our strength: and in so doing we may hope ere long to set up our last Eben-ezer in the realms above, and to begin our eternal songs of joyful praise to him, who hath helped us quite through, and made us more than conquerors.

NOTES.

CHAP. VIII. V. 1-5. It is not known how old Samuel was at this time: but it is probable, that he felt himself incapable of making the accustomed circuits through the whole land: and therefore, residing at Ramah, he superintended the northern division of it; while his sons, being stationed at Beer-sheba, had the charge of the southern.—As we do not find that either God, or the people, censured him for "making his sons judges in Israel;" we may infer, that he had properly educated them, and that they appeared well qualified for the office, and were appointed to it, for the good, and by the approbation of the people; though they deceived these expectations, and through love of money became unjust judges. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ex. xxiii. 6-9. Prov. xvii. 8. 23. Am. v. 10-13. Mic. iii. 8-12. vii. 1-4.) This was Samuel's affliction, even more than Israel's grievance; for had the elders conferred with him, he would doubtless have agreed to deprive and censure his sons, and to appoint more upright judges. But the people appear more displeased at this small injury to their temporal interests, than they had been by all the dishonour done to God by the impiety and licentiousness of Eli's sons!—It is probable, that they were grown weary of being ruled by pious judges and prophets, raised up by God to reform religion; and that they wanted to appear great and powerful in the eyes of the surrounding nations; as they supposed they should do, when governed by a king, attended with the grandeur of a court, and commanding their armies. (Note, xiii. 22.) This circumstance therefore merely served them for an occasion of proposing this measure to Samuel.

V. 6-9. Israel never had had so much reason to be satisfied with the government of judges, as under Samuel, who had been the instrument of exceedingly great advantages to them: and he was therefore much displeased to see them thus actuated by an impatient discontented spirit, and felt, with great sensibility, their ingratitude to himself. He did not, however, vent his displeasure in reproaches, but in prayer, not knowing what answer to return to their demand, till he was instructed by the Lord; for if he had endeavoured to dissuade them from their purpose, they might have ascribed it to ambition. Accordingly the Lord reminded him, that in rejecting the judge, who had been raised up to rule over them, they actually rejected his divine authority, who as king appointed their judges. Indeed this was no more than a continuation of all their former rebellions and apostacies: and as they have ever been prone to forsake God to worship the idols of the Gentiles; it could not reasonably be wondered at, that they preferred the government of kings, to that of the Lord by judges. It was therefore proper that they should have their choice, that they might be corrected for their perverseness. (Note, Hos. xiii. 10, 11.) Yet Samuel must first solemnly protest against the measure, as resulting from ingratitude and rebellion against God; and also shew them the manner, in which such kings, as governed the nations, exercised their authority. (Note, Deut. xvii. 14.)

V. 10-18. Under the government of Moses, Joshua, and the judges, the people had been exempt from oppression, nay, even from taxes of all kinds: but kingly government, like that of the nations, could not possibly be thus supported. "The manner of the king" does not, however, mean, 'the way in which kings ought to rule;' but 'the way, in which the monarchs of the East actually governed.' (Note, Deut. xvii. 16.) In general, they supported their and ordinances of God are dangerous to those only, who despise and abuse them, and are always profitable to the humble believer: the threatenings therefore of his word, and the judgments, which he hath executed on such as profaned his sacred institutions, should not induce us to neglect them; but make us more circumspect and jealous of ourselves in attending on them. (Notes, 1 Cor. xi. 29-34. P. O. 23-34.)—When the cause of God is deserted in one place, it will be supported in another: and, though the public and regular administration of divine ordinances is highly desirable; yet the same blessing may redound to individuals, when they are driven into corners, and confined to private houses.—The word of God may be faithfully preached, and other proper means may be used, for a long time, without producing visible or extensive effects: but they, who are employed in this important service, should sow the seed in faith and hope, and water it with prayers and tears: they should be "instant in season and out of season;" persevere without weariness or yielding to despondency, and wait the Lord's time; and their labour will not be in vain: (Note, 1 Tim. iv. 11-16.) nay, perhaps the seed, which hath been long sown and considered as lost, will at length spring up with so large an increase, as to exceed their own most sanguine expectations.—It is a pleasing prospect to the faithful labourer, when he perceives men convinced of their sins, and mourning under the tokens of the Lord's displeasure: and this will also afford him the long-wished opportunity, of still more closely and particularly addressing their consciences; that such good impressions may not wear off through procrastination, or produce only a partial or external reformation; but that the people may be prevailed upon, to "return to the Lord with all their hearts, and to serve him only;" expecting all their salvation and comfort from him, and renouncing every false dependence and worldly lust. This blessed frame of mind is the effect of divine grace, but it is our duty; and in the use of means, we are required to prepare our hearts, and arm our souls with stedfast determination thus to trust and to serve the Lord: (Notes, Acts, xi. 23, 24. 1 Pet. iv. 1, 2.)—When in the first place every one hath "taken heed unto himself," he ought next to employ his best endeavours to engage his family, and his neighbour also, to the service of God: and when those in high stations, and public employments, unite in using their influence for these purposes, the most extensive blessings may be expected.

V. 17-18. "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much:" and the more men know of God and of themselves, the more will they desire and value the prayers of every Christian, especially of those who are most eminent for faith and holiness; and particularly in seasons of temporal or spiritual distress.—Blessed be God, that Jesus ever liveth to intercede for us, and pleadeth his own atoning blood in behalf of "all who come to God through him!" and through his sacrifice and mediation all our prayers, for ourselves and others, are accepted by the Father. But neither his merits, nor the intercessions of his servants, supersede the necessity of our personal repentance, confessions of sin, cries for mercy, and holy obedience: and seasons of deep humiliation, and prayer for special blessings, are very properly attended with fasting, and other indications of self-displacement, and disregard to animal indulgence; that we may "pour out our souls before the Lord," without having our attention distracted by any outward concern. When we are thus employed in earnest devotion, Satan and his agents may be especially excited to assault us, as hating our holy engagements, and envying our felicity: but they can do us no harm, unless they can afflict us from our duty. Nor can any hostile preparations prevail against that nation, which, in a spirit of true repentance and reformation, and the fervent prayer of faith, hath entrusted itself unto the Lord's protection.—Through successive generations the church of God hath had occasion to set up Eben-ezers for renewed deliverances: for neither outward persecutions nor internal corruptions have yet prevailed against her; because "hitherto the Lord hath helped her;" and he will help her even unto the end of the world.—Every believer should review the records of this preservation, and these deliverances, with admiring gratitude and joyful love; and then looking back on his own experience, he will find an abridgment of the same history. Notwithstanding temptation and outward opposition; notwithstanding the deceitfulness of his own heart, and the power of his inbred lusts; through many transgressions, corrections, deliverances, and relapses; through many fears, conflicts, and difficulties, he hath still been preserved from apostasy, and perhaps from disgracing his profession; for "hitherto hath the

12 And he will appoint him captains over thousands, and captains over fifties, and will set them to ear his ground, and to reap his harvest, and to make his instruments of war, and instruments of his chariots.

13 And he will take your daughters to be confectionaries, and to be cooks, and to be bakers.

14 And he will take your fields, and your vineyards, and your olive-yards, even the best of them, and give them to his servants.

15 And he will take the tenth of your seed, and of your vineyards, and give to his officers, and to his servants.

16 And he will take your men-servants, and your maid-servants, and your goodliest young men, and your asses, and put them to his work.

17 He will take the tenth of your sheep: and ye shall be his servants.

18 And ye shall cry out in that day, because of your king which ye shall have chosen you; and the LORD will not hear you in that day.

19 ¶ Nevertheless, the people refused to obey the voice of Samuel: and they said, Nay, but we will have a king over us, 20 That we also may be like all the nations, and that our king may judge us, and go out before us, and fight our battles.

21 And Samuel heard all the words of the people, and he rehearsed them in the ears of the LORD.

22 And the LORD said to Samuel, Hearken unto their voice, and make them a king. And Samuel said unto the men of Israel, Go ye every man unto his city.

The ancestry, and personal qualifications, of Saul, 1, 2. He is sent to seek his father's asses; but not finding them, he, by the counsel of his servant, purposes going to Samuel, 3—10. He is directed by young maidens where to find him, 11—14. Samuel, prepared by a revelation from God, expects and entertains him with great respect, 15—24. On the morrow he privately discourses with him, and brings him on his way, 25—27.

NOW there was a man of Benjamin, whose name was Kish, the son of Abiel, the son of Zeror, the son of Bechorath, the son of Abiah, a Benjamite, a mighty man of power.

2 And he had a son whose name was Saul, a choice young man, and a goodly: and there was not among the children of Israel a goodlier person than he: from his shoulders and upward he was higher than any of the people.

3 And the asses of Kish, Saul's father, were lost; and Kish said to Saul his son, Take now one of the servants with thee, and arise, go seek the asses.

4 And he passed through mount Ephraim, and passed through the land of Shalisha, but they found them not: then they passed through the land of Shalim, and there they were not; and he passed through the land of the Benjamites, but they found them not.

5 And when they were come to the land of Zuph, Saul said to his servant that was with him, Come, and let us return; lest my father leave caring for the asses, and take thought for us.

6 And he said unto him, Behold now, there is in this city a man of God, and he is an honourable man; all that he saith cometh surely to pass: now, let us go thither; peradventure he can shew us our way that we should go.

luxury and magnificence, and performed their ostentatious works, and kept up their military force, by burdensome exactions and cruel oppressions; perverting authority into tyranny, and changing subjection into slavery. (Marg. Ref.) And as these are the natural effects of absolute authority entrusted with a fallen creature, we ought consequently to prefer those limitations and restrictions, which are equally beneficial to the governors and the governed.

Tenth. (15. 17.) A second, or rather third, tithe out of the clear produce of their lands. (Num. xviii. 21. Deut. xiv. 22—29.)

V. 19—22. The elders of Israel were so resolutely bent on their own measures, that even this protestation from their aged prophet, by the command of God himself, produced no effect! Not perceiving that it was their peculiar privilege to be unlike other nations, especially in this respect; they were bent on having a king, in order to become like them. (Note, Num. xxiii. 9. Rom. xii. 2.)—Amidst the sin and folly of this conduct, it should be noted to their commendation, that they shewed great respect to Samuel. They did not attempt to set up a king of their own choosing, but sought his counsel and concurrence: and on an intimation from him, that their request would be granted, they put such entire confidence in him, that they departed quietly to their own houses. The history of the world cannot produce another instance, in which a public determination was formed to appoint a king; and yet no one proposed either himself, or any other person, to be king; but referred the determination entirely to God! (Note, Deut. xvii. 15.) Ambition of royal authority certainly was not the motive, in the leading men who supported this measure.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Our lives are so short, and our faculties so soon impaired, that we ought to be active in the service of God, while we possess health of body and vigour of mind: and then, under disqualifying infirmities, it will be our comfort to reflect, that our youth and strength were spent to some useful purposes.—No instructions or examples can overcome the bias of nature to evil; and the Lord communicates his sanctifying grace by wise and righteous rules, of which he doth not deign to inform us: duty is our part, and consequences must be left with him.—External restraints may produce appearances which impose on the most discerning; yet when they are withdrawn, and temptations occur, the evil heart will discover itself; and prosperity has a natural tendency to increase bad propensities. Parents should therefore prepare to bear with resignation disappointments in their children; and not be anxious to prefer or enrich them, lest they should assist inflaming their passions.—The love of money is the root of all evil, and peculiarly odious and mischievous in magistrates and ministers. They who have been most active, disinterested, and useful, must expect to meet with ingratitude and neglect, as man's recompense for their services; but every loss and injury will prove a real gain to those who expect their gracious recompense from God alone. And surely we may cheerfully submit to be rejected, despised, and hated by those, who reject, despise, and hate the Lord: nay, we should consider it as an honourable testimony, that we are acknowledged to stand on his part.—Grace subdues and mortifies, and convictions restrain, human depravity; but in itself it is the same from generation to generation. Discontent, fondness of change, a desire of conformity to the world, and of outward splendour, are natural to man, and follow him from the cradle to the grave, unless regenerated by the Holy Spirit. No change of circumstance can cure these diseases; the dissatisfaction of the present situation is impatiently felt, the comfort of some other is eagerly and ignorantly conceived; and neither the counsels of wise men, nor the testimony of God, will suppress these inordinate desires. When the mind is thus disposed, the slightest circumstance serves as a pretext for rushing upon gratification; yet a pious man would grieve to give others by his conduct even an occasion of sin. The Lord requires his servants rather to yield to the unjust and unreasonable desires or men, than to seem attached to earthly objects. And he frequently gives men their wishes in anger, to chastise their iniquity, and convince them of their folly.—When our grief or displeasure leads us to prayer, nothing can injure or even long distress us; for the consolation of God will richly repay the injuries of men.—Under the troubles which Providence hath allotted us, we may expect the supports of grace: but if we absolutely persist, in choosing for ourselves; when we have exchanged slight inconveniences for real grievances, we shall have the aggravation of an accusing conscience and the Divine rebuke: and this will often be the case; for those things which at a distance look pleasant, are generally most bitter when in actual possession. The law of God, and the manner of men, are widely different; the former would be the rule of our conduct in the several relations of life; the latter the measure of our expectations from others.—As magistracy is the appointment of God and a great blessing, and as every form is liable to abuses; it is our wisdom to be thankful for the advantages, and patient under the inconveniences, of that government under which we live; and our duty to pray continually for our rulers, that they may govern us in the fear of God, and that we may live in all godliness and honesty; thus “honouring God and the king, and not meddling with them that are given to change,” or disposed, upon every imaginary grievance to speak evil of the ruler of the people.—But the Lord's servants should behave so unexceptionably, that even those who injure them may not be able impeach their integrity, or to withhold from them respect and confidence. And it is a hopeful symptom, when our desires of worldly objects can brook delay; and we can refer the time and manner of their being granted to the determination of Providence.

NOTES.

CHAP. IX. V. 1, 2. It is wonderful, that some chief, of the tribe of Judah did not now claim the kingdom, in virtue of Jacob's blessing: (Note, Gen. xlix. 9, 10.) but “it was of the Lord,” that he might first give the Israelites such a king as they had set their hearts on, before he raised up for them a king after his own heart. (xiii. 14.) The tribe of Benjamin, by the fatal catastrophe of Gibeah's wickedness, was reduced to be the least in Israel; but the individuals were enriched in proportion. (Note, Judg. xxi. 17.) Even, if Kish was of an inferior family in this tribe, (21,) he might be very wealthy; and his son was possessed of all external accomplishments, suited to that carnal principle which had dictated Israel's request.—The words translated “a choice young man, and a goodly,” may literally be rendered, “a chosen and goodly person,” there being nothing in the original for young. Saul had sons grown up to man's estate at this time. (xiii. 1, 2.)

V. 6—10. The servant seems to have known more of Samuel than Saul did; and he spoke very respectfully of him: yet both Saul and he looked on 7 Then said Saul to his servant, But, behold, if we go, "what shall we bring the man? for the bread is ^{sp}spent in our vessels, and there is not a present to bring to the man of God: what ^hhave we?

8 And the servant answered Saul again, and said, Behold, "I have here at hand the fourth part of a shekel of silver; that will I give to the man of God, to tell us our way.

9 (Beforetime in Israel, when a man went to ^eenquire of God, thus he spake, Come, and let us go to the seer: for he that is now called a Prophet, was beforetime called ^aa Seer.)

10 Then said Saul to his servant, "Well said; come, let us go: so they went unto the city where the man of God was.

11 ¶ And as they went up ^tthe hill to the city, they ^ffound young maidens going out to draw water, and said unto them, Is the seer here?

12 And they answered them, and said, He is; behold, he is before you: make haste now, for he came to-day to the city; for there is a ^ssacrifice of the people to-day in ^tthe high place.

13 As soon as ye be come into the city, ye shall straightway find him, before he go up to the high place to eat: for the people will not eat until he come, because ^hhe doth bless the sacrifice; and afterwards they eat that be bidden. Now, therefore, get you up; for about ^tthis time ye shall find him.

14 And they went up into the city: and when they were come into the city, behold, Samuel came out against them, for to go up to the high place.

15 ¶ Now ^tthe LORD had ^ttold Samuel in his ear a day before Saul came, saying,

16 To-morrow about this time I will send thee a man out of the land of Benjamin, and ^tthou shalt anoint him to be captain over my people Israel, that he may save my people out of the hand of the Philistines: for I have ^tlooked upon my people, because their cry is come unto me.

17 And when Samuel saw Saul, the LORD said unto him, ^tBehold the man whom I spake to thee of: this same ^tshall reign over my people.

18 Then Saul drew near to Samuel in the gate, and said, Tell me, I pray thee, where the seer's house is.

19 And Samuel answered Saul, and said, I am the seer; go up before me unto the high place; for ye shall eat with me to-day; and to-morrow I will let thee go, ^tand will tell thee all that is in thine heart.

20 And as for thine asses that were lost ^tthree days ago, ^tset not thy mind on them, for they are found. And ^ton whom is all the desire of Israel? is it not on thee, and on all thy father's house?

21 And Saul answered and said, Am not I ^aa Benjamite, of the smallest of the tribes of Israel? and ^tmy family the least of all the families of the tribe of Benjamin; wherefore then speakest thou ^tso to me?

22 And Samuel took Saul and his servant, and brought them into the parlour, and made them sit ^tin the chiefest place among them that were bidden, which were about thirty persons.

23 And Samuel said unto the cook, ^tBring the portion which I gave thee, of which I said unto thee, Set it by thee.

24 And the cook took up ^tthe shoulder, and that which was upon it, and set it before Saul. And Samuel said, Behold that which is ^tleft, set it before thee, and eat; for unto this time hath it been kept for thee, since I said, I have invited the people. So Saul did eat with Samuel that day.

25 ¶ And when they were come down from the high place into the city, Samuel communed with Saul upon ^tthe top of the house.

26 And they arose early: and it came to pass about the spring of the day, that Samuel called Saul to the top of the house, saying, ^tUp, that I may send thee away. And Saul arose, and they went out both of them, he and Samuel, abroad.

27 And as they were going down to the end of the city, Samuel said to Saul, ^tBid the servant pass on before us, (and he passed on,) but stand thou still ^ta while, ^tthat I may shew thee the word of God.

him rather as a diviner, than as a prophet whose office it was to instruct them in the truth and will of God. It was no doubt customary in those days to shew respect to prophets, and even to princes, by a present; but when they concluded, that Samuel would not be approached without some gift, they appeared to have judged of him by the mercenary diviners. (Num xxii. 7.)—The ninth verse was evidently inserted, as a comment, in after ages, perhaps by Ezra, who is supposed to have set forth a correct edition of the Scriptures then extant, under the superintendency of the Spirit of prophecy. In the days of Samuel, prophets were emphatically styled seers, or men who are enabled to see divine things, that they may shew them to others. The word prophet had been used of Abraham, (Gen. xx. 7:) but it was not common in the time of Samuel, though it afterwards superseded the word rendered seer.

V. 12-14. (Note, vii. 17.) Shiloh, the place which God first chose to place his name there, had forfeited that distinction: no other place was appointed: the tabernacle, wherever it was at this time situated, did not contain the ark; and there was no tabernacle or altar at Kirjath-jearim, where the ark remained. These circumstances suspended the general rule of sacrificing in no place but that which the Lord had chosen: and the cities of the priests and Levites, where the people resorted for instruction, seemed the most proper for that purpose. The highest parts of these cities were generally selected: and from this circumstance, the subsequent pertinacious attachment of the Israelites to the "high places" seem to have been derived.—Samuel, having burned upon the altar the appointed portion of the peace-offerings, previously to the sacred feast upon the remainder, poured out fervent prayers to the Lord for acceptance, and for his blessing on the service, as a religious ordinance to the good of the souls, as well as on the food for the refreshment of the bodies of those present. Doubtless this was the general observance, in all the sacrifices at the tabernacle and temple, when true religion flourished; though at other times it would degenerate into a mere ceremony.

V. 16. Save, &c. When Israel grew slack in serving God, the Philistines recovered their authority: and though Saul did not reform the religion of Israel, yet in many instances he successfully fought their battles. (xiv. xvii.)

V. 17-24. (Marg. Ref.) Samuel, as superintending the sacred feast, seems to have allotted to each guest his portion: but he expected, according to the divine monition, other guests besides those who had been invited. He had therefore given orders that the left shoulder, as the prime portion, (for the right belonged to the priest,) should be reserved; in case these guests should not come in time.

V. 25-27. Samuel conferred with Saul, and shewed him the intentions of God concerning him, privately; to prepare him for the time, when he would be publicly, by lot, appointed to the kingdom.—All the circumstances of these transactions were calculated to prepare Saul's mind for what followed, and to shew him the interposition of God in it. (Notes, 2 Kings ix. 1-13.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We are never more likely to be unhappy, than when we have our outward portion, or connexions, according to the choice of our own hearts: we ought therefore to beg of God in every thing to choose for us, and to teach us to acquiesce in his appointment. True excellency of character does not result from external accomplishments; nor true felicity, from prosperous circumstances and outward splendour: and inattention to these obvious truths occasions the most fatal mistakes.—Diligence in business and good behaviour in relative life are commendable, but no sure tokens of genuine piety, or acceptance with God.—We sensibly feel our temporal losses, and bestow much pains to retrieve them: but how little do we attempt, and how speedily are we weary, in seeking the salvation of our souls! Nay, if ministers could inform men how to secure their property, or to acquire wealth, they would be much more respected, and consulted, than they now are, when employed in teaching them how to escape eternal misery and to obtain eternal life! Indeed we all are naturally more desirous to learn our fortune, than our duty: so that curiosity and worldly motives are, generally, the first means of bringing men acquainted with the ministers and the word of God. And poor servants and mechanics are often better acquainted with these, than the rich and great; and have more respect for them, as they have not so many things to occupy their thoughts, or prejudice their hearts against the truth. But many will speak of ministers as men of God, and honourable men, whose words will certainly come to pass; who neither comply with their exhortations, nor imitate their examples: and as conscious, that they do not choose to be at any expense in religion, they suspect, that the servants of God teach for hire, and will do nothing without pay. Indeed, there have always been so many of this temper, that inattentive tabret, and a pipe, and a harp, before them; and they shall prophesy:

6 And the Spirit of the LORD will come upon thee, and thou shalt prophesy with them, and shalt be turned into another man.

7 And let it be, when these signs are come unto thee, that thou do as occasion serve thee; for God is with thee.

8 And thou shalt go down before me to Gilgal; and, behold, I will come down unto thee, to offer burnt-offerings, and to sacrifice sacrifices of peace-offerings: seven days shalt thou tarry, till I come to thee, and shew thee what thou shalt do.

9 ¶ And it was so, that, when he had turned his back to go from Samuel, God gave him another heart: and all those signs came to pass that day.

10 And when they came thither to the hill, behold, a company of prophets met him; and the Spirit of God came upon him, and he prophesied among them.

11 And it came to pass, when all that knew him beforetime saw that, behold, he prophesied among the prophets, then the people said one to another, What is this that is come unto the son of Kish? Is Saul also among the prophets?

12 And one of the same place answered, and said, But who is their father? Therefore it became a proverb, Is Saul also among the prophets?

13 And when he had made an end of prophesying, he came to the high place.

observers cannot readily understand the difference between mercenary diviners, and those who "seek not their's, but them;" or between blind watchmen and guides, and those who are seers indeed. But the seeing eye and the hearing ear are, in this sense also, from the Lord; and to those that wait on him he will communicate the truths, which he would have them communicate to the people; but how shall those who are blind themselves, be seers for other men; or point out to them that Saviour, of whom they have no knowledge?—True grace teaches us to honour those whom God hath honoured, though their advancement be attended by our degradation; but that respect should be shewn in the way, which may best tend to bring them acquainted with the truths and worship of God.—Without fervent prayer and praise, springing from a penitent believing heart, a solemn sacrifice would have degenerated into a profane meal; and with them an ordinary meal becomes a spiritual sacrifice: but they, who eat their food without thanking the Lord for it, or seeking his blessing on it, are scarcely distinguishable from brutes, or from atheists; and the examples of eminent persons, in such matters as these, may have a salutary effect on those around them.—"Before honour is humility," and they, who have well learned to obey, are most likely to be advanced to command, and to do it properly.—But how different are the Lord's purposes concerning us, to our intentions for ourselves! Perhaps Saul was the only man, who set out to seek asses, and literally found a kingdom: but many have taken long voyages and journeys, or moved their habitations, to seek riches and pleasures, who have been guided to places, where they have found the salvation of their souls; having met with those, who addressed them, as if informed of the secrets of their lives and hearts; and having been thus led seriously to regard the message of the Lord delivered by them. If this hath been our case, though our worldly projects have all been frustrated, let us cease caring about it; for the Lord hath given us that which is infinitely better.

NOTES.

CHAP. X. V. 1. In the conversation of the preceding evening, and of that morning, Samuel had doubtless given Saul all needful information, preparatory to this significant ceremony; and probably attended with exhortations, counsels, and prayers.—The priests were anointed to their office, as types of Christ, and as implying their need of the communication of the Holy Spirit, to furnish them for their sacred work; and for the same reason the kings also were anointed. (Note, Ex. xxix. 1-7.) In performing this sacred rite, Samuel assured Saul of the Lord's choice of him to be king of Israel, and of his own hearty concurrence: and the kiss denoted affection and subjection to him, as the Lord's anointed. (Note, Ps. ii. 10-12.)—The law is silent as to the anointing of kings: but it seems to have been an ancient custom, (Judg. ix. 8:) and when prophets conformed to it by divine command, it obtained the force of a law.—It does not appear, that Samuel used the holy oil of the sanctuary on this occasion, or even when he anointed David, but rather common olive-oil: for he was at a distance from the tabernacle. (xvi. i. 13.)

V. 2. We may suppose, that Saul was exceedingly surprised, and scarcely able to believe what Samuel had said to him: to convince him therefore that the matter was from the Lord, Samuel prophetically, and very particularly, informed him of some incidents which he would meet with in his return. (Notes, Mark xi. 1-11. xiv. 12-16.)

V. 3, 4. (Note, ix. 12-14.) There seems to have been a high place at Beth-el, where priests attended to receive oblations, and to minister in their office: and these three men were going thither, in order to present peace-offerings; but, meeting Saul, they were secretly disposed by the Lord, to give him two loaves of bread, as present or tribute, paid him after he had been anointed king.

V. 5, 6. The hill of God, which was kept by a garrison of the Philistines, seems to have been at, or near Gibeah, where Saul lived; and a high-place for the worship of God was situated there, (13.)—From the time of Samuel, there appear to have been seminaries, where pious young men were educated, under the tuition of some approved prophets, in the knowledge of divine things; upon whom God was frequently pleased to bestow the Spirit of prophecy: and they were very useful in preserving some sense of true religion in the land, when the priests and Levites generally neglected their duty. The garrison of the Philistines did not, it seems, disturb them in their devout studies and exercises.—The prophets frequently used solemn music, to compose their minds for the illapses of the Spirit of God; and many think, that they were immediately inspired to praise God in suitable hymns accompanying the music; in which Saul was supernaturally enabled to join, as well as endued with extraordinary prudence and courage, qualifying him to govern the people of God. (Note, 1 Kings, iii. 3-14.)

V. 6, 7. When Saul had by these signs been assured of his appointment to the kingdom, and especially when the Spirit of God had powerfully come upon him; he must be left, without further particular directions, to act in general as circumstances required: depending on God for wisdom, assistance, and success. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 8. The deliverance of Israel from the Philistines, though one great end of Saul's appointment to the kingdom, was not attempted till the second year of his reign. And at that time, Saul at Gilgal neglected to wait for Samuel, according to directions given him, which correspond with these, (Notes, xiii. 8-15.)—Retain the same words, and alter the pause—in this manner, "Thou shalt go down before me to Gilgal; and behold, I will come unto thee to offer burnt-offerings, and to sacrifice sacrifices of peace-offerings seven days. Thou shalt tarry till I come to thee, &c." As if he had said, See in any case that thou tarry till I come, and shew thee what thou shalt do.—Samuel perhaps knew not this himself; but intended to ask counsel of God. (Bp. Patrick.)—Saul was confirmed in the kingdom at Gilgal, when Samuel was present: (xi. 14, 15:) and it is probable, that Samuel purposed to seek direction and a blessing from God, by solemn sacrifices, before Saul made war upon the Philistines; but he was prevented by Saul's precipitancy.—Perhaps the instruction was intended as a general rule, on every great emergency. (Note, xv. 1-3.)

V. 9. Another heart. Saul was inspired with fortitude and resolution; and his mind was enlarged to great designs of governing and delivering Israel, and subduing their enemies, and thus promoting the welfare of his people; perhaps he was also brought under religious impressions: and indeed his conduct, for a season, appeared very promising, though he afterwards became atrociously wicked. (Notes, Matt. xii. 43-45. 2 Pet. ii. 20-22.)

V. 10-13. When Saul came among the prophets, the Spirit of the Lord came upon him, and he spake so pertinently and fluently in divine things, or so earnestly joined in their adorations, that those who before had known him were astonished to hear him: and one said, "But who is their father?"—Is not God the father of prophets? Why need you then be surprised to see Saul, though before an unlikely person, become one of them? Or, Is not Samuel the father or institutor of this seminary? and Saul has been all night with him, and is thus become one of them. (Note, xix. 23, 24.)—It caused far greater

14 ¶ And Saul's uncle said unto him and to his servant, Whither went ye? And he said, To seek the asses: and when we saw that they were nowhere, we came to Samuel.

15 And Saul's uncle said, Tell me, I pray thee, what Samuel said unto you?

16 And Saul said unto his uncle, He told us plainly that the asses were found. But of the matter of the kingdom, whereof Samuel spake, he told him not.

17 ¶ And Samuel called the people together unto the LORD to Mizpeh;

18 And said unto the children of Israel, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, I brought up Israel out of Egypt, and delivered you out of the hand of the Egyptians, and out of the hand of all kingdoms, and of them that oppressed you:

19 And ye have this day rejected your God, who himself saved you out of all your adversities and your tribulations; and ye have said unto him, Nay, but set a king over us. Now therefore present yourselves before the LORD by your tribes, and by your thousands.

20 And when Samuel had caused all the tribes of Israel to come near, the tribe of Benjamin was taken.

21 When he had caused the tribe of Benjamin to come near by their families, the family of Matri was taken, and Saul the son of Kish was taken; and when they sought him he could not be found.

22 Therefore they enquired of the LORD further, if the man should yet come thither. And the LORD answered, Behold, he hath hid himself among the stuff.

23 And they ran, and fetched him thence: and when he stood among the people, he was higher than any of the people, from his shoulders and upward.

26 ¶ And Saul also went home to Gibeah; and there went with him a band of men, whose hearts God had touched.

27 But the children of Belial said, How shall this man save us? and they despised him, and brought him no presents: but he held his peace.

CHAP. XI.

Nahash, the Ammonite, wars against Jabesh-gilead, and offers the inhabitants most cruel and disgraceful terms; who obtain seven days' respite, 1-3. They send messengers to Gibeah, and Saul delivers them, and smites the Ammonites, 4-11. He will not consent that his despisers should be punished, 12, 13. He is made king in Gilgal, 14, 15.

THEN Nahash the Ammonite came up, and encamped against Jabesh-gilead: and all the men of Jabesh said unto Nahash, Make a covenant with us, and we will serve thee.

2 And Nahash the Ammonite answered them, On this condition will I make a covenant with you, that I may thrust out all your right eyes, and lay it for a reproach upon all Israel.

3 And the elders of Jabesh said unto him, Give us seven days' respite, that we may send messengers unto all the coasts of Israel: and then, if there be no man to save us, we will come out to thee.

4 ¶ Then came the messengers to Gibeah of Saul, and told the tidings in the ears of the people: and all the people lifted up their voices and wept.

5 And, behold, Saul came after the herd out of the field; and Saul said, What aileth the people that astonishment many ages afterwards to see another Saul among the apostles of Jesus. (Note, Acts ix. 17-22.)—When Saul had prophesied for a time, he seems to have gone to the high place, to perform his devotions before he returned home.

V. 16. This may be ascribed to a commendable modesty and prudence, by which Saul would avoid ostentation, shun envy, and patiently wait the event. (Note, Judg. xiv. 5, 6.)

V. 17-22. (Notes, viii. Marg. Ref.)—This determination seems to have been made by casting lots.—The appointment of a king was thus referred to God, by the interposition of his prophet, and not to a popular election. Yet the narrative implies, that the elders enquired of the Lord, either by the high priest, or by Samuel; and received an express answer. (22.)—Saul hid himself, probably, from criminal diffidence and distrust of God; yet, some suppose, he was alarmed by hearing, that the Lord was displeased with the people for asking a king.

V. 25. The manner of the kingdom. Probably, this writing contained the rules of the government; or, in modern language, the prerogatives of the prince, and the privileges of the people. "The manner of the kingdom" would differ considerably from "the manner of the king," before mentioned: the one being the appointment of God, and the other the effect of human depravity, when entrusted with absolute authority. (Notes, viii. 10-18. Deut. xvii. 14-18.)

V. 26, 27. The people in general treated the matter with great indifference: notwithstanding the earnestness, with which they had demanded a king. And Saul modestly went home to his own house, leaving for the present Samuel to manage public affairs, as he had before done. Yet he was attended by a band of men whose hearts God disposed to support his authority: while others contemptuously rejected him, and would not acknowledge him as king. But he prudently held his peace, and did not resent their affronts; and thus civil discords and unpopular measures were prevented. (Notes, Judg. viii. 1-3. xii. 1-7.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Many are employed in outward services to the Lord's people, who have not the unction of his sanctifying grace; yet the most eminent Christians and ministers must honour and obey God's authority in them.—The attentive believer, comparing the dispensations of Providence with the word of God, will perceive his hand in the most ordinary concerns of life, as fulfilments of the Scripture, answers of prayer, and evidences of the Lord's peculiar kindness.—A superior cure, in common life swallows up an inferior one: and the tender parent ceases from anxiety about his property, when solicitous for the welfare of his son. Children therefore should take heed not to distress such kind friends: and we are also reminded, that a due concern about eternal things would moderate our care about the interests of this life.—Many changes may take place in the language, conduct, and disposition of him who is not born of God: another man he may become, and yet not a new creature; another heart he may have, but not a holy heart: he may be qualified for ruling or preaching; and yet not be "made meet for the inheritance of the saints in light;" nay, he may prophesy and work miracles, and yet be a child of the devil.—Sudden changes are generally to be suspected: but when we consider who makes the Christian, and the prophet, we need not be offended, should we number among professors, or preachers, of the gospel, some ungodly Saul of our former acquaintance; for true conversion makes so great a change in a man's character, that former friends can scarcely believe him to be the same; whether they admire and love, or despise and hate it.—When we depend on the guidance of the Holy Spirit, we may regulate our general conduct as circumstances require, and act with humble confidence in perplexing situations, being assured that "God is with us:" but we should enter on every enterprise, with reference to his authority and worship, and carefully observe his directions, and wait his time.—We may freely speak of those things which are honourable to others, but in general it is best to be silent, as to those transactions which tend to our own reputation.—The Lord will bring to us seasonable determination those affairs which are referred to him; but the gratification of inordinate desires is short-lived. It is good to be conscious of our unworthiness and insufficiency for the services to which we are called; and to avoid ostentation, and whatever may excite envy and opposition: but we should be careful not to run into the opposite extreme, by refusing the employments to which the Lord calls us, through meanness of spirit and unbelief. Indeed, high stations are heavy burdens, when the duties of them are conscientiously attended on: and the comfort of them is but small; for the heart of man is prone to envy all who are preferred. (Notes, xviii. 6-9. Ec. iv. 4-6.) Our natural enmity to God disposes us to despise and oppose the instruments which he selects, for the government of states, and for promoting his cause: and if some approve, honour, and help them: they will be reviled and contemned by others. But we should wait his will with patience, and without discouragement; bear scorn and malice in silent meekness, and attend to the duties of our station, according to the manner of it: thus the fatal effects of discord will be prevented, and in due season the Lord will plead our cause, and all opposition will fall before us.—Men seldom receive that with thankfulness, which they sought with eagerness; for their expectations are not exactly answered, and this occasions dissatisfaction and sullen discontent. And when any welcome with gratitude the appointments of God, and set themselves cordially to promote his cause; (even the cause of Christ our anointed King, whom so many "children of Belial" despise;) these are they alone, whose hearts he hath touched by his grace; and to him all the praise belongs. (Notes, Ezra i. 1-4. John vi. 41-46.)

NOTES.

CHAP. XI. V. 1-3. Jabesh-gilead had been desolated by the Israelites some time before; (Note, Judg. xxi. 9-12); but being now replenished, it was assaulted by the Ammonites, on whose borders it was situated; who, it is they weep? And they told him the tidings of the men of Jabesh.

6 And the ^hSpirit of God came upon Saul when he heard those tidings, and ^hhis anger was kindled greatly.

7 And he took a yoke of oxen, and ^hmewed them in pieces, and sent ^{them} throughout all the coasts of Israel by the hands of messengers, saying, "Whosoever cometh not forth after Saul and after Samuel, so shall it be done unto his oxen. And ^hthe fear of the LORD fell on the people, and they came out ^hwith one consent.

8 And when he numbered them in ^hBezek, ^hthe children of Israel were three hundred thousand, and the men of Judah thirty thousand.

9 And they said unto the messengers that came, Thus shall ye say unto the men of Jabesh-gilead, To-morrow, by ^{that} time the sun be hot, ye shall have ^hhelp. And the messengers came and shewed ^{it} to the men of Jabesh; and they were glad.

10 Therefore the men of Jabesh said, ^hTo-morrow we will come out unto you, and ye shall do with us all that seemeth good unto you.

11 And it was so ^hon the morrow, that Saul put the people ⁱⁿ three companies, and they came into the midst of the host in the ^hmorning-watch, and ^hslew the Ammonites until the heat of the day: and it came to pass, that they which remained were scattered, ^hso that two of them were not left together.

12 ¶ And the people said unto Samuel, ^hWho is he that said, Shall Saul reign over us? bring the men, that we may put them to death.

13 And Saul said, ^hThere shall not a man be put probable, renewed the claims which had been made in the days of Jephthah; (Notes, Judg. xi. 12—17.) And the inhabitants, when they offered to capitulate, could obtain no better terms, than for every man to have his right eye put out. —It is probable, that their enemies would not have consented to the respite even of a few days, but in confidence that they would not be helped, and that in consequence the nation in Israel would be the more deeply disgraced. (Notes, 2 Sam. x. 1—4.) Some apprehension of this war had induced the Israelites to desire a king: (Notes, xii. 11—13:) but the unsettled state of affairs both encouraged the Ammonites, and disheartened the men of Jabesh-gilead.

V. 4, 5. Saul, finding himself despised by some, and neglected by others, of the Israelites, returned quietly to his former occupations, and left the matter entirely to Providence. (Note, x. 26, 27.)—But in this chapter he looks as great, as the much celebrated Roman dictator from the plough, and indeed greater. For Saul followed his herds, after he was appointed to the kingdom by God himself; yet when called forth to action, his vigour and success were not at all inferior to those of the renowned Roman.

V. 6—11. Saul, excited by the Spirit of God, and fired with a generous indignation at the indignity offered Israel, in a very spirited, yet modest and clement manner, summoned the attendance of the people; assuming regal authority, yet adding the name of Samuel to avoid needless offence: and, through the immediate influence of God upon their hearts, a vast multitude assembled with surprising celerity. Upon this they undertook and performed a march perhaps of fifty miles, within the space of about twenty-four hours; and by this despatch arrived in time to rescue their trembling brethren, and unexpectedly to destroy, or totally to scatter their insulting enemies. In this expedition alone, it is said, that "the Spirit of God came on Saul." (Notes, x. 6, 7. xvi. 13, 14.)

V. 12—15. Saul's success went further with the people, than either the Lord's appointment, or his personal accomplishments; so that they received him as their king, with sacrifices and great joy. And now the sons of Belial were saved from death, as well as Israel from the Ammonites, by him whom they despised as unable to save them. Saul's answer likewise gave the glory of the victory to God, who alone had saved his people. In all this, his conduct was unexceptionable; and the whole concludes with such humanity and apparent piety, as promised better effects than followed. (Marg. Ref. Note, Ps. xxxvi. 3, 4.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Hasty settlements among bad neighbours often produce multiplied calamities: and when professed Christians act inconsistently with the covenant of God, they will probably be forced to the basest subjection to man; for God will disgrace those who dishonour him, and make them a reproach to their vilest enemies.—To save their lives, men will part with their liberty, and even consent to lose their eyes: how much more is it our wisdom, to part with our right eye, rather than to be cast into hell-fire! (Notes, Matt. v. 29, 30. Mark ix. 43—50.) Lusts or interests, thus dear to our carnal hearts, must be crucified, if we would covenant with God for the life of our souls, and, whatever respite he may give, none can save us out of his hand; we must consent to his proposals or perish. But tender mercy is couched under this apparently

CHAP. XII.

Samuel, before Israel avows his integrity, and the people fully justify him, 1—5. He expostulates with them for their ingratitude, in rejecting the government of God, and warns them against disobedience, 6—15. To shew their guilt in asking a king, he calls for thunder and rain in time of harvest, which greatly dismays them, 16—19. He promises to pray for, and to instruct, them, and encourages them to cleave to the service of God, and to trust in his mercy, 20—25.

AND Samuel said unto all Israel, Behold, ^hI have hearkened unto your voice in all that ye said unto me, and ^hhave made a king over you.

2 And now, behold, the king ^hwalketh before you: and ^hI am old and greyheaded; and, behold, my ^hsons are with you: and ^hI have walked before you from my childhood unto this day.

3 Behold, here I am: witness against me before the LORD, and before ^hhis anointed; ^hwhose ox have I taken? or whose ass have I taken? or whom have I defrauded? whom have I oppressed? or of whose hand have I received ^{any} ^hbribe to ^hblind mine eyes therewith? and ^hI will restore it you.

4 And they said, ^hThou hast not defrauded us, nor oppressed us, neither hast thou taken ought of any man's hand.

5 And he said unto them, ^hThe LORD is witness against you, and ^hhis anointed is witness this day, that ^hye have not found ought ^hin my hand. And they answered, ^hHe is witness.

severe requisition; the dreaded operation will not be so painful as men suppose, the advantages are immense, and God's service is perfect freedom.—God, in providence will make way for those, whom he hath designed and prepared for usefulness: nor shall any repent of humbly waiting in obscurity and honest industry, till he is pleased to call them forth; for only pride and impatience can conclude, that the Lord hath lighted a candle, to leave it under a bushel. The reproach of the gospel, the distresses of God's people, and the insulting triumphs of their enemies, should not only excite our sympathizing sorrows, but most decisive exertions in our several stations, yea, our warm and generous indignation. But magistrates in all cases should be sparing of the lives of their subjects, and only punish them in their property, if that can be made effectual. When zeal for the glory of God, and love for the brethren, prompt men to earnest and vigorous efforts, and when he is pleased to concur, great effects are speedily produced: but in critical junctures, ordinary measures of despatch are unmeaning. Deliverance in extreme distress is doubly welcome, and it is often vouchsafed to the true Christian: but the destruction, which commonly overtakes the wicked in the height of their triumphs and security, is inexpressibly dreadful. Humility and clemency add superior lustre to the most splendid actions; he, who forgives his enemies, when he has them in his power, obtains the noblest victory; (Note, Prov. xvi. 32:) and by giving the praise of illustrious exploits to God, a man acquires the most solid honour. The Lord delighteth to plead the cause of those, who are dumb under injuries, and who do not plead for themselves; to put to silence those who contend with his servants; and to work by instruments which man contemns. Thus the despised Saviour will at length be universally acknowledged, as the Lord's anointed King, with songs of triumph and praise: as yet, before the mercy-seat, he receives the submissions, and pleads the cause of rebels, who are willing that he should reign over and save them; but shortly from his righteous tribunal he will condemn to everlasting ruin all those, who persist in contempt of him, and opposition to him.

NOTES.

CHAP. XII. V. 1. The elders of Israel, being convened at Gilgal, where they had celebrated the late victory with sacrifices, and confirmed the kingdom to Saul; (Note, xi. 12—15;) Samuel embraced the opportunity of appealing to the people, and to their king, concerning his integrity as their judge, when about to divest himself of his authority. By this, he doubtless not only meant to clear his own character, but likewise to set before Saul an instructive example; and especially to convince the people of their ingratitude to God, as well as to him. (Notes, Acts xx. 18—35.)

V. 2—7. Samuel might be about eighteen years of age when Eli was slain, and thirty-eight when he assembled the people at Mizpah, (Notes, vii. ;) and perhaps sixty at this time. From a child he had been labouring assiduously for the good of his people, and was grown grey in their service; yet they had at last rejected him! His sons had indeed misbehaved; and, having been reduced to a private station, they were there present, if the people chose to call them to an account: but for himself he could appeal to the Lord and to their consciences, and was even willing that their anointed king should decide, whether he had not acted with entire equity, impartiality, and disinterested-

6 ¶ And Samuel said unto the people, ¹It is the LORD that ²advanced Moses and Aaron, and that brought your fathers up out of the land of Egypt.

7 Now therefore stand still, that I may ³reason with you before the LORD of all the ⁴righteous acts of the LORD, which he did ⁵to you and to your fathers.

8 When ⁶Jacob was come into Egypt, and your fathers ⁷cried unto the LORD, then the LORD ⁸sent Moses and Aaron, which ⁹brought forth your fathers out of Egypt, and ¹⁰made them dwell in this place.

9 And when they ¹¹forgot the LORD their God, ¹²he sold them into the hand of Sisera, captain of the host of Hazor, and into the hand ¹³of the Philistines, and ¹⁴into the hand of the king of Moab, and they fought against them.

10 And ¹⁵they cried unto the LORD, and said, We have sinned, because we have forsaken the LORD, and have served ¹⁶Baalim and Ashtaroth: but now ¹⁷deliver us out of the hand of our enemies, and we will serve thee.

11 And the LORD sent ¹⁸Jerubbaal, and ¹⁹Bedan, and ²⁰Jephthah, and ²¹Samuel, and delivered you out of the hand of your enemies on every side, and ye dwelled safe.

12 And when ye saw that ²²Nahash, the king of the children of Ammon, came against you, ye said unto me, ²³Nay, but a king shall reign over us; ²⁴when the LORD your God ²⁵was your king.

13 Now, therefore, ²⁶behold the king ²⁷whom ye have chosen, ²⁸and whom ye ²⁹have desired! and behold, the LORD hath set a king over you.

14 If ³⁰ye will fear the LORD, and serve him, and obey his voice, and not rebel against the ³¹commandment of the LORD, then shall both ye, and also the king that reigneth over you, ³²continue following the LORD your God.

ness, during his whole administration. (Notes, 2 Cor. i. 12-14. xii. 14-21. 1 Thes. ii. 1-8.) When they had in consequence attested his integrity, he expostulated no further with them concerning their conduct towards him; but endeavoured to convince them of their wickedness in the sight of God; who had brought their fathers out of Egypt by a prophet and a priest; and not by a king, like those of the surrounding nations. (Notes, Acts vii. 17-56.)

V. 8-10. Jacob, by going down into Egypt, made way for that oppression, which caused his posterity to cry unto the Lord: and the deliverance from Egypt by Moses and Aaron, made way for the settlement of Israel in Canaan. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Judg. ii. 11-14. iii. 12-14. iv. 1-3. x. 6-16.)

V. 11-13. (Marg. Ref.) Bedan may be considered as a contraction of Ben-Dan, or the son of Dan; and it is probable that Samson is intended. (The Septuagint has Barak.) Samuel joins himself to the number of those, by whom the Lord had delivered the people; to impress more deeply on their minds the conviction, that in rejecting him, they had refused to continue any longer under the immediate government of God, which had been their honour and happiness. When Nahash prepared to war against them, it seems Samuel gave them some intimations that God would raise them up a deliverer, or he offered to lead them to battle; but they refused his proposals, saying, "Nay, but a king shall reign over us;" and accordingly God had appointed a king over them. (Notes, viii. x. 16-27. xi.)

V. 14, 15. The Israelites might perhaps suppose, that under a king, who would always be at hand to succour them, their affairs would not be exposed to such vicissitudes as before. But Samuel assured them, that there would be no difference in that respect: for, their privileges as the Lord's peculiar people would still be continued to them, while they adhered to his service, and not if they forsook it, even as in times past. (Marg. Ref.)—Following, &c. (14.) Depending on God, and protected by him; and so, a holy and happy people. (Notes, xv. 11. Num. xiv. 24. Hos. vi. 1-3.)

V. 16-19. Even rain was uncommon during the wheat-harvest, and doubtless this thunder-storm was very violent. Having been predicted and called for, it formed an awful attestation of Samuel's word, and was entirely suited to produce conviction and alarm in the consciences of the people. Being, therefore, terrified with the displays of the Divine power, in answer to Samuel's prayers, and perceiving how much he was honoured by God; they were afraid of some immediate judgments, such as were inflicted on their forefathers for rebelling against Moses and Aaron: and they earnestly begged of him to pray for them. (Notes, Num. xi. 1-3. xvi. 1-35. 41-50. xxi. 4-9.) They likewise acknowledged that they had heinously sinned in desiring a king. It should here be observed, that their guilt did not consist in preferring the authority of kings to any other kind of government: but in rebelliously and 15 But if ye will not obey the voice of the LORD, but rebel against the commandment of the LORD; then shall the hand of the LORD be against you, as it was ¹against your fathers.

16 Now therefore ²stand and see this great thing, which the LORD will do before your eyes.

17 Is it ³not wheat-harvest to-day? ⁴I will call unto the LORD, and he shall send thunder and rain; that ye may perceive and see that ⁵your wickedness is great, which ye have done in the sight of the LORD, in asking you a king.

18 ¶ So Samuel called unto the LORD; and the LORD ⁶sent thunder and rain that day: and all the people greatly ⁷feared the LORD and Samuel.

19 And all the people said unto Samuel, ⁸Pray for thy servants unto the LORD thy God, that we die not: for we have added unto all our sins ⁹this evil, to ask us a king.

20 ¶ And Samuel said unto the people, ¹⁰Fear not: (ye have done all this wickedness; yet turn not aside from following the LORD, but serve the LORD with all your heart;

21 And ¹¹turn ye not aside: for ¹²then should ye go after ¹³vain things, which ¹⁴cannot profit nor deliver; for they are vain:)

22 For ¹⁵the LORD will not forsake his people ¹⁶for his great name's sake; because it ¹⁷hath pleased the LORD to make you his people.

23 Moreover, as for me, ¹⁸God forbid that I should sin against the LORD ¹⁹in ceasing to pray for you: but ²⁰I will teach you ²¹the good and the right way.

24 Only ²²fear the LORD, and serve him ²³in truth with all your heart: for ²⁴consider ²⁵how great things he hath done for you.

25 But ²⁶if ye shall still do wickedly, ye shall be consumed, both ²⁷ye and your king.

ungratefully determining to be governed in a different manner than that which God himself had chosen for them. And if afterwards, when God had expressly appointed David to rule over them, the people had required a change of government, and wanted again to be ruled by judges as their fathers had been; they would have been guilty of a similar rebellion. (Note, 1 Kings xii. 16.)

V. 20. Fear not, &c. Samuel repeatedly exhorted the people to "fear the LORD;" (14, 24): yet here he exhorted them not to fear; that is, not to be dismayed by the dread of immediate destruction.—Reverence of the majesty and authority of God, and fear of his displeasure, when counterpoised by the hope of his favour, quicken men in seeking and serving him: but such a fear of wrath, as occasions despondency and hard thoughts of him, drives men from their duty, and exposes them to manifold temptations. (Notes, Gen. xlv. 5. 1 Tim. i. 6-8. 1 John iv. 18.)

V. 22. In preferring the seed of Jacob to other families, to be his people, the Lord acted as a sovereign, who is not bound, and doth not deign, to assign his reasons; but having made them his people, the honour of his perfections required, that he should not entirely forsake them, till the promised Seed arose, however severely he corrected them: and this consideration was suited to excite and encourage their obedience. (Notes, Ps. xciv. 12-14. Rom. xi. 1-10. Marg. Ref.)

V. 23. The people had no occasion to fear Samuel's resentment: for he deemed himself bound in duty to persevere in praying for them, notwithstanding the affront which they had put upon him. And though he was no longer their chief magistrate, he promised still to devote the remnant of his life to their service, as their instructor in religion, and in promoting their peace and happiness.—In these respects he judged them all the days of his life. (Note, vii. 15.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The favoured few, who have walked before God from childhood to old age, while they look back on their past lives with gratitude, as the sure evidence of acceptance, and as confirming their expectation of eternal glory; may receive this satisfaction, and the "rejoicing in the testimony of their consciences," as a gracious recompense from the Lord, and may speak of them, in order to induce young persons to seek and serve him without delay.—There are seasons, when we are called on to vindicate our own characters and conduct before men, and to shew them how conscientiously we have acted towards them: but it should be always done in subservency to their conviction and edification. We may very properly touch on this subject, when we can thus convey useful hints to our juniors, or successors: and men may recede from public stations with comfort, when they can extort even from their despisers a testimony to their people did hide themselves in caves, and in thickets, and in rocks, and in high places, and in pits.

7 And some of the Hebrews went over Jordan to the land of Gad and Gilead: as for Saul, he was yet in Gilgal, and all the people followed him trembling.

8 ¶ And he tarried seven days, according to the set time that Samuel had appointed: but Samuel came not to Gilgal, and the people were scattered from him.

9 And Saul said, Bring hither a burnt-offering to me, and peace-offerings. And he offered the burnt-offering.

10 And it came to pass, that as soon as he had made an end of offering the burnt-offering, behold, Samuel came; and Saul went out to meet him, that he might salute him.

11 ¶ And Samuel said, What hast thou done? And Saul said, Because I saw that the people were scattered from me, and that thou camest not within the days appointed, and that the Philistines gathered themselves together at Michmash;

12 Therefore said I, The Philistines will come down now upon me to Gilgal, and I have not made supplication unto the Lord: I forced myself therefore, and offered a burnt-offering.

13 And Samuel said to Saul, Thou hast done foolishly: thou hast not kept the commandment of integrity.—The honour, rendered to those, who are concluding their course, differs widely from the applause and congratulation which many receive, when they first step forth before the public eye. This indeed often terminates in disgrace and contempt; it is therefore unworthy of our wishes, and ought surely never to move a wise man's envy or discontent; though rendered to others at his expense.—Prosperity in sin is no proof of impunity; and sinners never more need to be warned, than when successful in their undertakings.—But the servants of God, though ill treated, should be careful not to expostulate too much with those by whom they have been injured; but to "reason with them of the righteous acts of the Lord," of his truth and mercy, and of their conduct towards him, for their humiliation.—Our safe and happy state consists in a willing dependence on God, and subjection to him: but we affect independence, and refuse obedience, by which we exchange substantial good for an empty shadow; for the greatest outward prosperity contributes to our felicity, only when it induces us to fear and serve God, and to obey his voice.—Disobedience ensures misery from generation to generation, whatever be our station or circumstances in life: and to continue "following the Lord," as his accepted servants, is the highest privilege which we can enjoy.—The most useful benefactors of mankind, who have spent their lives, and worn out their constitutions, in unceasing labours for the good of others, must not be surprised, if they are at length cast off with neglect and ingratitude: but when the perverseness of their brethren prevents them from doing all that good which they desired to do, they should still do all the good that they can. This is a general rule for all: they who cannot rule may teach, and they who cannot teach may pray, and set an edifying example; and no provocations should tempt us to sin against God in ceasing to pray for our children, relations, friends, people, fellow-sinners, or even our inveterate enemies. Yet the prayers of the church, and the intercession of Christ, will in the event appear to have been united against impudent sinners; yea, the elements and the whole creation will shortly be armed against them to their destruction. The belief of this alarming truth should "warn them to flee from the wrath to come," to confess their sins, to obey the gospel, and to desire the prayers and counsels of his ministers. But when sinners are deeply convinced of their guilt and danger, they need encouragement, lest their fear should lead to despondency. Note, 2 Cor. ii. 5-11.—In the day of judgment all those things which men have inordinately loved, and for which they have forsaken God, will be found "vain, and such as cannot profit or deliver," even though they were "the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them." Happy then are they, whom the Lord hath pleased to make his people! "he will never leave or forsake them," but will glorify his great name in their eternal salvation. None, however, can know assuredly, that these blessings belong to them, except they attend to "the good and right way, and fear the Lord, and serve him with all their heart:" and if "we consider what great things he hath done for us," especially in the work of redemption, we cannot want either motive, or encouragement, or assistance for so doing.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIII. V. 1, 2. The expressions, in the original, "Saul was the son of one year in his reigning," "and when he had reigned two years, &c.," are interpreted in various ways. Perhaps they only mean, according to the Hebrew idiom, that during the first year, nothing remarkable occurred; but after two years, (or in the second year of his reign,) the subsequent events took place.—It is uncertain, whether Saul had just before been attended by a more numerous army, which he on this occasion dismissed; or whether the people had been again convened; or whether the passage refers to the transactions at Gilgal recorded in the former chapters. Perhaps those events did not take place till the second year, after he had been appointed by the Lord to be king over Israel. (Notes, xi. 12-15. xii. 1.) When he dismissed the rest of the multitude, he retained three thousand chosen men, for his own defence and that of his country.

V. 3, 4. After Saul had defeated Nahash, and had been confirmed in the kingdom; and after he had joined with Samuel in offering sacrifices, and had obtained the benefit of his prayers; it may be concluded that he ought to have marched directly with his victorious army against the Philistines, who possessed strongholds in the land, and had become very formidable. (Notes, vii. 13, 14. ix. 16.) But it is probable, that he was elated with success, pleased with the shew of royalty, and disposed to ease and indulgence. Thus the favourable opportunity was lost, the ardour of his followers was suffered to abate, and perhaps some of them were disgusted: and the Philistines, doubtless, learning that a king had been chosen, with a view to deliver Israel from their power; assiduously employed the time given them, in preparing for war, and in weakening and disarming the Israelites. In the mean while Jonathan, probably by Saul's command, smote a garrison of the Philistines; so that "Israel was had in abomination by the Philistines," who resented the affront, and were exceedingly exasperated: and when Saul at length sounded the alarm, the people either did not come to him, or they speedily deserted him.—In all these measures Saul seems to have been impolitic. (Note, xi. 12-15.) but the Lord intended to chastise the people for their sins, to expose their folly in expecting that a king could save them, and to prepare the way for a glorious deliverance which he intended to effect for them. (Notes, xiv. 17-23.)

V. 5. Thirty thousand chariots. The Philistines had doubtless collected troops on this emergency from all the surrounding nations; but the number of chariots here stated is immensely large beyond all example; (Ex. xiv. 7. Judg. ix. 4. 2 Sam. x. 18. 1 Kings x. 26. Ps. lxxviii. 17.) Commentators therefore conjecture, that all their carriages for baggage and other uses are included.

V. 6, 7. The numerous and well-appointed army of the Philistines so terrified the people, that most of them deserted, and either hid themselves, or passed over Jordan; while the few who remained with Saul, trembled as they followed him. (Notes, Judg. vi. 2. Is. xlii. 22-25.)

V. 8, 9. (Note, x. 8.) According to the direction before given, and perhaps since repeated, Saul waited for Samuel till the close of the seventh day: but, being impatient of his situation, perhaps displeased with Samuel for not coming sooner, and attributing the people's terror and desertion to his absence, and the want of some token of the Lord's presence; and fearing lest the others also should leave him; he proceeded to offer sacrifices. This was contrary to the express injunctions, which had been laid upon him to wait for Samuel; who, having presented burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, with solemn prayers and supplications, would have shewn him how he ought to proceed, in the present difficult emergency, that he might ensure success.—As no priest is mentioned, it has been thought that Saul, presuming on his kingly authority, usurped the priesthood also: but this is doubtful. It is certain, however, that he took too much upon him, and thought it was fit the prophet should wait for the king, rather than the king for the prophet.—He entrenched on the priest's office, or upon that of the prophet, or upon both. (Bp. Patrick.)

V. 10-12. When Samuel came, Saul went out to "salute," or bless him, as one well satisfied with what he had done. (Notes, xv. 13, 14. Ps. xxxvi. 2.) But when he perceived by Samuel's pointed question, that he was displeased; he attempted to excuse himself by the plea of necessity; stating, that he had acted reluctantly, in sacrificing; but he did it, lest the Philistines should attack him before he had performed his devotions. He might, however, the LORD thy God, which he commanded thee: for now would the LORD have established thy kingdom upon Israel for ever.

14 But now thy kingdom shall not continue; *the LORD hath sought him a man after his own heart, and the LORD hath commanded him to be captain over his people, because thou hast not kept that which the LORD commanded thee.

15 And Samuel arose, and gat him up from Gilgal unto Gibeah of Benjamin. And Saul numbered the people that were present with him, about six hundred men.

16 And Saul, and Jonathan his son, and the people that were present with them, abode in Gibeah of Benjamin: but the Philistines encamped in Michmash.

17 ¶ And the spoilers came out of the camp of the Philistines, in three companies: one company turned unto the way that leadeth to Ophrah, unto the land of Shual:

18 And another company turned the way to Beth-horon: and another company turned to the way of the border, that looketh to the valley of Zeboim, toward the wilderness.

19 ¶ Now there was no smith found throughout all the land of Israel: for the Philistines said, Lest the Hebrews make them swords or spears:

20 But all the Israelites went down to the Philistines, to sharpen every man his share, and his coulter, and his axe, and his mattock.

without blame, have poured out his prayers to God, and thus have waited for Samuel.

V. 13-15. This commandment of the Lord by Samuel was, probably, intended as a test of Saul's disposition; and his transgression proved, that he did not regard the word of God, when it greatly interfered with his own inclinations or sentiments; by which it appeared that he was unfit to rule as the vicergerent of the Lord over his people. He was "weighed in this balance, and found wanting." Had he behaved properly, the kingdom would have been permanently confirmed in his family; and it is probable that Samuel came to Gilgal, expecting to make this settlement by divine authority: but now, Saul was sentenced to be removed, to make way for one of a more obedient disposition. This, the omniscient God foresaw; but his secret purpose was not the motive of Saul's conduct; which to the Searcher of hearts doubtless appeared much more aggravated than it does to us.—Samuel on this occasion departed from Saul, yet, as he went to Gibeah of Saul, and came to him afterwards; (xv. 1. 13. 34, 35;) it is conjectured that the sentence was not irreversible; but that, if Saul had repented of this sin, and been more obedient in future, he might have been continued in the kingdom.—When only six hundred men remained with Saul, he must have been greatly affected with the alteration which had taken place, since he was followed by three hundred thousand men of Israel, and thirty thousand of Judah, in warring against Nahash! (Note, xi. 6-9.)

V. 19-21. During all the forty years' oppression by the Philistines, they seem to have used the policy, of forbidding the Israelites to practise the trade of smiths; as the Chaldeans afterwards carried the smiths captive out of the land. (2 Kings xxiv. 14. Jer. xxiv. 1.) And after the termination of that entire slavery, the Israelites did not readily re-assume the trade; but, as the Philistines had garrisons in many parts of the land, they were accustomed to go down to the smiths resident in them, for such work as needed to be done: and these would doubtless exact an exorbitant price for their labour, and also exert themselves in preventing the Israelites from learning or practising their trade. Thus the Philistines had artfully obtained a most important advantage; and, it is probable, they had been more assiduous than common, while they expected that Saul would make war on them: so that at the important crisis, the Israelites were almost destitute of armour. The impolicy of Saul, and the tame spirit of the people, were thus manifested: but the Lord over-ruled it, to shew the greatness of his power in the deliverance and victory of his people, when thus circumstanced. Many parts of the land were too distant from Philistia for the Israelites to go thither on every occasion, and the Philistines had garrisons in the land: so that the interpretation above given is most natural, as well as generally adopted.

V. 22. The Israelites used bows, slings, and javelins in war, and with these it is probable the people were armed. Perhaps the Philistines had seized the armour which they had used against Nahash, after they were dispersed; and it is probable, that many who had armour had deserted. However, it was so ordered in providence, that none, but Saul and Jonathan, had either sword or spear. Thus the Israelites, who expected to look formidable under kingly government, were made to appear very contemptible: (Notes, viii. 1-5;) not that the Lord had forsaken his people; but because he would humble them, and shew them, that the victory did not depend upon swords and spears, but upon the favour and assistance of the Almighty. (Notes, xiv. 1-15. Judg. vii. 2-22.)

23 And the garrison of the Philistines went out to the passage of Michmash.

CHAP. XIV.

Jonathan, attended only by his armour-bearer, smites the garrison of the Philistines, 1-14; who are seized with terror, and destroy one another, 15, 16. Saul, seeing the tumult, enquires of God: but without waiting an answer, he assaults the Philistines; being joined by the Hebrews, who had deserted, or hid themselves, 17-23. His rash course, against such as ate that day, hinders the completion of the victory; and Jonathan not knowing what had passed, violates it, 24-30. The people fly upon the spoil, and are hardly restrained from eating with the blood, 31-34. Saul builds an altar: and asks counsel of God, but is not answered, 35-37. Jonathan, taken by lot and sentenced to die, is rescued by the people, 38-46. Saul's victories and family, 47-52.

NOW it came to pass upon a day, that Jonathan the son of Saul said unto the young man that bare his armour, Come, and let us go over to the Philistines' garrison that is on the other side: but he told not his father.

2 And Saul tarried in the uttermost part of Gibeah, under a pomegranate-tree, which is in Migron: and the people that were with him were about six hundred men;

3 And Ahiah, the son of Ahitub, I-chabod's brother, the son of Phinehas, the son of Eli, the LORD's priest in Shiloh, wearing an ephod. And the people knew not that Jonathan was gone.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Our sanguine expectations from creatures are sure to end in disappointment: and when we resolve to choose for ourselves, we shall certainly have cause to repent of our choice: indeed, when men are lifted up in self-sufficiency, they are often left to the most unaccountable infatuation. The chief advantages of the enemies of the church are derived from the misconduct of its professed friends: for when these act inconsistently with justice and fidelity, religious people, without discrimination, are looked upon with abhorrence and contempt. Yet, while sinners are meditating revenge, the Lord often restrains their malice by invisible hindrances, and uses their machinations for the chastisement of his people. Deep resentment and great power united, occasion much consternation; and men thus terrified, flee or hide themselves from their fellow-creatures: how then will the terror of the Almighty appall the wicked, in the approaching day of his inevitable and intolerable wrath! They who in trouble are actuated by pride and impatience, involve themselves in still deeper guilt and misery, by their foolish expedients to extricate themselves. Our observance of the Lord's directions, will always be proportioned to our simplicity of dependence on his promises, and submission to his will: and they, who are most dilatory in doing their duty, are commonly the most impatient of delay in waiting his time of deliverance. Our disposition to obey or disobey will often be decisively proved by our behaviour in apparently small things; (Note, Gen. iii. 6:) and such as most neglect the duties of their own station, are most forward to censure the supposed negligence of others. Men, destitute of inward piety, are frequently most scrupulously attached to the forms of godliness: nay, they fancy that the Lord will accept them, because they force themselves to act contrary to their own inclinations, or even to the dictates of their natural conscience! We are commanded not to "speak evil of rulers;" yet they, who are called to address them in the name of God, must point out very plainly the folly and evil of their conduct, and remind them of his anger against workers of iniquity, without respect of persons: for though a prince may not, in this life, forfeit his throne or his dignity by his offences against God; yet, if he die impenitent, he will certainly lose his soul in the world to come. How empty then are those distinctions, from which so many are hurried into everlasting misery! We have, by sin, forfeited felicity; but unbelief and impenitency ratify that forfeiture; and they, who have undeniably broken the commandments of God, and yet persist in excusing and justifying themselves, are evidently both impenitent and unbelieving. The trouble of all such, as continue in this spirit, must certainly increase; and, as they refuse to submit to God, they may be reduced to the most abject misery in the slavery of sin. But, while the Lord pours contempt upon princes, and brings to nought all the honourable of the earth, he will deliver his people by his own power: and while he shames such as trust in man, he will honour them who expect help from him alone.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIV. V. 1. No doubt, Jonathan was excited by an immediate divine impulse, to assault the formidable oppressors of his people: and by the same admonition he was kept from informing the soldiers; and even from consulting his father, who might have opposed his design. Indeed Saul's transgression excluded him from sharing the honour of that deliverance, which God intended to vouchsafe to his afflicted people. (Note, xiii. 13-15.)

V. 2, 3. (xiii. 15, 16.) After Samuel had left Saul, it seems that Saul sent for Ahiah, or Ahimelech, the great-grandson of Eli, the LORD's priest in 22 Likewise all the men of Israel which had ^{hid} themselves in mount Ephraim, when they heard that the Philistines fled, even they also followed hard after them in the battle.

23 So ^{the} LORD saved Israel that day: and the battle passed over unto ^{Beth}-aven.

24 ¶ And the men of Israel were distressed that day: for Saul had adjured the people, saying, ^{Cursed} be the man that eateth any food until evening, that ^I may be avenged on mine enemies. So none of the people tasted any food.

Shiloh. Ahitub was the elder brother of I-chabod; and his son was at this time high priest, and so wore the ephod, and the breastplate of judgment with Urim and Thummin. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ex. xxviii. 30. Num. xxvii. 21.) Saul therefore having him in the camp, with his priestly garments; and, as it is probable, having fetched the ark thither also, (18;) (though the fate of Eli's sons might have shewn him the folly of that presumptuous measure;) appeared to himself and to the people, to have abundant tokens of God's presence with him, (Notes, iv. 3—11:) and he could now enquire of the LORD, without being liable to Samuel's sharp reproofs; hoping, perhaps, that Ahiah would be more compliant to his inclinations. (Note, xxii. 14—16.)

V. 4, 5. The hand of God was very visible, in restraining the vast army of the Philistines from assaulting the small company of the Israelites; (xiii. 5:) so that they kept themselves entrenched in a fortified camp, in an almost inaccessible situation, as still fearing their enfeebled enemies.

V. 6—10. The faith of Jonathan was doubtless in general very strong, and his armour-bearer was a man of the same spirit with himself; but the thought of attacking this vast army was doubtless suggested to Jonathan's mind immediately from God, and his faith and expectation increased in proportion. He was enabled, with reference to his own conduct, to view the almighty power of God, as sufficient for his safeguard in the midst of the Philistines; and also to save Israel by him and his armour-bearer, as well as by the most numerous and powerful army. Considering the Israelites as the covenant-people of God, who were oppressed by the uncircumcised Philistines; he expected that the Lord would appear for them, in the same wonderful manner, as he had done for their fathers in former times. (Note, xvii. 25, 26.) But, for fuller satisfaction in this matter, he and his armour-bearer agreed upon a token, according to which their proceedings were to be determined: if warned by the Philistines to wait till they were attacked, they would consider it as a divine monition, to act only upon the defensive; but if they called to them to come up, they would take it as a signal to climb the steep rock, and attack them. (Notes, Gen. xxiv. 11—14. Judg. vii. 13—15.)—Such extraordinary attempts and triumphs of faith, directed by immediate divine monition, are recorded for our admiration, and our encouragement in more ordinary services; and not for our imitation.

V. 11—15. It seems to have been early in the morning, when Jonathan and his armour-bearer placed themselves in the view of the Philistines, who in contempt challenged them to "come up, and they would shew them a thing," meaning that they would cause them to repent of their audacity. This being the expected token from God, Jonathan assured his armour-bearer, that the Lord would deliver the Philistines by their means into the hands of Israel. Thus they both, without hesitation, climbed up the rock into the enemy's camp, apparently rushing into the jaws of destruction: but, by the immediate interposition of God, the Philistines were so confounded at this daring assault, that they fell down before Jonathan, and were despatched by his armour-bearer; till twenty were slaughtered in a small space, as it seems, without attempting either to fight or to flee. Upon which the whole army was seized with trembling and consternation; and an earthquake, which took place at the same moment, increased their terror: so that it was "a trembling of God," the whole being not only very great, but altogether miraculous: (Marg.) in consequence of which, they supposed the Israelites to have been in the midst of the camp, and began to slay one another in every part of it. The army being constituted, as it is supposed, of different nations; (Note, xiii. 5:) the confusion might excite mutual jealousies and suspicions, which proved the occasion of their common destruction. (Notes, Judg. vii. 16—22. 1 Kings xx. 14—21. 2 Chr. xiv. 9—15. xx. 14—25.)

V. 16—23. This confusion in the camp of the Philistines being observed by the centinels of Saul's army; and none being absent from the camp of Israel, but Jonathan and his armour-bearer, no doubt the people were greatly astonished: and Saul prepared to consult the Lord, whether he ought to attack the Philistines or no. His impatient spirit, however, could no more wait for Ahiah's answer, than for Samuel's arrival, (Note, xiii. 8, 9:) but perceiving the commotion still increasing, he hastily determined to march against the enemy; though he might justly have questioned, whether the Lord, who had begun the work without him, would accept of his assistance. At least there could be no need of such haste. (Note, xxx. 7, 8.) It pleased the Lord indeed to employ Saul's army, as well as the deserters and fugitives, who joined in crushing the Philistines: yet Saul himself met with a very humiliating proof, that the Divine interposition was not vouchsafed on his account.—Probably the ark of the covenant was brought into the field on this occasion. Though some think, that the coffer, or chest, in which the ephod and breast-plate were kept, is meant. (Note, 2 Sam. xi. 10, 11.)

V. 24—34. The absolute prohibition of all food to the soldiers, for the whole day, was very impolitic; though Saul might properly have cautioned them not to waste their time about food, on penalty of his displeasure. But to accompany this prohibition with that awful curse, by which the enemies of God were devoted to utter destruction, was profane and rash in the ing-light, and "let us not leave a man of them. And they said, Do whatsoever seemeth good unto thee. Then "said the priest, Let us draw near hither unto God.

37 ¶ And Saul asked counsel of God, "Shall I go down after the Philistines? wilt thou deliver them into the hand of Israel? But "he answered him not that day.

38 ¶ And Saul said, "Draw ye near hither all the "chief of the people; and know and see wherein this sin hath been this day.

39 For as "the LORD liveth, which saveth Israel, though it be in Jonathan my son, he shall surely die. But there was not a man among all the people that answered him.

40 Then said he unto all Israel, Be ye on one side, and I and Jonathan my son will be on the other side. And the people said unto Saul, "Do what seemeth good unto thee.

41 Therefore Saul said unto the LORD God of Israel, "Give a perfect lot. "And Saul and Jonathan were taken: but the people "escaped.

42 And Saul said, Cast lots between me and Jonathan my son. And Jonathan was taken.

43 Then Saul said to Jonathan, *"Tell me what thou hast done. And Jonathan told him, and said, "I did but taste a little honey with the end of the rod that was in mine hand, and, lo, I must die.*

44 And Saul answered, "God do so, and more also: for "thou shalt surely die, Jonathan.

45 And the people said unto Saul, Shall Jonathan die, "who hath wrought this great salvation in Israel? God forbid: as the LORD liveth, "there shall not one hair of his head fall to the ground; for "he hath wrought with God this day. So the people rescued Jonathan, that he died not.

46 Then Saul went up from following the Philistines: and the Philistines went to their own place.

47 ¶ So Saul *"took the kingdom over Israel, and "fought against all his enemies on every side, against Moab, and against the children of "Ammon, and against Edom, and against the kings of "Zobah, and against the Philistines, and whithersoever he turned himself he vexed *them.

extreme; (Notes, Lev. xxvii. 28, 29 :) and it was the more inexcusable, in that he did not say, "that the LORD may avenge Israel on his enemies," but "that I may be avenged on mine enemies."—The people, fearing the curse, abstained, not only from the spoil of the Philistines; but likewise from the honey which was laid in their way, and with which they might have refreshed themselves without loss of time, and thus have been enabled to have made a much greater slaughter of the Philistines: and in the evening, being almost fainting with labour and hunger, some of them were tempted hastily to kill the cattle which they had taken, and to eat the flesh with the blood, directly contrary to the law; until they were restrained by Saul's authority. In the mean while, Jonathan, being ignorant of the curse, and almost ready to faint with fatigue, had eaten a little honey, by which he was sensibly and visibly revived, so that his eyes which had been dim and languishing, were enlightened and looked lively: yet he thus found himself caught in a snare, and exposed to the most imminent danger of being put to death.

V. 35. It is probable that Saul converted the great stone, on which the cattle had been slaughtered, into an altar on which sacrifices were offered, before the people attempted to proceed any further. He built this his first altar, when, disregarding Samuel, he had begun to apostatize from God! (Notes, Num. xxiii. 1, 2. 2 Kings xviii. 22. Hos. viii. 13, 14.)

V. 36-44. When the people had refreshed themselves, Saul proposed to them, to pursue the army of the Philistines, in order to destroy it entirely; to which they readily consented. But Ahiah, having been before interrupted by Saul's impatience, very properly counselled them to enquire of the Lord: and when no answer was returned, Saul justly concluded that the Lord was offended, and desired to discover the cause: but, if he had been humbly sensible of the evil of his own past conduct, he would have concluded himself to be the culprit. (Notes, xxviii. 6. Ez. xiv. 1-5. xx. 1-3.) The Lord, however, was pleased, that the conduct of Jonathan, who had unwarily exposed himself to the curse denounced by his father, should be discovered, as the cause why he did not answer the high priest's enquiries; that the people might understand how much they were interested in the conduct of their king; and be convinced of their folly in rejecting the government of a pious prophet, whose prayers brought down blessings, for that of a king whose curses brought down wrath upon them. (Notes, vii. viii.) In the same rash and profane spirit, as in the former instance, Saul, before the lots were cast, swore by the Lord, that even if Jonathan were the offender, he should surely die; without knowing whether the crime committed deserved death, or whether it might not be expiated by a sin-offering. And after the lots had been cast, (with prayer, as probably was the constant practice,) and Jonathan was taken; Saul, with affected sternness, without any humiliation for his own sin in thus rashly troubling Israel; as one who appeared zealous for the glory of God, and the obligation of an oath, while in reality tenacious of his own will and authority; and with execrations on himself, proceeded to denounce the sentence of death upon his own pious son! (Notes, xv. 15. Gen. xxxviii. 24-26. 2 Sam. xii. 26-31.)

V. 45, 46. The people judged rightly, that the guilt was contracted by Saul, and that the rebuke was intended for him, and not for Jonathan: and therefore they rescued him, by whom God had given them this extraordinary deliverance, from the hands of his severe father. Saul could not but desire the life of his son; yet considering him, as decidedly preferred before himself, both by the Lord and Israel; knowing that Jonathan's deliverance was a severe reproof of his rashness; and perhaps apprehending, as he had abundant cause to do, that his repeated curses would light on his own head; he returned home apparently dissatisfied and displeased. (Notes, 1 Kings xx. 38-43.) Thus the opportunity of completing the destruction of the Philistines was lost; nor could it be expected, that an expedition, which was begun and conducted so very ill, should terminate without some evident tokens of the Divine displeasure against Saul; though the Lord's love to Israel was displayed in an unparalleled manner, by the faith and courage of his pious son Jonathan.—Through Saul's misconduct, and as if in answer to his imprecations, Jonathan was excluded from the kingdom, and slain with him by the Philistines, when "the Lord did unto him," as he intended to have done to his son, "and more also;" having indeed devoted him to utter destruction. (44. Notes, xxxi. 2-5.)

V. 47-52. After the decided victory gained over the Philistines, Saul's authority as king of Israel was re-established: and, though the Lord was

50 And the name of Saul's wife was Ahinoam, the daughter of Ahimaaz; and the name of the captain of his host was Abner the son of Ner, Saul's uncle:

51 And Kish was the father of Saul; and Ner the father of Abner was the son of Abiel.

52 And there was sore war against the Philistines all the days of Saul: and when Saul saw any strong man, or any valiant man, he took him unto him.

CHAP. XV.

Saul is sent to destroy Amalek, 1-3. He gathers a large army, favours the Kenites, and smites the Amalekites, 4-7. He spares Agag and the best of the spoil, 8, 9. Samuel is sent to denounce to him, that God has rejected him for his disobedience, and Saul attempts to excuse himself, 10-21. He is convicted of rebellion; and partially humbles himself, but cannot get the sentence reversed, 22-31. Samuel kills Agag, and finally leaves Saul, 32-35.

SAMUEL also said unto Saul, "The LORD sent me to anoint thee to be king over his people, over Israel: now therefore hearken thou unto the voice of the words of the LORD."

2 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, "I remember that displeased with him, and purposed to set aside his family, he prospered him in the wars which he carried on against the several nations which oppressed Israel.—It is evident that many important transactions of his reign are passed over in silence; and that in general it was more active and successful, (in the former part of it especially,) than it appears at first sight to have been. But, to the end of his life, Saul was unable to prevail against the Philistines, having missed the opportunity which God had afforded him: so that, after having had sore war with them all his days, the three sons here mentioned fell at last by their hands, and he was driven to murder himself.—Saul seems to have had only one wife; and Rizpah, his concubine. (2 Sam. xxi. 8-10.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-23. The same principle, which induces men to seek relief from the accusations of conscience, by abounding in the externals of religion, will lead them to seek refuge from the warnings and reproofs of faithful ministers, by paying court to others, who, either out of mistake, timidity, or unfaithfulness, give them less disturbance in sin; but God will shew a marked disapprobation of such attendance on his own ordinances, or profession of his truths, as is intended to quiet the conscience, or support the credit, of sinners, who persist in disobeying the plain precepts of his holy word.—Hypocrites often detect their indifference, even about the religion which they professedly choose; for as it has no practical energy upon them, a small matter induces them to dispense with the useless form.—No warnings or examples are sufficient to convince men of the folly and danger of trusting in the forms of godliness, while they neglect the power of it; but from age to age numbers proceed in the same destructive path. (Note, 2 Tim. iii. 1-5.) Yet, blessed be God, every age also produces illustrious instances of those, who being strong in faith, give glory unto God; and its triumphs are proportioned to its strength.—While we are obeying the commands, trusting the protection, and seeking the glory, of God, neither the sense of our own weakness, nor the power of our enemies, should dismay us; "For there is no restraint to the LORD to save by many or by few." We are not indeed warranted at present to expect miraculous interpositions; yet the feeblest instrument, who sincerely and in faith uses the appointed means, in order to subvert Satan's kingdom of ignorance, error, and wickedness, is authorized to expect considerable success; for "it may be that the LORD will work with him:" and then the weapons of his warfare will prove mighty, and no force of the enemies of our God and his Christ can stand before him. (Notes, 1 Cor. i. 20-25. 2 Cor. iv. 7. x. 1-6.) At his frown the mightiest armies melt away, or prove instruments of each other's destruction: what then will be the consternation and horror, when the whole world shall be assembled before his tribunal, and "the wicked shall be cast into hell, yea, all the nations that forget God!"

V. 24-52. In the midst of the most glorious success, "one sinner" often "destroyeth much good;" and rash zeal is as hurtful as timid inaction. It indeed becomes an Israelite to be superior to the cravings of his appetites: but there is neither prudence nor piety, in restraining men from partaking of the bounty of providence, when placed honestly within their reach; and when it is so used, as to prepare them for his service, and encourage rather than hinder them in it. They are indeed "troublers of Israel," who prohibit such use of those good things which "God giveth us richly to enjoy:" the curses, with which they sanction their antichristian mandates, will fall on their own heads; and they will be answerable for all the consequences: for restraints from things lawful prove temptations to forbidden indulgencies, and a superstitious zeal about externals has often hindered men from performing essential services to the church. (Note, 1 Tim. iv. 1-5.)—When rulers, by authority, would withhold men from transgression, while they set them an example of disobedience to God, they can expect but little success.—We are too much in haste in our most important employments, if we cannot allow ourselves time to consult the which Amalek did to Israel, how he laid wait for him in the way when he came up from Egypt.

3 Now go, and smite Amalek, and utterly destroy all that they have, and spare them not; but slay both man and woman, infant and suckling, ox and sheep, camel and ass.

4 And Saul gathered the people together, and numbered them in Telaim, two hundred thousand footmen, and ten thousand men of Judah.

5 And Saul came to a city of Amalek, and laid wait in the valley.

6 ¶ And Saul said unto the Kenites, "Go, depart, get you down from among the Amalekites, lest I destroy you with them: for ye shewed kindness to all the children of Israel when they came up out of Egypt. So the Kenites departed from among the Amalekites."

7 ¶ And Saul smote the Amalekites from Havilah until thou comest to Shur, that is over against Egypt.

8 And he took Agag the king of the Amalekites alive, and utterly destroyed all the people with the edge of the sword.

9 But Saul and the people spared Agag, and the best of the sheep, and of the oxen, and of the fatlings, and the lambs, and all that was good, and would not utterly destroy them: but every thing that was vile and refuse, that they destroyed utterly.

Lord, and seek his blessing; and ministers should plainly remind those, who are running into this common mistake.—When our prayers are not answered, we may safely conclude that iniquity withholds good from us, and we should make diligent search for it: but we should always first suspect and examine ourselves; whereas an unhumiliated heart suspects every other person, and looks every where but at home, for the sinful cause of calamity!—They who are indulgent to their own sins, are generally severe in animadverting on the faults of others: and such as most disregard God's authority, are most impatient when their own commands appear to be slighted, or their reputation eclipsed; and, by severity against small sins, they frequently endeavour to varnish over their own enormous transgressions.—They, who delight in cursing, are in extreme danger of falling under the awful curse of God: (Note, Ps. cix. 6-20.) and the habit of swearing will be sure to involve a man in the guilt of perjury, as well as of profaneness; for though now concealed, his iniquity will be "sure to find him out."—No oath can bind us to commit injustice: but the rash swearer should repent of his iniquity, and not add one crime to another; and all men should join to rescue the innocent from punishment.—In this world, if they who have "wrought with God," and been remarkably useful to his people, escape persecution and death as their recompense; they are more favoured than those who have gone before them; and need not expect much advantage to themselves from their usefulness, till they get to heaven.—In the midst of mercy, the Lord will rebuke his people for their sins; and by mismanagement men lose the comfort of their successes, and are discontented, and filled with vexation, in the midst of blessings.—But the Lord employs even wicked men as instruments of providential good to his people; in temporal prosperity they forget their sins and the threatened wrath of God: and thus they blaze for a moment, like a meteor, and then are put out in utter darkness. O Lord, let us rather be chastened here, than thus prosper, and be condemned with the world!

NOTES.

CHAP. XV. V. 1-3. It is probable, that for some years, Saul scarcely took any notice of Samuel, in his wars and successes; perhaps resenting the sharp rebuke which he had before given him, and Samuel did not intrude himself. But now, he was sent to Saul with an express command, to go and utterly destroy the Amalekites. In delivering his message, the prophet reminded him, that he had been commissioned by the Lord to anoint him king, and that now he spake by the same authority: he seemed also to intimate, that unless Saul "hearkened to the voice of the words of the LORD," he should be authorized to denounce the sentence of rejection against him; and he gave him his instructions in the most explicit and particular manner.—The Amalekites had long before been condemned, (Notes, Ex. xvii. 8-16;) but the nation had been spared, till it had filled up the measure of its iniquities.—The righteous Lord certainly did no injustice to individuals; and the example was of a salutary tendency, to deter others in future ages from "meddling to their hurt" with the servants of the living God.

V. 4. The large army, which was collected when Samuel directed the enterprise, shews that the people had much more confidence in their rejected prophet, than in the king whom they had so inordinately desired. (xiii. 5-15.) The disproportionate number of Judah, might perhaps be the effect of their dissatisfaction with a king of another tribe.—The armies of Israel at that time had no cavalry.

V. 6. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 7. The region, occupied by the Amalekites, lay between Havilah on the north-east, and Shur on the south-west: and Saul carried his victorious arms through the whole extent of this district. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 8, 9. The Lord had devoted all the Amalekites, together with their substance, to utter destruction, as a solemn sacrifice to his justice: and the

10 ¶ Then came the word of the LORD unto Samuel, saying,

11 It 'repenteth me that I have set up Saul to be king: for he is "turned back from following me, and "hath not performed my commandments. And "it grieved Samuel; and "he cried unto the LORD all night.

12 ¶ And when Samuel rose early to meet Saul in the morning, it was told Samuel, saying, Saul came to "Carmel, and, behold, "he set him up a place, and is gone about, and passed on, and gone down to Gilgal.

13 And Samuel came to Saul; and Saul said unto him, "Blessed be thou of the LORD: "I have performed the commandment of the LORD.

14 And Samuel said, "What meaneth then this bleating of the sheep in mine ears, and the lowing of the oxen which I hear?

15 And Saul said, They have brought them from the Amalekites: "for the people spared the best of the sheep and of the oxen, "to sacrifice unto the LORD thy God; and the rest we have utterly destroyed.

16 Then Samuel said unto Saul, "Stay, and I will tell thee what the LORD hath said to me this night. And he said unto him, Say on.

17 And Samuel said, "When thou wast little in thine own sight, wast thou not made the head of the tribes of Israel, and "the LORD anointed thee king over Israel?

18 And the LORD sent thee on a journey, and said, Go, and utterly destroy "the sinners the Amalekites, and fight against them until "they be consumed.

19 Wherefore then didst thou not obey the voice of the LORD, but didst fly upon the spoil, and "didst evil in the sight of the LORD?

20 And Saul said unto Samuel, "Yea, I have obeyed the voice of the LORD, and have gone the way which the LORD sent me, and "have brought Agag the king of Amalek, and have utterly destroyed the Amalekites.

21 But "the people took of the spoil, sheep and oxen, the chief of the things which should have been utterly destroyed, to sacrifice unto the LORD thy God in Gilgal.

22 And Samuel said, "Hath the LORD as great delight in burnt-offerings and sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the LORD? Behold, to "obey is better than sacrifice; and to hearken than the fat of rams.

23 For "rebellion is as the sin of "witchcraft, and stubbornness is as iniquity and idolatry: because "thou hast rejected the word of the LORD, he hath also rejected thee from being king.

24 ¶ And Saul said unto Samuel, "I have sinned: for I have transgressed the commandment of the LORD, and thy words; because "I feared the people, and "obeyed their voice.

25 Now therefore, I pray thee, "pardon my sin, and turn again with me, that I may worship the LORD.

26 And Samuel said unto Saul, "I will not return with thee: for "thou hast rejected the word of the LORD, and the LORD hath rejected thee from being king over Israel.

27 And as Samuel turned about to go away, he laid hold upon the skirt of his mantle, and it rent.

commandment given to Saul, concerning the execution of this sentence, was express and particular; and, probably, intended as a test of his disposition to obey or disobey God. (Notes, Deut. vii. 25. Josh. vi. 17—19. vii. 1. 10—26.) —But, while neither he nor his soldiers were induced to mitigate the severity of the injunction, by sparing any of the women or children; he, perhaps in complaisance to royalty, or to grace his victory, spared the king of Amalek; (Notes, 1 Kings xx. 28—43;) and the people, doubtless by his concurrence, covetously reserved the best of the cattle and substance, destroying only the refuse. Saul's conduct was evidently the effect of a proud rebellious spirit.—Many Amalekites escaped at this time, probably without his fault; and we read of them afterwards as a numerous people. (Notes, xxvii. 8—12. xxx. 1—3.)

V. 11. (Note, Gen. vi. 6, 7.) The Lord's change of conduct towards Saul was similar to that change in our conduct, which springs from repentance; though, by the whole he accomplished his own wise and righteous purposes.—Samuel had been soon reconciled to the people's rejection of him and his family, and had cheerfully anointed Saul: and from his first actions he had framed a favourable opinion of him. When he therefore was rejected, Samuel was exceedingly grieved; and he interceded all night for the reversal of the sentence. (Notes, Jer. xlii. 15—17. xlviii. 19, 20. Luke xix. 41—44. Rom. ix. 1—3.)

V. 12. Set him up a place. Probably this was a trophy, or monument of the victory. The whole implies, that Saul took great state upon himself, and was not a little elated with his success. (Note, 2 Sam. xviii. 17, 18.)

V. 13, 14. Perhaps Saul was, in some degree, conscious of having done wrong; and he therefore addressed Samuel in this respectful language, in order to conciliate his good-will, and to ward off the rebuke which he feared. Some, however, think that he was so insensible of having committed any fault, that he was disposed to boast of his obedience, and expected to be congratulated and commended by the prophet. But Samuel's answer shewed him at once that the very herds and flocks, which were driven along with him, fully convicted him of inexcusable disobedience.

V. 15. It is not probable, that either Saul, or the people, had expressly purposed to sacrifice all the cattle which they had reserved: but, even in that case, they opposed their own will and wisdom to the express command of God; and no doubt they intended to save their own cattle by means of them.—Saul took the merit of his obedience to himself; but he threw the blame of the disobedience on the people. Yet had he exerted his authority, with as much decision, in support of God's command, as he had done before in enforcing his own prohibition; and had he been as determined in the execution of Agag, as he was disposed to be in putting his son to death, it is not likely that any opposition would have been made to his orders. (Note, xiv. 38—44.)

V. 16—18. (Marg. Ref.) The expedition had been so prosperous, that it was more like a safe and easy journey, than a laborious and perilous warfare.

V. 19. Fly, &c. "With great greediness, as a hungry bird or beast upon his prey." (Bp. Patrick.)

V. 21. (Notes, Gen. xli. 12, 13. Ex. xxxii. 21—24. Luke x. 25—29.)

V. 22. Submission to the authority of God must be essential to true religion under every dispensation: but there is a great difference betwixt the submission of a holy, and that of a sinful, creature. External obedience, even to moral precepts, is good, only when it springs from a willing internal submission to the Divine authority. To profess a belief of the gospel is good, only when it arises from submission to the Divine teaching, to the justice of the condemnation under which sinners are concluded, and to the wisdom, suitableness, and grace of the method of salvation there revealed. All instituted worship derives its obligation from the express appointment of God, from the honour which it renders to his name, from the disposition of the worshipper, and from the grace and spiritual blessings which are communicated by it. Sacrifices especially declared the desert of the offender, and typified the sufferings of the Saviour: their value resulted entirely from the appointment of God; and they were not acceptable, except offered in obedience to him, and with a penitent, believing, and pious mind. When therefore they were substituted in the place of true piety, or trusted in as meritorious; when the means were used to compensate for the neglect of the end, and the sign was exalted into the place of the thing signified; they became an abomination, however costly and numerous they were.—Had Saul offered thousands of bullocks and rams, from his own herds and flocks, exactly according to the Divine ritual, in an impenitent and self-confident disposition, God would have abhorred them: how much more then, when the animals to be sacrificed were spared, in direct disobedience to his express command!—Samuel did not therefore mean to exalt one part of external religion by depreciating another, as many seem to suppose; but to shew that a right state of the heart is essential to the acceptable performance of every service. (Marg. Ref. Note, Ps. 1. 7—15.)

V. 23. The heinousness of any sin is not to be judged of, by the magnitude of the object about which it is committed, or the grossness of the outward action; but from the deliberate and determined disobedience of the will whence it arises. When the Lord expressly says, "Thou shalt;" and his rational creature dares to persist in saying, "I will not;" whether the contest be about an apple, or a kingdom, it is stubbornness and rebellion; a contempt of the commandment, and a daring insult to the majesty and authority, of God; and has in it all the essential malignity, which constitutes idolatry or witchcraft, or crimes punishable by death according to the Divine law. Therefore Saul for this rebellion was condemned to lose his kingdom. (Note, xlii. 13—15.)

V. 24, 25. Saul could no longer deny, or entirely excuse, his offence: and therefore he confessed it; yet in such a manner, as detected an unhumiliated heart. He persisted in transferring the blame to the people; "for he feared them, and obeyed their voice;" yet he was not so timid or obedient to them, when his own interest or authority were concerned. (Note, Matt. xiv. 8—11.) He seems to have been more disquieted because Samuel was offended, than because the Lord was angry with him: and he intreated Samuel to pardon his sin, as if he had possessed authority to reverse the sentence which God had denounced. (Note, Ex. x. 16, 17.)

V. 26—28. (Marg. Ref. Note, xxviii. 12—19.) It does not appear that Saul had any real attachment to Samuel; but he doubtless respected his character;

28 And Samuel said unto him, "The LORD hath rent the kingdom of Israel from thee this day, and hath given it to a neighbour of thine, this is better than thou."

29 And also "the Strength of Israel will not lie, nor repent: for he is not a man, that he should repent."

30 Then he said, I have sinned; yet honour me now, I pray thee, before the elders of my people, and before Israel, and turn again with me, that I may worship the LORD thy God.

31 So Samuel turned again after Saul, and Saul worshipped the LORD.

32 ¶ Then said Samuel, Bring ye hither to me Agag, the king of the Amalekites: and Agag came unto him delicately. And Agag said, Surely the bitterness of death is past.

33 And Samuel said, 'As thy sword hath made and, aware of his influence with the people, he perhaps feared, lest by departing in displeasure, and anointing another king, he should stir up the people to revolt, and thus immediately execute the sentence against him. He therefore earnestly opposed his departure; and, by rending Samuel's mantle, afforded a significant token of the kingdom being rent from him, and given to a more worthy person. (Notes, 1 Kings, xi. 9—13. 29—31.)

V. 29. "The strength" or The Victory, of Israel. Saul took the honour of the victory, and of Israel's protection, to himself, and raised a trophy of it: but Samuel seems covertly to have rebuked his vanity, and reminded him that the eternal God was indeed "Israel's Strength and Victory."—"The LORD repented of having set up Saul to be king," (11. 35:) for not having confirmed his promise of the kingdom to him by an oath; an opening was left for the change of measures intended by this expression. But Saul had now provoked him solemnly to pass sentence against him, and to declare that it was irreversible. In that case, he is never once said to repent; nay, it is intimated to be impossible he should. (Notes, Num. xiv. 28, 29. Ps. cx. 4. Heb. vi. 13—20. vii. 20—22.)

V. 30, 31. When Saul ought to have publicly confessed his sin, and taken shame to himself: he was very solicitous, that Samuel should honour him before the elders and people, probably for fear of an insurrection. (Note, Ps. li. Title.) Perhaps he also thought that God would accept his worship, if Samuel staid; but not otherwise. — Samuel, however, perhaps by divine direction, changed his mind and staid, that he might not occasion any disturbance among the people, and that he might execute the justice of God upon Agag. Thus he witnessed Saul's worship, but it does not appear that he took any part in it.

V. 32, 33. Agag affected the stateliness and splendour of a monarch, as if he would overawe the aged prophet: and he spake, either as one who deemed himself in no danger of death, seeing he had escaped the sword of a conquering king, and could have nothing to fear from Samuel: or, as having got over the fear of death, and as determined to meet it with intrepidity. He was indeed the chief person who ought to have been slain, both as the head of the devoted nation, and for his own cruelties; and therefore "Samuel hewed him to pieces before the LORD," as a sacrifice to his justice. Thus the prophet, who was of a lenient spirit, and prayed all night for Saul, did not hesitate to execute that sentence of God upon this condemned criminal, which Saul, who afterwards proved himself exceedingly cruel, had not done.

V. 34, 35. From this time, Samuel withdrew entirely from Saul, as one rejected by God; and though Saul once came to him, he never went to Saul any more, though he continued to mourn over him.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—21. They who have not learned to obey God, are not well qualified to rule his people.—The righteous vengeance of the Lord may be long delayed, but it will certainly be executed, according to his most tremendous threatenings, upon all impenitent sinners; yet with the most marked severity upon the ringleaders in persecution, and such as endeavour to hinder those who are setting out in the ways of piety.—When he calls us to our work, and his time is come, he will provide us helpers, and give us success; but he will at the same time make trial of our spirits. We must not avenge ourselves without express command; but we may at any time requite the kindness of our benefactors: and they, who do good to the Lord's people for his sake, treasure up blessings for their posterity.—It is dangerous to live among wicked people, and if we would not perish with them, we must keep separate from them.—The pride of man's heart can admit the blasphemous idea of being in some cases more merciful than God, and of censuring the threatened punishment of sinners as too severe! covetousness deems the "vile and refuse" good enough to be spent wholly in religion; (Note, Mal. i. 12—14;) and hypocrisy is detected by partiality in obedience, and paying more honour to wicked great men, than to the command of God.—Many go far in the external appearance of religion, who turn back from following the Lord, and are given up to be hardened, and to perish. Over such persons faithful ministers are often constrained to grieve. They must and will, however, deliver the message of God to them, though their hearts be pained by so doing: and if sinners knew their secret sorrow and prayers for them, and considered that they speak no more than God hath required them to say, they could hardly so much resent their most faithful reproofs.—When men are solicitous to perpetuate the memory of their religious services, they shew that they only sought human applause, and "verily they have their reward." (Notes, Matt. vi. 1—4. xxiii. 5—7:) and when they boast

CHAP. XVI.

God sends Samuel to Bethlehem, to anoint a king of Jesse's sons, and directs him to conceal his business by a sacrifice, 1—5. Seven of Jesse's sons pass by, and are not approved, 6—11. David is called from the flock, and anointed, 12, 13. An evil spirit troubles Saul; who, counselled by his servants, sends for David, and is relieved by his music, 14—23.

AND the LORD said unto Samuel, "How long wilt thou mourn for Saul, seeing I have rejected him from reigning over Israel? Fill thine horn with oil, and go, I will send thee to Jesse the Beth-lehemite: for I have provided me a king among his sons."

of their obedience, and by fair speeches would extort commendation from the servants of God, we may be sure their conduct will not endure a scrutiny.—Many observable circumstances betray the hypocrisy of some confident professors of godliness. If you are true disciples of Christ, what mean these evil tempers, this covetousness, this luxury and pride of life, this conformity to the world, this contempt and neglect of the poor? Was this the mind and life of Christ? Is this the scriptural character of a Christian? Yet, by self-examination and circumspection, men should render it unnecessary for ministers to press home upon their consciences such convincing questions. But the unhumiliated heart will never be at a loss to excuse or palliate the most evident criminality; and it will always be necessary for preachers to drive sinners from their subterfuges, to shew them the malignity and aggravation of their offences, to silence their objections and excuses, and to urge conviction upon their hearts: though the convincing Spirit of God alone can render the means effectual.

V. 22—35. In exercising the sacred ministry, nothing is of more importance, than an accurate knowledge of the relative and comparative value of the truths, precepts, and ordinances of religion; about which hypocrites greatly mistake, and thus impose upon themselves. An obedient heart is essential to all religion: and, in a sinner, implies a ready obedience to the command given to all men to repent, an obedient reliance on the Saviour's merits; an obedient attendance on all instituted ordinances as means of grace; and a cheerful obedience to the commands of Christ, from love to his name, and a desire to adorn his gospel. The expression of this temper in the most minute concerns, and with much infirmity and mistakes, is accepted by a merciful God: but a proud, stubborn, rebellious will renders the most splendid services, and the most specious profession, abominable in his sight, and ranks them with the most atrocious crimes. The impenitent sinner may be detected even in his confessions and concomitant behaviour: he has always some reserve; he throws the blame off from himself; he shews an anxiety about the esteem of man, and a fear of temporal loss, shame, and suffering, more than about the future wrath of an offended God; and he attempts to quiet his conscience with external forms and a partial reformation. In vain do such men endeavour to prevail with the faithful ministers of Christ to countenance them; the more they attempt it, the more awful warnings will they receive of approaching ruin: and when the servants of God despair of doing them good, they will withdraw, and leave them to themselves, whatever be their rank in life, that they may interpret their silence and absence into a constant reproof. The fear of men is no excuse for disobeying God; and yet it often is a mere pretence; for many will plead it, for neglecting self-denying duties, who dread no man's displeasure in gratifying their own passions! When the sentence of final rejection is irreversibly denounced, repentance will be unavailing; and though our God be now ready to forgive, he will neither repent nor change his purposes of vengeance hereafter; for the "Strength of Israel" will be eternally engaged to punish his stoutest, proudest foes. If they who were regarded when little in their own eyes, are elated by prosperity and forget the Lord, he will condemn them: and when one instrument is rejected, another more suitable shall be sought out. The mighty of the earth are so accustomed to flattery and distinction, that they can scarcely suppose any will dare to withhold it from them; but "with God there is no respect of persons:" and, while he requires his servants to honour those who are in authority, yet he teaches them to be of his judgment concerning comparative excellency. Neither dignity, nor delicacy, nor vain confidence, gives sinners any security: the bitterness of death may meet them when and where they least expect it; but the bitterness of future misery is the most to be feared. Our warfare indeed is of a different nature from Saul's: but if we spare one domineering lust, or profitable iniquity, we shall forfeit the promised kingdom with deep disgrace; as our sincerity must be approved by devoting every sin to utter destruction, by the power of God's grace, and for the glory of his name. For this, in all ages and nations, is the line of distinction betwixt Samuel and Saul, betwixt the Christian and the hypocrite; that the one levels his whole force against Agag, against that lust which, by constitution and custom, has the greatest ascendancy, that he may hew it in pieces before the Lord; while the other is anxious to preserve his master-sin, however willing he may appear to mortify, or refrain from, those sins to which he has been less addicted.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVI. V. 1, 2. The events recorded in this chapter happened, as it is probable, some time after those before related; yet Samuel still continued to mourn for Saul: but he was at length ordered to go and anoint one to succeed

2 And Samuel said, "How can I go? if Saul hear it, he will kill me. And the LORD said, Take an heifer *with thee, and say, 'I am come to sacrifice to the LORD';

3 And *call Jesse to the sacrifice, *and I will shew thee what thou shalt do: and thou shalt *anoint unto me him whom I name unto thee.

4 And Samuel did that which the LORD spake, and came to Beth-lehem: and the elders of the town *trembled at his *coming, and said, *Comest thou peaceably?

5 And he said, Peaceably: I am come to sacrifice unto the LORD; *sanctify yourselves, and come with me to the sacrifice. And he sanctified Jesse and his sons, and called them to the sacrifice.

6 ¶ And it came to pass when they were come that he looked on *Eliab, and said, "Surely the LORD's anointed is before him.

7 But the LORD said unto Samuel, *Look not on his countenance, or on the height of his stature; because I have refused him: for the LORD *seeth not as man seeth; for man *looketh on the *outward appearance, but the LORD looketh *on the heart.

8 Then Jesse called *Abinadab, and made him pass before Samuel. And he said, Neither hath the LORD chosen this.

9 Then Jesse made *Shammah to pass by: and he said, Neither hath the LORD chosen this.

10 Again, Jesse made *seven of his sons to pass before Samuel. And Samuel said unto Jesse, The LORD hath not chosen these.

11 ¶ And Samuel said unto Jesse, Are here all thy children? And he said, *There remaineth yet the youngest, and, behold, he keepeth the sheep. And Samuel said unto Jesse, Send and fetch him: for we will not sit *down till he come hither.

goodly to look to. And the LORD said, Arise, *anoint him: for this is he.

13 Then Samuel took the horn of oil, and *anointed him in the midst of his brethren: and *the Spirit of the LORD came upon David from that day forward. So Samuel rose up, and went to Ramah.

14 ¶ But *the Spirit of the LORD departed from Saul, and *an evil spirit from the LORD *troubled him.

15 And Saul's servants said unto him, Behold, now, an evil spirit from God troubleth thee.

16 Let our lord now command thy servants, which are *before thee, to seek out a man who is a cunning player on an harp: and it shall come to pass, when the evil spirit from God is upon thee, that he shall *play with his hand, and thou shalt be well.

17 And Saul said unto his servants, Provide me now a man that can play well, and bring him to me.

18 Then answered one of the servants, and said, Behold, I have seen a son of Jesse the Beth-lehemite, that is cunning in playing, and *a mighty valiant man, and a man of war, and prudent in *matters, and a comely person, and *the LORD is with him.

19 Wherefore Saul sent messengers unto Jesse, and said, Send me David thy son, which is *with the sheep.

20 And Jesse took *an ass laden with bread, and a bottle of wine, and a kid, and sent them by David his son unto Saul.

21 And David came to Saul, and *stood before him: and he *loved him greatly: and he became his armour-bearer.

22 And Saul sent to Jesse, saying, Let David, I pray thee, stand before me, for he hath found favour in my sight.

23 And it came to pass, when *the evil spirit from God was upon Saul, that David took an harp, and played with his hand: so *Saul was refreshed, and was well, and the evil spirit departed from him.

him. It may be supposed, that in the mean while Saul had become very suspicious and tyrannical, and enraged against Samuel. The question therefore, which he proposed, might not result from unbelief, but from a desire of instruction for the prudent management of the affair. Accordingly, he was directed to go to Bethlehem to sacrifice, as he probably did from to time in many different places: (Notes, vii. 9-17. ix. 12-14:) and the answer, which he was instructed to return, was the truth; nor was he bound to divulge all his intentions. (Notes, Jer. xxxviii. 24-28. Luke i. 34-38.)

V. 4. It is probable, that these elders were conscious of iniquity committed among them, and feared lest Samuel was sent to denounce the wrath of God upon them. (Note, Matt. viii. 33, 34.) Some, however, think they feared the anger of Saul, in case they entertained Samuel. (Notes, xxi. 1, 2. xxii. 13-19.)

V. 5. He sanctified, &c. Samuel instructed Jesse and his sons in the nature of the sacred ordinance, and, by his counsels and prayers, assisted them in preparing to attend on it acceptably and profitably. (Notes, Ex. xix. 10-15. Job i. 5.)

V. 6, 7. Samuel and Jesse alone seem to have been at first acquainted with the design, for which the sons of Jesse, one after another, passed before them. It is evident, that the Lord revealed himself to Samuel, on this and other occasions, by direct and immediate suggestion. Samuel did not fully understand, that the Lord in anger gave Israel their first king, after "their own heart;" but that he now intended in mercy to give them one after "his own heart," being chiefly remarkable for his strong faith and fervent piety. It is, however, wonderful, that the aged prophet should regard the height of Eliab's stature: when Saul who was "taller than all the people from his shoulders and upwards," had proved so worthless a king! (Notes, ix. 1, 2. xvii. 28.)

V. 10, 11. Seven in all. (Note, 1 Chr. ii. 15.)—David being young, (not more than eighteen or twenty years of age,) and being of a contemplative disposition, was perhaps thought by Jesse to be less capable, than his other sons, of important business, and so was not kept at home on this occasion. (Marg. Ref.)—His name signifies Beloved, and he was an eminent type of the beloved Son of God. (Notes, Jer. xxx. 9. Ez. xxxiv. 23-31. xxxvii. 24, 25. Hos. iii. 4, 5.)—These transactions seem to have occurred, between the offering of the sacrifice, and the feast on it which followed.

V. 13. The original words seem to denote, that David was anointed in the presence of his brethren, though the transaction was kept secret from others. If this were the case, it is worthy of notice, that none of them rivalled or opposed him; though it appears that they were not free from envy and prejudice. Some expositors, however, think, that the words only imply, that David was selected from among his brethren; but that he was anointed privately:—

This anointing did not invest him with kingly authority, but merely marked him out as Saul's successor: and thus David himself understood it. From this time he was evidently endowed with the Spirit of the Lord, qualifying him for great things: yet he was satisfied in his humble and laborious occupation, waiting the Lord's time for being called to action. (Notes, ix. 6-13. xi. 6-15.)

V. 14. When the Spirit of God came on David, it became evident that he had departed from Saul, and that he was deprived of his capacity for public business, performing nothing prudently or successfully; nay, that an evil spirit was judicially permitted to impel him to the most furious sallies of rage or jealousy; to oppress his spirits with a deep melancholy; to excite distressing terrors, alarms, and suspicions; and to render him at times distracted. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 15-23. Saul's courtiers evidently perceived the change which had taken place, and ascribed it to the right cause; though their language seems less accurate than that of the historian; the original words being, "an evil spirit of God," meaning one whom God permitted to trouble Saul. The device proposed by them might be very proper for soothing the melancholy of Saul, and calming his passions, but the cause of his malady lay much deeper; and it would have been better counsel, if they had persuaded him to send for Samuel to converse with him, and pray for him. The hand of the Lord was, however, manifest in thus bringing David to court. After his anointing, he had in various ways signalized himself, so that he was much noticed. (Note, xvii. 34-36;) and especially his skill in playing on the harp was remarked by some person who attended on Saul. Thus he was introduced to him, and his solemn sacred music was far more suitable to the case than more amusing strains would have been. He came to Saul with a very high character, which he did not disgrace; he was useful to him, and for a time beloved by him; and yet, when Saul no longer wanted him, he returned back to his flocks as contented as ever, and was soon forgotten at court. (Notes, xvii. 15. 55-58.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Our most disinterested sorrow may be so excessive, as to imply rebellion against the righteous will of God; and he will then rebuke us, as well as encourage us under our distresses. We ought not inconsolably to mourn for such as the Lord hath rejected, but should rather rejoice in those whom he is calling forth to usefulness; and no partial affection should interfere with present duty. The most eminent believers are not entirely superior to the fear of man, when dangerous services are assigned them. But the Lord will inwardly strengthen and outwardly protect them; and, without immediate revelation, he can, by his word and Spirit, show them, step by step, what they

CHAP. XVII.

The armies of the Israelites and Philistines are drawn out to battle, 1-3. Goliath challenges, defies, and daunts the Israelites, 4-11. David is sent to the army to visit his brethren, 12-19. He hears the challenge, and expresses indignation at it, 20-27. Eliab rebukes him, and he answers mildly, 28, 29. He is brought before Saul, accepts the challenge, and states the grounds of his confidence, 30-37. He refuses Saul's armour, and takes only his staff, a sling, and stones, 38-40. Goliath disdains and curses him, 41-44. David answers, having assured confidence in God, 45-47. He kills Goliath and cuts off his head, 48-51. The Philistines are routed, 52, 53. David returns with Goliath's head in his hand, and Saul makes enquiries concerning him, 54-58.

NOW the Philistines ^agathered together their armies to battle, and were gathered together at ^bShochoh, which belongeth to Judah, and pitched between Shochoh and ^cAzekah, in ^dEphes-dammim.

2 And Saul and the men of Israel were gathered together, and pitched by ^ethe valley of Elah, and ^fset the battle in array against the Philistines.

3 And the Philistines stood on a mountain on the one side, and Israel stood on a mountain on the other side: and there was a valley between them.

4 ¶ And there went out a champion out of the camp of the Philistines, named ^gGoliath ^hof Gath, ⁱwhose height was six cubits and a span.

5 And he had an helmet of brass upon his head, and he was ^jarmed with a coat of mail: and the weight of the coat was five thousand shekels of brass.

6 And he had greaves of brass upon his legs, and a ^ktarget of brass between his shoulders.

7 And ^lthe staff of his spear was like a weaver's beam, and his spear's head weighed six hundred shekels of iron: and one bearing a shield went before him.

8 And he stood and cried unto the armies of Israel, and said unto them, Why are ye come out to set your battle in array? Am not I a Philistine, and ye ^mservants to Saul? choose you a man for you, and let him come down to me.

ought to do. The guilty conscience trembles at a message from heaven, yet the ministers of Christ come peaceably, proposing salvation through the sacrifice of a Redeemer, and speaking terror to none, except to those who neglect so great salvation. There is a preparation of heart required for receiving this atonement, as well as for attending on divine ordinances; the instruction, converse, and prayers of faithful ministers, are very useful in both cases to those who desire to profit by them; and parents ought not needlessly to permit their children to miss such favourable opportunities.—It is difficult wholly to divest ourselves of partiality for those who are recommended by external accomplishments, and we often frame an erroneous judgment of characters; but the Lord values nothing comparatively, but that holy faith, fear, and love, which are implanted in the heart beyond the reach of human penetration. Nor does he favour our children according to our fond partialities, but often most honours and blesses those who have been the least regarded.—His method of educating men for important stations of usefulness, differs much from those which human wisdom has devised. For, humble industry and obedient attention to obscure duties, contemplation, retired devotion, and a patient self-denying assiduity, constitute the best preparation for serving the cause of God, and his church.—When sinners, by resisting the Holy Spirit, have provoked him finally to depart, they are exposed to every incursion of Satan, and are likely to become tormentors of themselves, and of others; nay, their friends may perceive that they are given up by God in his righteous displeasure, without taking warning by their awful case. Indeed, we none of us have the least security, either for our bodies or souls, against the malignity of evil spirits, except in the protection of that God, whom, alas! we are continually provoking.—When conscious guilt and fears of Divine vengeance disorder the minds of men, they who perceive their distress, but understand neither the cause nor the cure, are apt to propose very fatal methods of relief; and music, diversion, company, or business, have, for a season, been frequently employed, as a successful quietus for a wounded conscience. Yet nothing can effect a real cure, except the blood of Christ, applied in faith, and the sanctifying Spirit sealing the pardon by his holy comforts; all other expedients to dispel religious melancholy are sure methods of increasing distress, either in this world, or in the next.—Every endowment which may be usefully exercised in subserviency to godliness, is to be ascribed to the energy of the Divine Spirit; opportunities will be afforded for its being displayed; and if the Lord be graciously with us, they will be suitably improved; while good behaviour in inferior stations is the best introduction to higher advancement.—Thus Jesus was obedient unto death, ere he was exalted to his glorious throne: and thus he trains up his people by obedience, in the midst of temptation and trouble, for their future inheritance in the regions of purity and felicity.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVII. V. 1. Saul had repeatedly allowed the Philistines time to recover strength and courage; and, perhaps, the report of the disordered state of his mind emboldened them to this invasion; yet the Lord so ordered it that he was in some measure recovered before the war began. It is uncertain how 9 If he be able to fight with me, and to kill me, then will we be your servants: but if I prevail against him, and kill him, then shall ye be our servants, and serve us.

10 And the Philistine said, 'I defy the armies of Israel this day; ⁿgive me a man, that we may fight together.

11 When Saul and all Israel heard those words of the Philistine, they were ^odismayed, and greatly afraid.

12 ¶ Now ^pDavid was the son of that ^qEphrathite of Beth-lehem-judah, whose name was Jesse; and he had ^reight sons: and the man went among men for an old man in the days of Saul.

13 And the three eldest sons of Jesse went and followed Saul to the battle: and ^sthe names of his three sons that went to the battle were Eliab the first-born, and next unto him Abinadab, and the third ^tShammah.

14 And David was ^uthe youngest: and the three eldest followed Saul.

15 But David went, and ^vreturned from Saul, to feed his father's sheep at Beth-lehem.

16 And the Philistine drew near morning and evening, and presented himself ^wforty days.

17 And Jesse said unto David his son, ^x'Take now for thy brethren an ephah of this ^yparched corn, and these ten loaves, and run to the camp to thy brethren:

18 And ^z'carry these ten [†]cheeses unto the captain of [†]their thousand, and [†]look how thy brethren fare, and take their pledge.

19 Now Saul, and they, and all the men of Israel, were in the valley of Elah, fighting with the Philistines.

long this was after the transactions here recorded, but, probably, three or four years had elapsed. To suppose that this invasion preceded David's first appearance at court, gives a needless and inadmissible disturbance to the narrative. (Notes. 15. 55—58.)

V. 4—7. (Marg. Ref.) A champion, a dueller, one who came between the two armies, as wishing to distinguish himself in single combat. Goliath was of the race of Anak; on the most moderate computation he was ten feet high, and the weight of his armour shews that his bulk and strength were proportionable! Probably, men in general were about the same size as at present; for such giants then caused as much surprise as they would at present. (Num. xiii. 33.)

V. 8—10. This challenge of Goliath increased the consternation of the Israelites, as if they must needs become slaves to the Philistines, unless some one of them could overcome the champion; but no nation ever did, or ever will, suffer its liberties and interests to be disposed of in such a manner. It is probable that Goliath was one of the lords of the Philistines, and that he deemed it a kind of condescension in him to fight with one of Saul's servants.

V. 11. When the Spirit of the Lord departed from Saul, he lost much of his former courage; otherwise, depending on the God of Israel, he might have assaulted the army of the Philistines, and at once have silenced the proud boastings of Goliath. (Notes. xi. 6—15. xvi. 14.) His timidity disheartened the army likewise; for faith and piety were evidently at a low ebb among them. Nor had Jonathan the same inward intimation to engage in this service, that he formerly had to undertake one at least equally perilous, as the Lord had reserved it for David. (Notes. xiv. 1—15.)

V. 12, 13. Jesse being far advanced in years, was himself exempted from war; but he sent three of his sons with Saul.—Eight sons, (xvi. 10. Note, 1 Chr. ii. 15.)

V. 15. Saul's disorder having been relieved, and his mind engaged in public business, David's music was not wanted; and he "returned from Saul" to his former laborious and obscure occupation. Probably he had been appointed Saul's armour-bearer, merely as an honorary distinction, and had not been employed in actual service. (Note, xvi. 15—23.) Josephus says, that Saul sent David home in the beginning of this war, being contented with the three sons of Jesse who followed him; but it seems more probable that he had returned home some time before the war began.

V. 16. Had the Philistines thought themselves able to force the camp of Israel, they would not have spent so much time in this manner. (Note, Matt. iv. 1, 2.)

V. 17. As Jesse had several other sons at home, it must be ascribed to a special interposition of Providence that David was sent on this occasion. (Note, xvi. 11.)

V. 18. Pledge. This, it is probable, was some concerted token of welfare, according to the custom of those times, while epistolary correspondence was infrequent.

V. 19. Fighting. There might, perhaps, be frequent skirmishes between the two armies, though they did not come to a general engagement.

20 ¶ And David rose up early in the morning, and left the sheep with a keeper, and took, and went, as Jesse had commanded him: and he came to the trench as the host was going forth to the fight, and shouted for the battle.

21 For Israel and the Philistines had put the battle in array, army against army.

22 And David left his carriage in the hand of the keeper of the carriage, and ran into the army, and came and saluted his brethren.

23 And as he talked with them, behold, there came up the champion, (the Philistine of Gath, Goliath by name,) out of the armies of the Philistines, and spake according to the same words: and David heard them.

24 And all the men of Israel, when they saw the man, fled from him, and were sore afraid.

25 And the men of Israel said, Have ye seen this man that is come up? surely to defy Israel is he come up: and it shall be, that the man who killeth him, the king will enrich him with great riches, and will give him his daughter, and make his father's house free in Israel.

26 And David spake to the men that stood by him, saying, What shall be done to the man that killeth this Philistine, and taketh away the reproach from Israel? for who is this uncircumcised Philistine, that he should defy the armies of the living God?

27 And the people answered him after this manner, saying, So shall it be done to the man that killeth him.

28 ¶ And Eliab his eldest brother heard when he spake unto the men; and Eliab's anger was kindled against David, and he said, Why camest thou down hither? and with whom hast thou left those few sheep in the wilderness? I know thy pride, and the naughtiness of thine heart; for thou art come down that thou mightest see the battle.

29 And David said, What have I now done? Is there not a cause?

30 ¶ And he turned from him toward another, and spake after the same manner: and the people answered him again after the former manner.

31 And when the words were heard which David spake, they rehearsed them before Saul; and he sent for him.

32 ¶ And David said to Saul, Let no man's heart fail because of him: thy servant will go and fight with this Philistine.

33 And Saul said to David, Thou art not able to go against this Philistine, to fight with him: for thou art but a youth, and he a man of war from his youth.

34 And David said unto Saul, Thy servant kept his father's sheep, and there came a lion and a bear, and took a lamb out of the flock;

35 And I went out after him, and smote him, and delivered it out of his mouth: and when he arose against me, I caught him by his beard, and smote him, and slew him.

36 Thy servant slew both the lion and the bear: and this uncircumcised Philistine shall be as one of them, seeing he hath defied the armies of the living God.

37 David said moreover, The LORD that delivered me out of the paw of the lion, and out of the paw of the bear, he will deliver me out of the hand of this Philistine. And Saul said unto David, Go, and the LORD be with thee.

38 ¶ And Saul armed David with his armour, and he put an helmet of brass upon his head; also he armed him with a coat of mail.

39 And David girded his sword upon his armour, and he assayed to go; for he had not proved it. And David said unto Saul, I cannot go with these; for I have not proved them. And David put them off him.

40 And he took his staff in his hand, and chose him five smooth stones out of the brook, and put them in a shepherd's bag which he had, even in a scrip, and his sling was in his hand; and he drew near to the Philistine.

41 And the Philistine came on, and drew near unto David; and the man that bare the shield went before him.

42 And when the Philistine looked about and saw David, he disdained him; for he was but a youth, and ruddy, and of a fair countenance.

43 And the Philistine said unto David, Am I a dog, that thou comest to me with staves? And the Philistine cursed David by his gods.

V. 22. His carriage. Or, the provisions which he carried, or had brought, for his brethren, and their captain. (Acts, xxi. 15.)

V. 23, 24. (Note, 4-7.) When the two armies were on the point of engaging, Goliath's renewed challenge strangely disconcerted the Israelites. They could face the whole army of the Philistines, though they knew Goliath was among them, and yet were dismayed by the sight of him alone! (Notes, Num. xiii. 30, 31. xiv. 2-9.)

V. 25, 26. It does not appear that Saul consulted the Lord, or offered sacrifice, or even made applications, on this occasion; but he offered great rewards to him who should kill Goliath. (Note, Ezra, vii. 24-26.) To this conduct, David's speech, glowing with confidence in God, zeal for his glory, and indignant resentment of Israel's disgrace, formed a noble contrast. However terrible the gigantic Goliath might appear, he was "an uncircumcised Philistine;" and those whom he defied, were not merely "the servants of Saul," (8,) but "the armies of the living God." (Note, Num. xxiii. 7, 8.) And in this view, who, or what was Goliath, that any Israelite should fear him? The very enquiry implied the most pointed reproof of the unbelief and cowardice of Saul, and of the whole army.

V. 28. It can hardly be supposed that Eliab was entirely ignorant of David's having been anointed by Samuel; and he must have understood this transaction as at least an indication of his future superiority. He was, therefore, doubtless moved, in part, by envy on this occasion: but he might also consider the spirit of his younger neglected brother as a tacit reproach of his own timidity. He therefore, rashly and falsely, accused him of leaving his flock without a keeper, and of coming without being sent, out of curiosity or ambition; (17-20;) and intimated that he was notoriously of a proud, aspiring, wicked disposition. These insinuations tended both to discourage David, and to prejudice those who heard him, so that David might be disregarded. (Notes, Gen. xxxvii. 2-11. John vii. 3-10.)

V. 29. This answer was as admirable for the "meekness of wisdom," as the former question was for the 'courage of faith.' David took no notice of the reproach cast upon his character, nor of the false reason assigned for his coming into the army. But he merely replied by asking, "What have I now done? Is there not a cause?" Should not every Israelite feel a holy indignation to hear an uncircumcised Philistine defy the armies of the living God? And ought not some Israelite to step forward, and venture his life to wipe away this reproach? (Notes, Prov. xv. 1.)

V. 34-37. In defence of his flock, David had been enabled, at different times, to slay a lion, and a bear; and he looked upon this as an earnest of victory over the "uncircumcised Philistine," whom he meant to attack, out of zeal for the glory of God, and the interests of Israel. Goliath could not be more terrible to any Israelitish soldier, than a lion, or a bear, bereaved of its prey, would be to an unarmed shepherd; and David's deliverance from these savage beasts was the effect of the Lord's special favour, who would also deliver him from the Philistine. (Note, 2 Cor. i. 8-11.) Thus, when the Spirit of the Lord was upon Samson, he rent the lion before he destroyed the Philistines. (Note, Judg. xiv. 5-6.) Exploits of this kind, no doubt, obtained David that great character with which he had first been introduced to Saul. (xvi. 18.) Go, &c. (37. Notes, xxiv. 16-22. xxvi. 21-25.)

V. 38-40. David had not been accustomed to such armour as Saul put upon him, and he was not satisfied to go forth in that manner. This was, likewise, from the Lord, who would have it made manifest that his servant fought and conquered by faith, and that the victory was from him who works by the most despised means and instruments! (Notes, Josh. vi. 3-5. Judg. iii. 31. vii. 16-22. xv. 14-17. Zech. iv. 4-7. 1 Cor. i. 20-31. 2 Cor. iv. 7.)

V. 42-44. Perhaps David might at this time be twenty-two, or twenty-three, years of age; (33. Note, xvi. 11:) and his unwarlike appearance in all respects excited contempt and disdain in Goliath's breast; nay, he was affronted to be opposed by a stripling, accoutred in such a manner. But though he 44 And the Philistine said to David, "Come to me, and I will give thy flesh unto the fowls of the air, and to the beasts of the field.

45 Then said David to the Philistine, "Thou comest to me with a sword, and with a spear, and with a shield; but I come to thee in the name of the LORD of hosts, the God of the armies of Israel, whom thou hast defied.

46 This day will the LORD deliver thee into mine hand, and I will smite thee, and take thine head from thee; and I will give the carcasses of the host of the Philistines this day unto the fowls of the air, and to the wild beasts of the earth; that all the earth may know that there is a God in Israel.

47 And all this assembly shall know that the LORD saveth not with sword and spear: for the battle is the LORD's, and he will give you into our hands.

48 And it came to pass, when the Philistine arose, and came and drew nigh to meet David, that David hastened, and ran toward the army to meet the Philistine.

49 And David put his hand in his bag, and took thence a stone, and slang it, and smote the Philistine in his forehead, that the stone sunk into his forehead; and he fell upon his face to the earth.

50 So David prevailed over the Philistine with a sling and with a stone, and smote the Philistine, and slew him; but there was no sword in the hand of David.

cursed David by his gods, he evidently trusted not in them, but in the might of his own arm. The Romans used thus to curse their enemies: "All the gods and goddesses destroy thee!" (Note, Num. xxii. 6.)

V. 45-47. Nothing can exceed the humility, the faith, the piety, and the zeal for the glory of God, and the cause of Israel and of true religion, which glow in this most beautiful speech. David expressed, with peculiar animation, his assured expectation of success; he gloried in his own contemptible appearance and armature, that the victory might the more unquestionably be ascribed to JEHOVAH; and he anticipated the effects of this transaction: he even conceived a hope of its producing a salutary conviction in the minds of the Philistines, that the God of Israel was the only true God; and he predicted that his power and glory would by means of it be made known to all the earth. (Notes, 1 Kings xviii. 36, 37. 2 Kings xix. 19.)

V. 48, 49. The courage of David appears illustrious in the whole narrative. Goliath understood that his challenge was accepted, by David's boldly marching out to meet him; and at this crisis, David with great activity struck the fatal blow, ere Goliath was prepared to meet him. Either Goliath, in fearless presumption and contempt of his opponent, had neglected to fasten on his helmet; or the stone, directed and impelled by the power of the Almighty, penetrated both the helmet and his skull, as a stone sinks into the water. (Note, 1 Kings xxii. 32-35.)

V. 50-53. Perhaps the sword of Goliath was not so large and unwieldy in proportion, as the other parts of his armour: for we find that David afterwards used it, as well as on this occasion. (Note, xxi. 8, 9.)—When the Philistines saw that their champion, or mighty man, (the word is not the same as before,) (4.) was dead; they were so convinced of the power and presence of the God of Israel, that they had no courage to fight, but yielded Israel a complete victory: and the Israelites pursued them even to their own cities, and plundered their camp. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 54. Either David, after a time, carried the head of Goliath to Jerusalem, as a terror to the Jebusites; and put his armour in his own tent, until it was removed to the tabernacle of God, (xxi. 8, 9:) or this is spoken by anticipation; and means, that afterwards Goliath's skull and his armour were preserved at Jerusalem, as a monument of the victory, to the glory of God, in the tent which David there formed for the ark. (Note, 2 Sam. vi. 17.)

V. 55-58. It has been argued, from the circumstance of Saul's not recollecting David, that the history is inconsistent: and to answer this objection, many learned men, by a very unnatural transposition, place this chapter, in order of time, before the preceding. But it should be considered, that David was young when he went to the court of Saul: and a few years, with change of dress, (from that of a courtier, to that of a shepherd,) make a vast alteration in young persons. Abner had no acquaintance with David, that we know of. Saul's mind was disordered, and his affairs in perplexity. Kings, especially such kings as Saul, are served by so many fresh faces, that they often literally forget their old acquaintance. Yet it is evident, that Saul had some confused and imperfect recollection of David; though he could not certainly remember whose son he was. (Note, 1. 15.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-30. When they to whom it officially belongs to defend the cause of God and his church, are destitute of his Spirit, and given up to ambition, covetousness, envy, malice, or lust; no wonder if open enemies are encouraged, and friends dispirited: and as the fear of God declines, the fear of man, in one form or other, will gather strength. But when one instrument is thrown aside, another is prepared, and produced for the work of the Lord: and though Israel be cast down, and his enemies for a season triumph, yet shall he be raised up again, and their success terminate in deeper disgrace and ruin.—Every gift of God to fallen man, instead of inspiring gratitude, naturally increases proud self-admiration and confidence, and a disposition to despise and insult over others. But what are human wisdom, strength, or courage, unless preserved by him who gave them? When they withdraw men from their dependence on God; and when they are employed in rebellion against him; the haughty possessor becomes more expressly the enemy and rival of the Almighty, and is prepared to be a more distinguished monument of his righteous vengeance. (Notes, Job xl. 9-14. Jer. ix. 23, 24. Dan. iv. 34-37. v. 18-24.)—Degenerate professors of religion often receive just rebukes from most decided enemies: and indeed no persecutor or heresiarch, needs fear defying the disciples of man, any more than Goliath feared defying "the servants of Saul," were they only such, as the names which they assume, as well as their conduct on some occasions, seem to imply. For in human accomplishments the opposers of the truth of God have frequently possessed an undisputed superiority: confiding in this, they have defied, and still do defy, the advocates of spiritual truth to engage with them; and they dream of a total and decided victory. But they have "the armies of the living God," and their invincible Captain himself, to contend with; and "who are these uncircumcised Philistines," that a true Israelite should fear them? Any believer in the divine Saviour may predict that their triumphing will be short: and, if fairly called to it, we need not fear to go forth with the despised sling and stone, with plain testimonies of holy Scripture, unadorned by eloquence, and unsupported by human learning, against the most formidable of them; trusting in him who hath all power in heaven and earth.—Those who would serve God, must be endued with patience, meekness, and self-denial; and they must learn to bear neglect, contempt, and ingratitude; to be laborious, faithful, and obedient: to shun observation and ostentation; to walk by faith, and to wait the Lord's time for every promised or expected mercy; not putting themselves forward, till it be undeniably evident that there is a cause.—In times of general formality and lukewarmness, every degree of zeal, which implies a readiness to go further, or venture more, in the cause of God, than others do, will be censured as pride and ambition; and by none more than near relations and negligent superiors: and such censures will seldom be unmingled with unjust insinuations, and attempts to blacken a man's character. But conscious integrity, and confidence in God, united with meekness, wisdom, and perseverance, will carry the believer through, and raise him above, such discouraging opposition: and they who would do good, should not multiply words in defence of their own characters; but avoid whatever may needlessly exasperate, prolong contention, or foment envy; and be satisfied with appealing to the consciences and common sense of impartial persons, that time and circumstances require their exertions.—The hope of being an instrument of good, and of being accepted by the Lord, will animate the faithful servant of God in every undertaking; and the expectation of a reward from man, or the fear of human censure, will be with him a very inferior consideration.

V. 31-58. If we improve our experience of the Lord's faithfulness, love, and power, in former seasons of danger and difficulty, it will inspire confidence in the prospect of future conflicts; and on some occasions it may be resorted to for the satisfaction of others: and to be engaged against the acknowledged enemies of God and his church, in all cases is a proper ground of encourage-

CHAP. XVIII.

Jonathan loves David, and covenants with him, 1-4. David gains favour with the people and the servants of Saul. 5. The praises bestowed on him excite Saul's envy, 6-9. Saul attempts to kill him, 10, 11. David's prudence and success make Saul afraid of him, 12-16. He offers to give him his elder daughter, hoping to ensure him; but gives her to another, 17-19. He promises him Michal, his younger daughter, finding that she loved him; and, persuaded by Saul's servants, David brings two hundred foreskins of the Philistines as the stipulated dowry, and marries her, 20-27. Saul's hatred, and David's reputation increase, 28-30.

AND it came to pass, when he had made an end of speaking unto Saul, that the soul of Jonathan was knit with the soul of David, and Jonathan loved him as his own soul.

2 And Saul took him that day, and would let him go no more home to his father's house.

3 Then Jonathan and David made a covenant, because he loved him as his own soul.

4 And Jonathan stripped himself of the robe that was upon him, and gave it to David, and his garments, even to his sword, and to his bow, and to his girdle.

5 ¶ And David went out whithersoever Saul sent him, and behaved himself wisely: and Saul set him over the men of war; and he was accepted in the sight of all the people, and also in the sight of Saul's servants.

6 And it came to pass, as they came, when David was returned from the slaughter of the Philistine, that the women came out of all the cities of Israel, singing and dancing, to meet king Saul, with tabrets, with joy, and with instruments of music.

7 And the women answered one another as they played, and said, Saul hath slain his thousands, and David his ten thousands.

8 And Saul was very wroth, and the saying displeased him; and he said, They have ascribed unto David ten thousands, and to me they have ascribed but thousands: and what can he have more but the kingdom?

9 And Saul eyed David from that day and forward.

10 ¶ And it came to pass on the morrow, that the evil spirit from God came upon Saul, and he prophesied in the midst of the house; and David played with his hand, as at other times: and there was a javelin in Saul's hand.

11 And Saul cast the javelin; for he said, I will smite David even to the wall with it. And David avoided out of his presence twice.

12 ¶ And Saul was afraid of David, because the Lord was with him, and was departed from Saul.

13 Therefore Saul removed him from him, and made him his captain over a thousand; and he went out and came in before the people.

14 And David behaved himself wisely in all his ways; and the Lord was with him.

15 Wherefore when Saul saw that he behaved himself very wisely, he was afraid of him.

16 But all Israel and Judah loved David, because he went out and came in before them.

17 ¶ And Saul said to David, Behold, my elder daughter Merab, her will I give thee to wife; only be thou valiant for me, and fight the Lord's battles: for Saul said, Let not mine hand be upon him, but let the hand of the Philistines be upon him.

18 And David said unto Saul, Who am I? and what is my life, or my father's family in Israel, that I should be son-in-law to the king?

19 But it came to pass, at the time when Merab, Saul's daughter, should have been given to David, that she was given unto Adriel the Meholathite to wife.

ment.—In the service of our common Lord we are not all qualified to handle the same weapons, or to fill up the same stations: none should therefore be set up in all things as models, nor ought any of us indiscriminately to imitate the most approved characters.—Rules and methods, which are useful and natural to one man, may prove encumbrances to another: and we do best, when we cultivate our own peculiar talent, taking hints from every body, and not attempting exact conformity to any. But faith and prayer, and truth and righteousness, “the whole armour of God,” and “the mind which was in Christ,” are equally needful for all his servants.—The curses of wicked men are no more to be feared, than their power; as they will at length rebound upon themselves, and their proud self-confidence will surely be confounded. But they, who trust in the Lord, and simply seek his glory, shall never be ashamed: in their hands the feeblest means shall be successful, and before them the most formidable opposition shall come to nothing. The event of every conflict of the church of God against her enemies, will undeniably evince, “that the Lord saveth not with sword and spear; for the battle is the Lord's, and he will give it into our hands:” and this shall tend to make known his glory throughout the earth.—Human favour is of small value, for men soon forget those who have been most useful to them; and they alone are happy, who enjoy the favour of him, who never forgets or forsakes the meanest of his true people.—Finally, in David's victory over the champion of the Philistines, we may see a faint shadow of the Redeemer's victory over Satan, who for ages had defied the armies of the living God, and, from the fall of Adam to the coming of Christ, found no one able in his own strength to stand against him: but Jesus overcame him on his own ground, and foiled him with his own weapons, and still goes on by his despised gospel to pursue the victory; while all the hosts of the true Israel join in his conquests, and share the benefits; and they shall ere long meet in heaven, to celebrate his triumphs with everlasting songs of praise.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVIII. V. 1. The modesty, piety, and faith of David were so congenial to the character of Jonathan, that they attracted his cordial esteem and affection; so that the most endeared friendship subsisted between them from that time, without the least interruption, notwithstanding Saul's envy and malice; and though Jonathan knew that David was anointed to be king, and that he himself was excluded. This disinterested friendship was the effect of that grace of God, which produces in all true believers “one heart and soul,” and causes them to delight in each other's converse and comfort: (Notes, 1 Pet. i. 22—25. 1 John iii. 13—15;) yet similarity of disposition, and the coincidence of the extraordinary services, which in the courage of faith they had performed, served to render their reciprocal affection peculiarly fervent and intimate. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 2. Saul did not at first know David, but he soon recollected him. It is manifest from this that he had before returned from Saul to his pastoral employments, but, from this time, he went back no more to them. (Note, xvii. 55—58.)

V. 3, 4. Jonathan, by stripping off his own clothes and armour, and giving them to David, intended to ratify the covenant between them, as well as to testify his affection, and equip him according to his character and station; so that David then put off the shepherd, and put on the courtier and soldier. Thus the Son of God laid aside, for a season, his robes of divine majesty, to appear in the mean attire of a servant; that he might clothe in his robes of righteousness, salvation, and glory, all who accede to his covenant of peace and love. (Notes, John xiii. 1—5. Phil. ii. 5—8.)

V. 5. Abner continued commander in chief; but David had some high military station; and, perhaps, he was made captain of Saul's guards.

V. 6—9. After the death of Goliath, and the consequent rout of the Philistines, Saul, and David with him, went to several of the cities of Israel. “I suppose, Saul and the whole court thought fit to honour David, by accompanying him to Jerusalem when he carried Goliath's head thither.” (Bp. Patrick.) In all places, however, to which they came, the women, according to the custom of the times, went forth to meet them with instruments of music, and singing an ode composed on the occasion. (Notes, Ex. xv. 1. 20, 21. Judg. v. 1. xl. 34—40. Ps. lxxviii. 24, 25.) In this no injustice was done, or affront offered, to Saul; yet the language employed might have given umbrage to a mind less propense to envy and suspicion than that of Saul. Accordingly, he was greatly displeased; and, perceiving how David increased in popularity, he concluded that God was about “to rend the kingdom from him, and to give it to a neighbour of his, who was better than he.” (xv. 28.) Perhaps he was also informed that Samuel had anointed David, and favoured his interest; so that he began to look upon him with a jealous and malignant eye.

V. 10, 11. When Saul indulged malevolence, he “gave place to the devil,” and provoked God to permit the evil spirit again to trouble him. (Note, xvi. 14. Ps. li. 11.) Being thus under a supernatural influence, he behaved in some respects as the prophets did, when the spirit of inspiration came upon them, though from a contrary cause. But it is not certain whether he assumed this appearance to cloak his attempting to murder David, or whether Satan wrought upon him till he seemed to prophesy. He was, however, influenced by deliberate malice when he threw the javelin at David. David, though conscious of his innocence, and satisfied that he was doing his duty under God's protection, would not leave his place,) evidently suspected some mischief from the javelin in Saul's hand, and thus was enabled to avoid the blow, both at this time, and on another occasion.

V. 12—16. Saul was sensible that the Lord was departed from him, and that his former capacity for public business was diminished; at the same time he perceived that the Lord had given David peculiar wisdom, and was with him to prosper all his undertakings; and this increased the disquietude of his malevolent mind, and his dread of David as a prevailing rival. He therefore removed him from his presence, changing the command which he before had, for that of a thousand men who made war at a distance. But this, also, served to ingratiate him with the people, by affording him the opportunity of leading them forth to victory over their enemies. (Notes, Matt. viii. 28, 29.)

20 ¶ And Michal, Saul's daughter loved David: and they told Saul, and the thing pleased him.

21 And Saul said, I will give him her, that she may be ^aa snare to him, and that ^bthe hand of the Philistines may be against him. Wherefore Saul said to David, Thou shalt ^cthis day be my son-in-law in the one of the twain.

22 ¶ And Saul ^dcommanded his ^eservant, saying, Commune with David secretly, and say, Behold the king hath delight in thee, and all his servants love thee: now therefore be the king's son-in-law.

23 And Saul's servants spake those words in the ears of David. And David said, Seemeth it to you ^fa light thing to be a king's son-in-law, seeing that I ^gam ^ha poor man, and lightly esteemed?

24 And the servants of Saul told him, saying, ⁱOn this manner spake David.

25 And Saul said, Thus shall ye say to David, The king desireth not any ^jdowry, but an hundred ^kforeskins of the Philistines, ^lto be avenged of the king's enemies. But Saul ^mthought to make David fall by the hand of the Philistines.

26 And when his servants told David these words, it pleased David well to be the king's son-in-law: and ⁿthe days were not ^oexpired.

27 Wherefore David arose, and went, he and ^phis men, and ^qslew of the Philistines two hundred men; and David brought their foreskins, and they gave them in full tale to the king, that he might be the king's son-in-law. And Saul gave him Michal his daughter to wife.

28 ¶ And Saul ^rsaw and knew that the LORD ^swas with David, and ^tthat Michal, Saul's daughter, loved him.

29 And Saul was ^uyet the more afraid of David; and ^vSaul became David's enemy continually.

CHAP. XIX.

Saul orders David to be slain, 1. Jonathan informs David, and, pleading for him with Saul, effects a reconciliation, 2—7. David's success in war renders Saul again jealous; he seeks to kill David, who escapes by flight, 8—10. Saul sends to kill him in his house; but Michal favours his escape, and deceives Saul by an image in the bed, 11—17. David goes to Samuel, 18. Saul sends messengers after him to Naioth; and then goes himself; but first his messengers are seized by the Spirit of prophecy, and afterwards he also, 19—24.

AND ^aSaul spake to Jonathan his son, and to all his ^bservants, that they should kill David.

2 But Jonathan, Saul's son, ^cdelighted much in David: and ^dJonathan told David, saying, Saul my father seeketh to kill thee: now therefore, I pray thee, take heed to thyself until the morning, and abide in a ^esecret ^fplace, and hide thyself:

3 And I will go out and stand beside my father in the field where thou ^gart, and I will commune with my father of thee; and ^hwhat I see, that I will tell thee.

4 ¶ And Jonathan ⁱspake good of David unto Saul his father, and said unto him, Let not the king ^j'sin against his servant, against David; because he hath not sinned against thee, and ^kbecause his works ^lhave been to thee-ward very good.

5 For he did ^mput his life in his hand, and ⁿslew the Philistine, and the LORD ^owrought a great salvation for all Israel: thou sawest ^pit, and didst rejoice; wherefore then wilt thou ^q'sin against innocent blood, to slay David ^rwithout a cause?

6 And Saul hearkened unto the voice of Jonathan: and Saul ^sswore, ^tAs the LORD liveth, ^uhe shall not be slain.

7 And Jonathan called David, and Jonathan shewed him all those things: and Jonathan brought David to Saul, and he was in his presence ^vas ^w*in times past.

V. 17—19. Saul appears to have been influenced in this purpose by fear of exciting a revolt among the people, rather than by the fear of God, or reluctance to commit murder. (Note, 2 Sam. xi. 14—17.) He was engaged by promises to give his daughter to David; (xvii. 25;) but he had delayed the performance, and David was willing to dispense with it. Malice, however, at length prompted him to propose it, that he might excite David to venture his life more freely, in order to be counted worthy of such an honour; and that he might thus be cut off without Saul's interposition. And, though David humbly owned himself unworthy of such an alliance, and his services of such a reward, he did not decline the stipulated conditions; but when Saul's design proved abortive, he affronted him in the grossest manner by giving his daughter to another man.

V. 23—27. David would doubtless suspect some invidious design in this proposal also; but he cautiously avoided mentioning the slight which had been put upon him, and waved the matter upon the ground of his own poverty and inferiority, (though his original was not much inferior to Saul's.) But when, instead of dowry, according to the custom of those times, a hundred foreskins of the Philistines were required, he would not seem backward to any perilous service; and, therefore, he promptly went forth, and returned with twice as many as had been prescribed.

V. 28—30. Michal's affection for David, his prudent conduct in another incursion of the Philistines, and his increasing reputation, appeared to Saul's distempered mind to forebode David's advancement to the kingdom, by dethroning him; nay, the full conviction that God favoured David, rendered Saul not only more afraid of him, but also more malignant against him! (Notes, Gen. iv. 3—8. Matt. ii. 3—18. John xv. 22—25. 1 John iii. 11—15.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

True religion teaches us to love real excellence; to rejoice in it, though it eclipse our own reputation; and to delight in the society of those whom the Lord loves and honours, who bear his image, and are zealous for his glory; regardless of inferiority of station, or selfish considerations. This union of souls, resulting from participation of the Spirit of Jesus Christ, prepares men for filling up their several stations in the church of God, in harmony, sympathy, and love, as the several members do in the natural body; and which, being perfected in heaven, will for ever exclude envy and discontent, and render the felicity of each favoured inhabitant an accession to the joy of all the rest. (Notes, 1 Cor. xii. 12—31.) But how different is the nature of fallen man! When the Lord is provoked to leave us, and Satan is permitted to excite our evil propensities, we become capable of envying and hating those especially who are most amiable, and who have done the most to serve us, with malignity proportioned to their meekness and wisdom; the commendations bestowed upon them are considered as an injury and reproach to us; and even the peculiar favour of God for them will aggravate malice, and incite to revenge. Thus men imitate and gratify Satan's malevolence, while they themselves are tortured with continued terrors and suspicions, and urged by temptations to every horrid crime, by which they bring upon themselves swift destruction. If we would not be given up to such dreadful excesses, let us watch and pray against the first risings of these dire passions, and also be prepared for the effects of them as they prevail in the minds of others. For every great and good work a man must expect to be envied by his neighbour: no distinction or pre-eminence can be so unexceptionably obtained but it will expose the possessor to slander and malice, and, perhaps, to the most fatal consequences. But such trials are very useful to those who love God; they serve as a counterpoise to their honour, and check the growth of pride and attachment to the world; they exercise them to faith, patience, meekness, and communion with God; they give them a fair opportunity of exemplifying the amiable nature and tendency of true godliness, by acting with wisdom and propriety in the most difficult circumstances; they make way for increasing experience of the Lord's faithfulness in restraining their enemies, raising them up friends, and affording them his gracious protection; and they both prepare them for those stations in which they are to be employed, and open their way to them; for, in due time, modest merit will shine forth with double lustre. But humility, industry, faithfulness, silence under injuries, and a backwardness to seek great things for ourselves, are requisite to safety and comfort in the public scenes of life; and retired stations are vastly more favourable to our own inward peace. Nay, our lavish commendations of those whom we love and admire, in such a world as this, often prove a real injury: and in all cases every thing should be avoided, which can excite envy or opposition; except the performance of our duty to God and man. But if "the Lord be with us," and we have the consolations of his Spirit, we shall be happy in any situation: committing our souls and bodies, our characters and interests, our families and connexions, our way and our work, into his almighty hands; he will bring all that to pass which is good for us, and carry us safely through to that blessed world, where treachery, envy, and malice find no admission, but perfect love will prevail for evermore.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIX. V. 1—3. (Notes, xviii. 1. 3, 4. 28—30.) Some spot, where Saul commonly walked, was pitched upon by Jonathan for this conference: that David being there concealed, might have the fullest evidence of Jonathan's fidelity and affection, and all the information which he could procure him. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 4—7. (Notes, xvii. 38—53. Ps. xxv. 2, 3. John xv. 22—25.) Probably, Saul was for the present impressed by Jonathan's calm and forcible arguments, and swore that David should not be slain, meaning sincerely: but when his

8 ¶ And there was war again: and David went out, and fought with the Philistines, and slew them with a great slaughter: and they fled from him.

9 And the evil spirit from the LORD was upon Saul, as he sat in his house with his javelin in his hand: and David played with his hand.

10 And Saul sought to smite David even to the wall with the javelin; but he slipped away out of Saul's presence, and he smote the javelin into the wall: and David fled, and escaped that night.

11 ¶ Saul also sent messengers unto David's house to watch him, and to slay him in the morning: and Michal, David's wife, told him, saying, If thou save not thy life to-night, to-morrow thou shalt be slain.

12 ¶ So Michal let David down through a window: and he went, and fled, and escaped.

13 And Michal took an image, and laid it in the bed, and put a pillow of goats' hair for his bolster, and covered it with a cloth.

14 And when Saul sent messengers to take David, she said, He is sick.

15 And Saul sent the messengers again to see David, saying, Bring him up to me in the bed, that I may slay him.

16 And when the messengers were come in, behold, there was an image in the bed, with a pillow of goats' hair for his bolster.

17 And Saul said unto Michal, Why hast thou deceived me so, and sent away mine enemy, that he is escaped? And Michal answered Saul, He said unto me, Let me go; why should I kill thee?

18 ¶ So David fled, and escaped, and came to Samuel to Ramah, and told him all that Saul had done to him: and he and Samuel went and dwelt in Naioth.

19 And it was told Saul, saying, Behold, David is at Naioth in Ramah.

20 And Saul sent messengers to take David: and when they saw the company of the prophets prophesying, and Samuel standing as appointed over them, the Spirit of God was upon the messengers of Saul, and they also prophesied.

21 And when it was told Saul, he sent other messengers, and they prophesied likewise: and Saul sent messengers again the third time, and they prophesied also.

22 Then went he also to Ramah, and came to a great well that is in Sechu: and he asked, and said, Where are Samuel and David? And one said, Behold, they be at Naioth in Ramah.

24 And he stripped off his clothes also, and prophesied before Samuel in like manner, and lay down naked all that day, and all that night. Wherefore they say, Is Saul also among the prophets?

CHAP. XX.

David consults with Jonathan how to provide for his safety, 1—10. They renew the covenant of friendship, and confirm it by oath, 11—17. They agree on a token, 18—23. David absents himself from the king's table, and is excused by Jonathan, whom Saul attempts to kill, 24—34. Jonathan shews David his danger, and most affectionately takes leave of him, 35—42.

AND David fled from Naioth in Ramah, and came to Sechu, and said before Jonathan, What have I done? what is mine iniquity? and what is my sin before thy father, that he seeketh my life?

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The most vehement anger, when excited by supposed injuries, may be pacified by concessions, kindness, and continued good behaviour; but envious rage is exasperated by excellency of character and conduct, and generally is implacable.—When rooted malice possesses the heart, murder is speedily conceived; and the prospect of impunity emboldens men to avow the most shameful purposes.—Absolute princes are so seldom opposed in their designs; and so few venture to plead for the objects of their envy and hatred, that they often conclude all men to be alike selfish, and ready to execute any lucrative schemes of villany. But that friendship, which is cemented by mutual faith and piety, will influence those, who feel its sacred flame, to renounce their highest temporal interests, and venture the displeasure of their superiors, in pleading the cause of injured worth.—The evil of causeless malice, of ingratitude, and of persecuting those whose conduct has been irreproachable, and whose services have been eminent, is so manifest, that a plain statement of truth and fact, with meek and serious expostulations, will often for the time impress the minds of such as are most deeply guilty. But resolutions, made in consequence of hasty convictions, and without any inward change of disposition, or dependence on the grace of God, seldom produce much good effect: and ungovernable passions easily break through the most solemn oaths, when the fear of God does not possess the heart. A fresh temptation soon rouses the dormant corruption: and, by indulging malignant passions, men give Satan his full advantage, and may be answerable for multiplied murders, without actually perpetrating any.—The servants of God must keep to their place and duty, though hated for so doing: they must give honour to their earthly superiors, however they behave; and persevere in their endeavours to "overcome evil with good." The Almighty has innumerable methods of protecting them in the most imminent dangers: he can preserve them by the kindness even of those persons, whose conduct deserves marked disapprobation: he can change the hearts, or bind the hands of their enemies, or shame them for a season out of their malicious purposes.—Many a persecutor, by coming among God's people, has been seized on by converting grace, and, like Saul of Tarsus, has professed and "preached the faith that once he sought to destroy." but far more, like king Saul, have for a time been apparently changed, have exercised spiritual gifts, and been numbered among the prophets, whose malice has remained unsubdued, and whose "last state has been worse than the first." Let us then daily seek for renewing grace, which shall be "in us a well of water springing up into everlasting life;" let us cleave to truth and holiness with full purpose of heart; and in every danger and trouble seek protection, comfort, and direction in the ordinances of God, and in the society of his ministers and people. For these things will do far more towards making us happy, than all the splendour and luxury of a court.

NOTES.

CHAP. XX. V. 1, 2. While Saul was detained at Naioth, David hastily repaired to Jonathan, to confer with him on the state of his affairs: but Jonathan was disposed to attribute his father's attempts against David to convictions were off, his malice revived, and he was too much accustomed to swear, duly to reverence an oath. (xiv. 24. 39. 44.) David could not indeed greatly confide in Saul's assurances; but he was willing to keep in the way of his duty, and to put his trust in God.

V. 8—10. Though David's valour and success were the known causes of Saul's enmity; yet he was willing to fight against the Philistines, and to expose himself to their swords, and to Saul's increased envy on that account: nor did he decline playing upon the harp before Saul, though he saw the javelin in his hand, and had before so narrowly escaped! (Notes, xviii. 10. 11. 23—27.)

V. 11. Lest David should elude the messengers if they entered the house in the night, they were ordered to watch till the morning, that he might not go out; and then to apprehend him, that Saul might slay him. Thus an opportunity was afforded David of escaping; (Notes, Judg. xvi. 1—3;) Michal, having either received some information concerning Saul's intentions, or made some observations which served to convince her of them. (Notes, Ps. lix. Title. 3. 6—15.)

V. 12—17. (Marg. Ref.) Michal's fidelity to her husband was commendable: nay, if the cause had been more doubtful, it would have been her duty to unite with him, while no harm was intended Saul, and David merely aimed to preserve his life. (Note, Gen. xxxi. 15, 16.) Her stratagem also to gain time, was allowable: but her direct falsehood in excusing herself to Saul, had not even the excuse of necessity; (Note, Ex. ii. 19;) and it was very injurious to David's reputation. The whole account illustrates the savage cruelty of Saul, who, it seems, could not be satisfied with the death of his faithful servant, unless he had the satisfaction of slaying him with his own hands: and it shews likewise the extreme danger to which David's life was exposed.—Mine enemy, (17) (xviii. 29. xxiv. 16. Note, 1 Kings xxi. 20.)—It can hardly be thought that teraphim, for idolatrous purposes, were permitted in David's family: and it is therefore supposed, that this image was merely a statue for ornament. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 18. As the aged prophet had anointed David to be king, he fled to him on this emergency, rather than to his father's house; that he might have the solace of his counsel, instructions, and prayers.—Naioth is supposed to have been the place of a seminary of prophets, near Ramah. (22. Note, x. 5, 6.)

V. 19—24. (Notes, 2 Kings i. 9—14. John vii. 31—36. 40—53.)—Saul, being seized by the prophetic spirit before he came to Naioth, stripped off his armour, and royal robes, or upper garments, as it is probable the other prophets did; (Marg. Ref.); and in an ecstasy, during the whole day and night, he involuntarily joined in speaking of divine things, or in singing hymns of praise, without any power of executing the base purpose of his journey. After which, finding himself baffled, probably he returned home extremely chagrined, without taking any notice of Samuel.—This second time of Saul being among the prophets was noted, being indeed more wonderful than the former. (Note, x. 10—13.)

2 And he said unto him, "God forbid; thou shalt not die: behold, my father will do nothing, either great or small, but that he will shew it me; and why should my father hide this thing from me? It is not so."

3 And David sware moreover, and said, Thy father certainly knoweth that I have found grace in thine eyes; and he saith, Let not Jonathan know this, lest he be grieved: but truly, as the LORD liveth, and as thy soul liveth, there is but a step between me and death.

4 Then said Jonathan unto David, "Whatsoever thy soul desireth, I will even do it for thee."

5 And David said unto Jonathan, Behold, to-morrow is the new moon, and I should not fail to sit with the king at meat: but let me go, that I may hide myself in the field unto the third day at even.

6 If thy father at all miss me, then say, David earnestly asked leave of me, that he might run to Beth-lehem his city; for there is a yearly sacrifice there for all the family.

7 If he say thus, It is well; thy servant shall have peace: but if he be very wroth, then be sure that evil is determined by him.

8 Therefore thou shalt deal kindly with thy servant; for thou hast brought thy servant into a covenant of the LORD with thee: notwithstanding, if there be in me iniquity, slay me thyself; for why shouldst thou bring me to thy father?

9 And Jonathan said, Far be it from thee: for if I knew certainly that evil were determined by my father to come upon thee, then would not I tell it thee?

10 Then said David to Jonathan, Who shall tell me? or what if thy father answer thee roughly?

11 ¶ And Jonathan said unto David, Come, and let us go out into the field. And they went out both of them into the field.

12 And Jonathan said unto David, "O LORD God of Israel, when I have sounded my father about to-morrow any time, or the third day, and, behold, if there be good toward David, and I then send not unto thee, and shew it thee;

13 "The LORD do so, and much more to Jonathan: but if it please my father to do thee evil, then I will shew it thee, and send thee away, that thou mayest go in peace; and the LORD be with thee, as he hath been with my father."

14 And thou shalt not only, while yet I live, shew me the kindness of the LORD, that I die not;

15 But also thou shalt not cut off thy kindness from my house for ever: no, not when the LORD hath cut off the enemies of David, every one from the face of the earth.

16 So Jonathan made a covenant with the house of David, saying, "Let the LORD even require it at the hand of David's enemies."

17 And Jonathan caused David to swear again, because he loved him: for he loved him as he loved his own soul.

18 ¶ Then Jonathan said to David, To-morrow is the new moon; and thou shalt be missed, because thy seat will be empty.

19 And when thou hast stayed three days, then thou shalt go down quickly, and come to the place where thou didst hide thyself when the business was in hand, and shalt remain by the stone Ezel.

20 And I will shoot three arrows on the side thereof, as though I shot at a mark.

21 And, behold, I will send a lad, saying, Go, find out the arrows. If I expressly say unto the lad, Behold, the arrows are on this side of thee, take them; then come thou: for there is peace to thee, and no hurt, as the LORD liveth.

22 But if I say thus unto the young man, Behold, the arrows are beyond thee; go thy way: for the LORD hath sent thee away.

23 And as touching the matter which thou and I have spoken of, behold the LORD be between thee and me for ever.

24 ¶ So David hid himself in the field: and when the new moon was come, the king sat him down to eat meat.

25 And the king sat upon his seat, as at other times, even upon a seat by the wall: and Jonathan arose, and Abner sat by Saul's side, and David's place was empty.

distemper, or to sudden sallies of passion, rather than to a fixed purpose of murdering him. After Saul had sworn not to slay David, it may be supposed he had said no more to Jonathan on that subject, though he confided all his other affairs to him; and therefore Jonathan could scarcely believe that he harboured such base designs: and perhaps he had not heard of Saul's late violent attempt against David. (Note, xix. 4-7.)

V. 3. David solemnly called God to witness, that in criminating Saul, he did not go upon doubtful surmises; and that it was as certain in itself as that "the LORD lived," and to him, as Jonathan could be of his own existence, that a design was formed against his life; which constrained him to renounce the service of Saul, and consult his own safety. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 5. 7. David suggested this expedient, to convince Jonathan of Saul's intentions, and to shew that he was forced into the measures which he afterwards adopted.—Saul still regarded the externals of religion, and at the new moons entertained his family and chief officers, at a feast upon a sacrifice. Hitherto David had filled his place there; but on this occasion he purposed to be absent, to make trial of Saul: for, as he was evidently destitute of affection for him, if he were very angry, it must arise from his being deprived of an opportunity to do him mischief. It may be supposed, that David was invited to an annual family-sacrifice at Bethlehem, (Notes, ix. 12-14. xvi. 1-5): the excuse was sufficient; Saul being out of the way, Jonathan was competent to allow David's absence, and he engaged to return on the third day before even, to learn the result. In the mean while he purposed to conceal him in the fields about Bethlehem.

V. 8. At Jonathan's instance, he and David had entered into a covenant in the name of JEHOVAH, being ratified by a solemn appeal to him, for their mutual encouragement in worshipping him and promoting his glory. (Note, xviii. 3, 4.)—David seems to have had some jealousy, lest Jonathan should warp from his constancy; especially lest the envenomed tongue of slander should injure him in his friend's esteem. 'If,' says he, 'I am guilty of any great offence which violates our covenant, such as treason against Saul, slay me thyself, but betray me not to thy father.' This was finely conceived, to touch the tenderest feelings of Jonathan's heart.

V. 12, 13. In speaking to David, Jonathan appealed to God for his sincerity, and called on him to avenge his perfidy, if he betrayed his friend. Jonathan knew that Samuel had anointed David, and believed that he would certainly be king: and he had no thoughts of opposing the purpose of God, but rejoiced that so pious and able a person was chosen to reign over Israel; and prayed that the LORD might be with him, as he had been with Saul. For, as it became a dutiful son, he drew a veil over his father's misconduct, and only adverted to his former good management and success. (Notes, xi. 5-15.)

V. 14-17. The original may be rendered, "Wilt thou not, if I be then alive; (namely, when David should mount the throne;) "wilt thou not shew the kindness of the LORD, that I die not? But also, thou wilt not," &c.—It has been too common in disputed successions, for the reigning prince to clear the title of his own family, by cutting off all competitors: Jonathan therefore prudently proposed to extend the personal covenant, before made with David, to their posterity also. He readily renounced all pretensions to the kingdom; and only desired, that he and his descendants might be numbered among the friends of David and his family, when all his enemies had been destroyed.—When we consider David's distress, Saul's enmity, and Jonathan's prospects, we can never sufficiently admire the strength of his faith, and the force of his disinterested love! (Notes, xviii. 1. John xv. 12-16.) It is observable that Jonathan did not desire, that the LORD should require it of David or his posterity, if any failure took place, but "at the hand of David's enemies."

V. 19. It must be supposed, that David went to Bethlehem: but the original words seem to intimate, that he should come three days successively, from the place of his retirement to the spot, where he and Jonathan had discoursed on the business; in order to learn whether any thing had been discovered. Perhaps he staid but one day at Bethlehem.

V. 20-22. In case Jonathan could not speak with David, because he was watched, or because of persons passing by; these signals were pitched on: and in case the last should be made, David must conclude, that his death was determined; and that the LORD required him to provide for his safety by concealing himself.

V. 25. When Saul entered the room, Jonathan arose, and took his seat next to him; and Abner, probably, as a near relation of Saul, and commander of his forces, sat next to Jonathan.

26 Nevertheless Saul spake not any thing that day: for he thought, Something hath befallen him, ^{he is not clean; surely he is not clean.}

27 And it came to pass on the morrow, which was the second day of the month, that David's place was empty; and Saul said unto Jonathan his son, ^{Wherefore cometh not the son of Jesse to meat, neither yesterday nor to-day?}

28 And Jonathan answered Saul, David earnestly asked leave of me to go to Beth-lehem:

29 And he said, Let me go, I pray thee; for our family hath a sacrifice in the city, and my brother, he hath commanded me to be there; and now, if I have found favour in thine eyes, let me get away, I pray thee, and see my brethren: therefore he cometh not unto the king's table.

30 Then Saul's anger was kindled against Jonathan, and he said unto him, ^{Thou son of the perverse rebellious woman, do not I know that thou hast chosen the son of Jesse to thine own confusion, and unto the confusion of thy mother's nakedness?}

31 For as long as the son of Jesse liveth upon the ground, thou shalt not be established, nor thy kingdom: wherefore now send and fetch him unto me, for he shall surely die.

32 And Jonathan answered Saul his father, and said unto him, ^{Wherefore shall he be slain? what hath he done?}

33 And Saul cast a javelin at him, to smite him: ^{whereby Jonathan knew that it was determined of his father to slay David.}

V. 26. Saul did not ascribe David's absence to a criminal cause: but he might have suspected that fear of his murderous rage, rather than any ceremonial uncleanness inadvertently contracted, had induced him to absent himself. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 27. As the exact time of the appearance of the new moon was uncertain, it seems to have been customary to observe two days as festivals: so that they, who were unclean on the first day, might observe the second. (Note, Num. xxviii. 11—15.) For many of these ceremonial uncleanness lasted only till the evening. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 30. The terms used by Saul seem to contain the most scurrilous abuse, which the language afforded; especially implying, that Jonathan proved himself not to be his son, and that he disgraced his mother by taking David's part against him.—Considering Saul's rank, and Jonathan's relation to him, his eminent services and excellent character, and the public and sacred occasion, this speech may give some idea of the furious passions which Saul indulged. (Notes, xvi. 14. Jam. iii. 3—6.)—His calling David "the son of Jesse," implied scorn and aversion.

V. 31. For as, &c. Saul, most likely, knew that David had been anointed to be king, by the same authority as he himself had been: yet he opposed him with all his might, and vainly hoped to prevent the purpose of God by putting him to death! (Notes, Matt. ii. 5—16.)

V. 32, 33. (Note, xix. 4—7.) When Jonathan had before reasoned with Saul, he was reduced to a better temper; but now he would not hearken to a word: and though, in order to induce Jonathan's concurrence in killing David, he pretended a great zeal for his establishment in the kingdom; yet when his purposes were opposed, he madly attempted to kill him also! He seems to have used a javelin instead of a sceptre; for he had it always ready at hand.

V. 41, 42. Finding no one near, Jonathan seized the opportunity of one more interview with his beloved friend; who, in his conduct on this occasion, united all the respect and honour due to Jonathan's rank, with the most endeared affection and glowing gratitude: so that his sorrow even exceeded that of Jonathan's, as considering himself exiled from his country, separated from his wife and friend, and excluded from the ordinances of God, and the society of his people. Nothing can be conceived more pathetic than this parting; and we do not find, that they met more than once afterwards in this world. (Notes, xxiii. 16—18.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—23. Next to the consolations of true religion, nothing is more supporting to an afflicted mind than the converse of a pious friend: and it is most desirable to avoid misconstructions of our conduct, by those whom we love and esteem; lest we should lose the comfort of their friendship, and throw temptations in their way.—Though it is painful to suffer for well-doing, yet it is far better than to suffer for evil-doing: for a clear conscience, an unblemished reputation, and the favour of God, are vast advantages in trying circumstances. (Note, 1 Pet. iii. 17, 18.)—Friendly and pious persons are always backward to suspect others of deep malignity, but wish to impute their misconduct, where undeniable, to other causes: and pious children will veil the faults of their parents as far as consists with other duties, and speak as favourably of 34 So Jonathan arose from the table in fierce anger, and did eat no meat the second day of the month: for he was grieved for David, because his father had done him shame.

35 ¶ And it came to pass in the morning, that Jonathan went out into the field, at the time appointed with David, and a little lad with him.

36 And he said unto his lad, Run, find out now the arrows which I shoot. And as the lad ran, he shot an arrow beyond him.

37 And when the lad was come to the place of the arrow which Jonathan had shot, Jonathan cried after the lad, and said, Is not the arrow beyond thee?

38 And Jonathan cried after the lad, Make speed, haste, stay not. And Jonathan's lad gathered up the arrows, and came to his master.

39 But the lad knew not any thing: only Jonathan and David knew the matter.

40 And Jonathan gave his artillery unto his lad, and said unto him, Go, carry them to the city.

41 ¶ And as soon as the lad was gone, David arose out of a place toward the south, and fell on his face to the ground, and bowed himself three times: and they kissed one another, and wept one with another, until David exceeded.

42 And Jonathan said to David, Go in peace, forasmuch as we have sworn both of us in the name of the LORD, saying, The LORD be between me and thee, and between my seed and thy seed for ever. And he arose and departed: and Jonathan went into the city.

them as truth permits. But it is shameful when parents deliberately devise wickedness, which they conceal from their children, lest they should in them meet with obstacles to their criminal designs. Evident danger, from the malice of men, renders it allowable for us to quit those places where we were employed, and to take proper measures for self-preservation: yet this ought, if possible, to be so conducted, that all impartial persons may perceive the necessity, and that "the LORD hath sent us away." At some times it appears to us, that "there is but a step between us and death:" at all times we are sensible that it may be so, and should be expecting and preparing for that event; "for, as sure as the LORD liveth, and our souls now live" in the body, we shall ere long remove into the eternal world. But let dangers appear ever so imminent, we cannot die, till the purpose of God concerning us be accomplished; and, if believers, till "we have served our generation according to his will." (Note, Acts, xiii. 4—37.—Conclusion.)—Every expedient should be tried to prevent open quarrels, every appearance of evil guarded against: and by little things a certain judgment may be formed of men's dispositions and intentions. True friendship, grounded on the covenant of the Lord, will require nothing unreasonable, and refuse nothing equitable: yet it is apt to be jealous, when fidelity is put to severe trials, and there is danger lest slander and prejudice should interrupt its course. But, in reality, it rests on an immovable basis, and possesses inconceivable force: it is stronger than death, and able to silence the voice of emulation, ambition, undue self-love, and relative affection. Who then can comprehend the love of Jesus, who gave himself a sacrifice unto God for us rebellious and polluted sinners! And what ought to be the force and effects of our love to him!—The believer, being acquainted with the purpose of the Father respecting him, willingly submits to his authority, and rejoices in the prospect of his glory. Loving him as his own soul, he asks and receives repeated confirmations of his covenant of peace; readily performs whatever Jesus his Friend commandeth; and for his sake will have a cordial love for those who seek his glory and bear his image. Assured that all his enemies will perish, he desires the same blessing for his posterity and his relations: and he prays for, and weeps over, such of them, as "reject the counsel of God against themselves:" but he must separate from them, and join interests with those whom they despise and hate.

V. 24—42. The formal professor is sometimes more constant at divine ordinances, than even the zealous believer: for discomposure of mind will occasionally prevent the attendance of a believer; while the purpose, or the practice, of the vilest crimes does not interrupt those who trust in the mere external observance.—When envious and angry passions are indulged, men are pushed on by Satan into the most indecent excesses, without respect even to character, or the most sacred obligations; nor are they aware one moment of the outrages which they shall commit the next. Let us then fear giving place to the devil in the smallest degree.—Under great provocations the meekest cannot always refrain from anger: but when its emotions are felt, it is our wisdom to withdraw in silence; and it is generous to be more grieved for our insulted friends than for ourselves.—Every comfort on earth is counterpoised with some sorrow; and the dearest friends must experience the most painful separations. But Christians need not "sorrow as men without hope:" for, being one with Christ, they are one with each other; and will soon meet in his presence to part no more, where all tears shall be wiped from their eyes.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXI. V. 1, 2. Some think that Abiah was dead, and that Ahimelech was his younger brother, and successor in the priesthood. (Marg. Ref.)—The tabernacle, on some account, had been removed from Shiloh to Nob, a city of Benjamin, which was not originally allotted to the priests, but, as it seems, had afterwards been given to them. (Marg. Ref. Note, vii. 1, 2.)—The ark, however, still remained at Kirjath-jearim.—David went to Nob to enquire of the Lord by the high priest, as he had before been accustomed to do; and to take farewell of him and of the sanctuary, as he had of Samuel and of Jonathan. But as he went without his accustomed retinue, and in apparent distress, Ahimelech probably suspected a breach betwixt him and Saul, and was afraid to entertain him. This proved a snare to David: and lest he should be betrayed to Saul, or sent away destitute, he immediately framed a gross falsehood, which cannot be excused, and which had the most fatal consequences. (Notes, xxii. 9-19.)

V. 3-6. It seems wonderful, that David should not be able to procure bread for himself and his few attendants! but when Saul's rooted malice was made known, every one would be afraid, or indisposed, to entertain him. The necessity, however, was real and urgent, and Ahimelech supposed that in such a case they might eat the shew-bread, provided they were prepared in the same manner as the Israelites had been, for receiving the law from mount Sinai. (Ex. xix. 15.) David having therefore satisfied him in this respect, and assured him that the young men were ceremonially clean, as well as holy in their general character, (as the words seem to imply;) and having pleaded, that the bread was now in a manner common, as other loaves had been placed upon the table in their stead; he gave them some of it, and they did eat.—Jesus Christ, in vindicating his disciples from the charge of breaking the sabbath, has also vindicated David in this matter: which proves that the positive institutions of religion may be dispensed with, when the preservation of life, or any other urgent necessity, requires it. (Note, Matt. xii. 3, 4.) 'It is a small thing to say, it is lawful for us to eat the bread removed from the table: it would be lawful for us, in this extreme hunger, even to eat the bread now sanctified on the table, if there were no other.' (Kimchi in Whitty.)

V. 7. Doeg had become a proselyte to the religion of Israel, perhaps to obtain preferment from Saul: and he was at this time performing some vow, which constrained his attendance at the sanctuary; but the word detained seems to imply that he submitted to it as a painful restraint. (Note, Am. viii. 4-10.) Thus, however, he was acquainted with what passed between David and Ahimelech. (Notes, xxii. 9, 10, 22.)

V. 8, 9. Either David fled with such precipitation that he had not time to take his armour; or he left it, in order the better to conceal himself. It seems, that Goliath's sword was not so large, but that David could readily use it; and every time he drew it, it would remind him to bless God for his victory over the Philistines, and to trust in him to turn the arms of all his enemies against themselves. (Note, xvii. 51.)

V. 10-15. David expected that Saul would pursue him into every part of the land, and was not disposed to form a party against him. Perhaps Achish deemed it politic to draw off so able a commander from the service of Saul, and had given him some intimations that he would protect him. But his officers judged otherwise: and, remembering his victory over Goliath, and the lavish commendations bestowed on him, (Note, xvii. 6-9; and, having heard, that he had been appointed to be "the king of the land;" they judged it impossible to fix him in their interest, and perhaps intimated that he should be put to death. This so alarmed David, that he feigned himself mad, and mimicked the actions of lunatics; which gave Achish the opportunity of sending him away, without either employing or hurting him: but it is not certain, whether he really thought him mad, or was willing to avail himself of appearances, to get out of the difficulty. David's conduct was, in some respects, degrading to his character, and discovered a wavering in his faith and courage. He soon, however, recovered his confidence and composure; for on this occasion he composed the thirty-fourth and the fifty-sixth psalms, which are remarkable for strength of faith and fervour of piety. (Notes, Ps. xxxiv. Title. 4-6. lvi. Title. 1-4.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When in earthly courts a favourite falls, in general it is very rapidly: for out of fickleness, envy, malice, ambition, or fear, almost every one deserts or opposes him; disregarding the most unsullied reputation, eminent services, or personal obligations. It is therefore "better to trust in the LORD, than to put any confidence in princes." (Note, Ps. cxviii. 8, 9.) "Oppression maketh even a wise man mad;" (Note, Ec. vii. 7;) and few conduct themselves in extreme difficulties, without taking some manifestly false step: we should therefore "watch and pray, that we may not enter into temptation;" and especially seek that strength of faith in God, which may overcome the fear of man.—Ingenious falsehoods often promise present security; but they insure future disgrace and disquietude: and no impositions are more foolish and prejudicial, than those, which some men practise, in seeking counsel and comfort from the ministers of Christ.—Urgent necessity will justify us in neglecting the rituals of religion: but we ought always to attend on holy things, in holiness of body and soul, and with a mind as abstracted from all earthly objects as possible.—The true believer is glad to go to the courts of the Lord, is reluctant to quit them, and mourns when confined from them: but the time-serving hypocrite is dragged to, and detained in, God's service, from secular motives, and is often forming schemes of wickedness when he seems to be worshipping. What wonder then, that "his sacrifice is an abomination to the LORD?" (Note, Ps. xxvi. 6-8. xxvii. 4-7. xlii. 1-3. lxiii. 1-4. lxxxiv. 1-4. 10. Am. viii. 4-10.)—The remembrance of former merites not only revives gratitude, but inspires fresh confidence and courage: and the word of God is that "sword of the Spirit," concerning which, in all temptations and conflicts, we may well say, "There is none like it."—In this world we must pass from one danger to another, and often meet with terror where we seek security; and those very honours, of which men are ambitious, expose them to manifold disadvantages and perils: nor can we expect our situation to be better, while the best of characters are so inconsistent and defective. But we may "trust the LORD at all times;" he will supply our wants, and never forsake us, notwithstanding our lamented infirmities: he will not leave the lives of his people in the hands of their enemies, nor their souls in disconsolation: and the more simply we depend on him and obey him, the more comfortably and surely we shall walk through this troublesome world, to that "rest which is reserved for the people of God."

B. C. 1062.

David escapes to Adullam, whither his kindred and others resort to him, 1, 2. At Mizpeh he commends his parents to the protection of the king of Moab, 3. Admonished by the prophet Gad, he returns to the land of Judah, 5. Saul complains that his servants are unfaithful, 6-8. Doeg accuses Ahimelech; who is sent for with the priests, and answers the charge, 9-16. Saul's soldiers refusing to slay the priests, at his command, Doeg executes it; and destroys their city and families, 17-19. Abiathar escapes to David, who blames himself, and assures him of protection, 20-23.

DAVID therefore departed thence, and escaped to the cave Adullam: and when his brethren and all his father's house heard it, they went down thither to him.

2 And every one that was in distress, and every one that was in debt, and every one that was discontented, gathered themselves unto him; and he became a captain over them: and there were with him about four hundred men.

3 ¶ And David went thence to Mizpeh of Moab: and he said unto the king of Moab, Let my father and my mother, I pray thee, come forth, and be with you, till I know what God will do for me.

4 And he brought them before the king of Moab: and they dwelt with him all the while that David was in the hold.

5 ¶ And the prophet Gad said unto David, Abide not in the hold; depart, and get thee into the land of Judah. Then David departed, and came into the forest of Hareth.

6 ¶ When Saul heard that David was discovered, and the men that were with him, (now Saul abode in Gibeah under a tree in Ramah, having his spear in his hand, and all his servants were standing about him;)

7 Then Saul said unto his servants that stood about him, Hear now, ye Benjamites; will the son of Jesse give every one of you fields and vineyards, and make you all captains of thousands, and captains of hundreds;

8 That all of you have conspired against me, and there is none that sheweth me that my son hath made a league with the son of Jesse, and there is none of you that is sorry for me, or sheweth unto me that my son hath stirred up my servant against me, to lie in wait, as at this day?

9 ¶ Then answered Doeg the Edomite, (which was set over the servants of Saul,) and said, I saw the son of Jesse coming to Nob, to Ahimelech the son of Ahitub.

10 And he enquired of the LORD for him, and gave him victuals, and gave him the sword of Goliath the Philistine.

11 ¶ Then the king sent to call Ahimelech the priest, the son of Ahitub, and all his father's house, the priests that were in Nob: and they came all of them to the king.

12 And Saul said, Hear now, thou son of Ahitub. And he answered, Here I am, my lord.

13 And Saul said unto him, Why have ye conspired against me, thou and the son of Jesse, in that thou hast given him bread, and a sword, and hast enquired of God for him, that he should rise against me, to lie in wait, as at this day?

14 Then Ahimelech answered the king, and said, And who is so faithful among all thy servants as David, which is the king's son-in-law, and goeth at thy bidding, and is honourable in thine house?

15 Did I then begin to enquire of God for him? be it far from me: let not the king impute any thing unto his servant, nor to all the house of my father; for thy servant knew nothing of all this, less or more.

16 And the king said, Thou shalt surely die, Ahimelech, thou, and all thy father's house.

17 ¶ And the king said unto the footmen that stood about him, Turn, and slay the priests of the LORD; because their hand also is with David, and because they knew when he fled, and did not shew it to me. But the servants of the king would not put forth their hand to fall upon the priests of the LORD.

18 And the king said to Doeg, Turn thou, and

NOTES.

CHAP. XXII. V. 1, 2. David, unable to secure himself by flight, and finding that none would venture to harbour him, hid himself in a cave. (Note, Ps. cxlii. Title.) Thither his relations resorted to him for protection from the rage of Saul, and to afford him assistance: along with them also came a number of persons of broken fortunes and unsettled minds, of whom he formed a small army. But they acted entirely upon the defensive, and indeed became protectors of the country: and probably David's instructions, devotions, and example, soon produced a great change in their temper and behaviour. (Marg. Ref. Notes, xxv. 8. 14-17. Judg. xi. 3.)

V. 3, 4. The king of Moab, being at variance with Saul, was favourable to David; perhaps the more so, as David was descended from a Moabitess. (Ruth, iv. 13-17.) With him, however, he procured a retreat for his aged parents. (Note, 2 Sam. viii. 2.)

V. 5. It is probable, that Gad had been educated in the schools of the prophets under Samuel's tuition; (Note, x. 5, 6;) and knowing that David was anointed to be king, he seems to have attended him in his distresses. By him the Lord commanded David not to abide at Mizpeh, which bordered on Moab, (Note, Judg. xi. 9-11:) or in any distant fortified places: but to return into the land of Judah, that he might not be alienated from his brethren, or his men enticed to idolatry; that his faith might be exercised and increased; and that he still might perform some service to his country. (Note, xxiii. 1-6.)

V. 6. Saul had pitched his tent, or set up his standard, near Gibeah, upon some eminence, (for so the word Ramah signifies:) and with a spear in his hand he seemed to menace vengeance against all who did not join him in persecuting David. (Note, xx. 32, 33.)

V. 7, 8. This language of Saul is very expressive of rage and jealousy. He took it for granted that David had conspired his death. His pious, amiable, and dutiful son also was accused of being the ringleader in the conspiracy; because he would not assist in the murder of an excellent man, whom he greatly loved! Nay, the people in general, and his own tribe in particular, had conspired against him, and had no compassion on him, and were blind to their own interests; merely because they were not so furious against David as he was! (Notes, xvi. 14. xx. 30.)—It is probable that Saul had heard that Jonathan had made a covenant with David; and, not being able to learn the particulars, he suspected that treason was implied in it. Perhaps Jonathan kept at a greater distance, and was more reserved than before.

V. 9, 10. There was no good reason why Doeg should at all mention Ahimelech's conduct, which he knew did not proceed from malice: but if he must report it, he should have declared, how Ahimelech was imposed upon by David, and that he intended to shew respect to Saul in that very action. (Notes, xxi. 1-9.) But, on the contrary, he spoke as if David came to take Ahimelech's advice, about his subsequent proceedings; and as if Ahimelech was joined in a conspiracy with David against Saul: though nothing could be more contrary to the truth than this insinuation! Doeg therefore, slandered Ahimelech, though the general charges adduced accorded with facts. (Notes, Ex. xx. 16. Matt. xxvi. 57-62.)—It is observable, that Doeg, after Saul's example, did not deign to call David by his name, but contemptuously spake of him, as "the son of Jesse." (8. 13. xx. 27. 30, 31.)

V. 13. Enquired, &c. Saul, by this language, almost in direct terms, charged God himself with counselling a traitor, by his high priest, how to prevail against his sovereign! (Notes, Ex. ix. 3. John xii. 9-11.)—As Ahimelech did not deny this part of the charge, it may be concluded to be true; though not mentioned in the narrative.

V. 14-16. In Ahimelech's ready attendance, with all his brethren, and in his answer to Saul, we have the conduct and language of conscious innocence. David's reputation for fidelity and capacity was established: his near relation and prompt obedience to Saul, and his honourable services to Israel, were well known: Ahimelech had been used to enquire of the Lord for him, as a public character: he meant no harm, knew nothing of what had passed, and abhorred the thought of conspiring against his prince: and therefore trusted he should be honourably acquitted!—It is observable that he generously concealed David's imposition, though the mention of it would have greatly tended to exculpate himself.—But Saul was forsaken by God, and given up to Satan and his own vile passions, and would hearken to nothing but the suggestions of revenge and jealousy.

V. 17. Saul, madly and impiously, resolved to slay all the priests of the line of Eli; because he supposed, contrary to proof, that one had been guilty: and he seems to have sent for the whole company, with this malignant intention! (11.) He scorned to lay hands on an individual; (Note, Esth. iii. 6.) and he apparently exulted in revenging himself on "the priests of the Lord." Yet his guards, or running footmen, (Marg. Ref.) so revered the sacerdotal character, and were so convinced that the priests were innocent, that, though they might themselves expect to feel the weight of their enraged prince's furious resentment, they expressly refused to execute his cruel command. A singular instance of obedience to God, rather than to man! (Note, Acts iv. 13-22.)

V. 18. The priests did not generally wear the linen ephod, except when actually officiating: but perhaps the whole company was arrayed in sacerdotal garments, as appearing before the king! Thus an Edomite, of vile character fall upon the priests. And 'Doeg the Edomite turned, and he fell upon the priests, and slew on that day ¹four-score and five persons that did wear ²a linen ephod.

19 And ¹Nob, the city of the priests, smote he with the edge of the sword; both ²men and women, children and sucklings, and oxen, and asses, and sheep, with the edge of the sword.

20 ¶ And ¹one of the sons of Ahimelech, the son of Ahitub, named Abiathar, ²escaped, and fled after David.

21 And Abiathar shewed David, that Saul had slain the LORD's priests.

22 And David said unto Abiathar, I knew it that day, when Doeg the Edomite was there, that he would surely tell Saul: ¹"I have occasioned the death of all the persons of thy father's house.

23 Abide thou with me, fear not: for ¹he that seeketh my life seeketh thy life; ²but with me thou shalt be in safeguard.

CHAP. XXIII.

David, enquiring of God by Abiathar, defends Keilah, and smites the Philistines, 1-6. Saul purposes to besiege him in Keilah; but the Lord shewing David the treachery of the Keilites, he flees to Ziph, where Jonathan meets and comforts him, 7-18. The Ziphites inform Saul concerning him, who closely pursues him to Maon; but is called off by an invasion of the Philistines, 19-28. David dwells at Eng-gedi, 29.

THEN they told David, saying, Behold, the Philistines fight against ¹Keilah, and they ²rob the threshing-floors.

2 Therefore David ¹enquired of the LORD, saying, Shall I go and smite these Philistines? And the LORD said unto David, Go and smite the Philistines, and save Keilah.

in other respects, without provocation or opposition, with his own hands, slew eighty-five priests of the Lord at one time: and both he and Saul gloried in the bloody execution! This horrid massacre, however, accomplished the sentence denounced against the house of Eli. (Notes, ii. 31-36. iii. 12-14.)

V. 19. Doeg, doubtless by Saul's authority, not satisfied with the blood of the priests, treated the inhabitants of Nob as the devoted enemies of God, and with more severity than Saul had exercised towards the Amalekites! No doubt they meant to intimidate all the Israelites from shewing the least favour to David. (Note, Ps. lii. 1-4.)

V. 22. Upon recollection, David had feared these consequences, from Doeg's known character. (Notes, xxi. 1-9.) His feelings must have been exceedingly painful, when he considered the lie which he had told, as one occasion of the fatal catastrophe. By this event, however, so terrible to the priests, and so lamentable to Israel, David obtained the presence of the high priest, which afterwards proved a great comfort and benefit to him. (Notes, xxiii. 1-6. 9-13. xxviii. 6. xxx. 7, 8.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Oppression often forces men into measures, to which they were entirely averse, and deprives the community of the services of its most useful members: yet the Lord amidst all dangers preserves his people for their appointed work. He can promote their good by the most contemptible and meanest instruments; and the Son of David receives all who come to him, however vile and miserable: he changes them all into a holy people, and employs them in his service; (Note, Is. xi. 6-9;) and they, who would reign with him, must be contented first to suffer with him.—True piety increases and purifies natural affection; and teaches men, however occupied or distressed, to be tender of their aged parents; and to be more ready to meet hardship or danger themselves, than to expose them to it.—In all our difficulties we should wait till we know what "God will do for us;" seeing none of our enemies can go further than he is pleased to permit them: we should therefore guard against excessive fear, venture readily into any place whither duty calls us, and, without yielding to resentment or despondency, persevere in looking out for opportunities of usefulness.—The progress of human nature, instigated by Satan's temptations, is from bad to worse with increasing rapidity. Conscience, fear, and shame give less and less resistance, and every passion grows more and more exorbitant. Envy, malice, and jealousy torment the soul with ideal miseries; the wretch, who is under the dominion of these diabolical passions, suspects every one of enmity and treachery, breaks through all the bonds of honour and conscience, and is hurried on to the most furious and bloody revenge. Unhappy is it for mankind when such persons possess absolute authority: as the most sacred character, unshaken fidelity, conscious innocence, convincing arguments, and respectful assurances, form no security to any one, who is become obnoxious to them! The most harmless and friendly actions become constructive treason, and "thou shalt surely die," silences every plea. Nay, the death of one, or of a few, seems a paltry revenge to a proud tyrant! Sacrifices large as his rage and power may be expected, for nothing else can appease his fury. And if some be found willing to venture his indignation, rather than abet his cruelty and impiety; others will be glad to purchase preferment at any price.—Let us then bless God for a mild, equitable, and limited government, and study to fill up our places in society consistently with our peculiar advantages: and may the Lord continue them to our remotest posterity, and extend the same to all the nations of the earth!—He often employs companions in distress, to comfort and protect each other: and, being exposed to the same dangers and enemies, they should combine for their mutual defence. Thus believers, being hated for Christ's sake, find safety under his protection; and ought to lay aside all personal animosities and useless controversies, to unite against their common enemies.—We may also learn from this narration, that needlessly to report the truth to the disadvantage of others, often springs from malice, and produces mischief; that a partial statement of facts is effectually bearing false-witness; and that a generous mind is unwilling to repeat the faults of others, even for his own vindication. We should likewise consider, that it is very painful to a feeling heart to occasion evil to others, especially by misconduct; and as unexpected bad consequences may arise from our actions, we should learn to walk circumspectly; and always be ready for that stroke, which hurries men into eternity before they are aware. For "the wicked is driven away in his wickedness, but the righteous hath hope in his death."

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIII. V. 1-6. David was at this time, an inspired writer of the Holy Scriptures; yet the Lord spoke to him by his prophet, and then by the high priest, for the honour of his own institutions. David having been anointed to be king, considered himself as the protector of Israel, and was ready to employ his men in any service, to which the Lord should please to appoint him.—It is doubtful, whether David at this time enquired of God, by the prophet Gad, or by Abiathar. It seems from the text, that Abiathar did not come to him, till he came to Keilah; yet perhaps this only means, the neighbourhood of that city. No doubt, Abiathar brought the high priest's sacred ephod with Urim and Thummim along with him. (Notes, xxiii. 20-23. Ex. xxviii. 15-30.)—It seems that David and his men pursued the Philistines into their own country, and thence brought away the cattle.

V. 7, 8. Saul, forgetting all the multiplied proofs, which had been given, that the Lord was with David, considered the slight circumstance of his entering into a fenced city, as an evidence that "God had delivered him into his hand!" The generous patriotism of David, in defending his country, while persecuted by his prince and many of the people as an outlaw, had no effect on the rancorous heart of Saul.

V. 9-13. David perhaps thought, that he could defend this fenced city against Saul, if the inhabitants would be firm in his interests. But, as the cruel massacre of the inhabitants of Nob, must have alarmed them with the dread of similar treatment, he could not confide in their assurances; and, enquiring of God, he was informed that they would purchase peace by delivering him up, though perhaps they were not meditating such ingratitude and treachery. He therefore left the city, to secure himself from danger, and them from temptation and sin.—The express and repeated answers given to the enquiries, which David made by the high priest, were in fact a divine attestation, that he was appointed to the kingdom. (Note, 1-6. Num. xxvii. 21.) Probably, these were given in an audible voice from some tent, where the ephod 12 Then said David, Will the men of Keilah deliver me and my men into the hand of Saul? And the LORD said, They will deliver thee up.

13 ¶ Then David and his men, which were about six hundred, arose and departed out of Keilah, and went whithersoever they could go. And it was told Saul that David was escaped from Keilah; and he forbore to go forth.

14 And David abode in the wilderness in strong holds, and remained in a mountain in the wilderness of Ziph: and Saul sought him every day; but God delivered him not into his hand.

15 And David saw that Saul was come out to seek his life: and David was in the wilderness of Ziph in a wood.

16 ¶ And Jonathan Saul's son arose, and went to David into the wood, and strengthened his hand in God.

17 And he said unto him, Fear not; for the hand of Saul my father shall not find thee: and thou shalt be king over Israel, and I shall be next unto thee: and that also Saul my father knoweth.

18 And they two made a covenant before the LORD. And David abode in the wood, and Jonathan went to his house.

19 ¶ Then came up the Ziphites to Saul to Gibeath, saying, Doth not David hide himself with us in strong holds in the wood, in the hill of Hachilah, which is on the south of Jeshimon?

20 Now therefore, O king, come down according to all the desire of thy soul to come down; and our part shall be to deliver him into the king's hand.

21 And Saul said, Blessed be ye of the LORD; for ye have compassion on me.

22 Go, I pray you, prepare yet, and know and see his place where his haunt is, and who hath seen him there: for it is told me that he dealeth very subtilly.

23 See therefore, and take knowledge of all the lurking-places where he hideth himself, and come ye again to me with the certainty, and I will go with you: and it shall come to pass, if he be in the land, that I will search him out throughout all the thousands of Judah.

24 And they arose, and went to Ziph before Saul: but David and his men were in the wilderness of Maon, in the plain on the south of Jeshimon.

25 Saul also and his men went to seek him; and they told David: wherefore he came down into a rock, and abode in the wilderness of Maon. And when Saul heard that, he pursued after David in the wilderness of Maon.

26 And Saul went on this side of the mountain, and David and his men on that side of the mountain: and David made haste to get away for fear of Saul; for Saul and his men compassed David and his men round about to take them.

27 ¶ But there came a messenger unto Saul, saying, Haste thee, and come; for the Philistines have invaded the land.

28 Wherefore Saul returned from pursuing after David, and went against the Philistines: therefore they called that place Sela-hammahlekoth.

29 ¶ And David went up from thence, and dwelt in strong holds at Engedi.

was generally placed, and before which the enquiry was made. The prayer which David used, perhaps by the mouth of Abiathar, in enquiring of God, may be considered as an example of the manner in which pious princes conducted that solemn and important concern.

V. 14. The disappointment of Saul's presumptuous confidence, that "God had delivered David into his hand," is here emphatically noted. (7.)

V. 16. Jonathan would doubtless converse with David, concerning the promises, power, faithfulness, and love of God, and what he had heard and experienced of them; which tended to strengthen his faith, to encourage his hope, to invigorate his confidence in God, and to induce calm submission to his will. (Notes, Is. xxxv. 3, 4. Luke xxii. 39—46. Col. i. 12—14.)

V. 17, 18. I shall be next, &c. This was Jonathan's conjecture, grounded on David's friendship, but not on the word of God, who had appointed things otherwise. Jonathan's cheerful acquiescence, would be a sensible satisfaction to David's mind.—Thus these endeared friends finally parted, as to this world. (Note, xx. 40, 41.)

V. 19—21. The Israelites in general were, it seems, averse to Saul's persecution of David, and backward to give him intelligence or assistance: he therefore deemed himself an unfortunate man, whom none of them pitied; and these treacherous Ziphites were considered as his only friends!—(Notes, 7, 8. xxii. 7, 8.)—The language of piety still united with the most atrocious crimes, should not pass unnoticed. (7, 8. Notes, Ps. xxxvi. 1—4.)

V. 22—25. Had Saul marched directly along with the Ziphites, he might have come on David before he was aware: but Saul's delay, while he sought to make the more sure of him, gave David an opportunity of retreating.

V. 26—28. When Saul's army had nearly surrounded David's little company, tidings were brought that the Philistines had invaded the land; and either their invasion was very formidable, and the case extremely urgent; or Saul feared the people's resentment, if the Philistines ravaged the country, while he was destroying its defender. He therefore retired, doubtless full of rage and vexation, and David "escaped as a bird out of the snare of the fowler;" the Philistines being the instruments of God in his preservation.—He was also preserved from the painful necessity of fighting in his own defence, against his persecutors. The place was called the rock of divisions, as separating betwixt David and Saul, on this emergency. (Notes, xxvi. 1, 2. Ps. liv. title. 1—3.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—18. The prayers of true believers are a barrier against hostile invasions; but persecution brings down the judgments of God upon guilty nations. No ill usage, however, must prompt us to revenge ourselves, or prevent us from doing good, as we have an opportunity and ability; even when we are sure to meet with ingratitude, and to be exposed to further trouble. Thus Jesus lived, and died, "and left us an example that we should follow his steps."—The more particularly we seek direction from God in fervent prayer, and the more carefully we consult the sacred Scriptures, the safer will be our path.—In difficult circumstances we shall find the unbelief of our professed helpers a very discouraging hindrance: but the most effectual way of answering their objections, and securing their assistance, is to refer them to the precepts and promises of God.—No ties of honour, gratitude, or affection, can secure the heart, under powerful temptations: nay, we none of us know how we should act, if assailed by the terrors of impending death, and left without the immediate supports of divine grace. He, who made the human heart, can alone estimate its deceitfulness: we ought not therefore to confide in our own resolutions, or in the assurances of others; but depend on the Lord to guide and keep us: and if we meet with evil treatment, we need not wonder, and ought not to revile or murmur.—The kindness of those friends, whom he raises up where we could least expect them, may well countervail the malice of our enemies, and the ingratitude and fickleness of those whom we have served. And if the converse of one friend can, at one interview, occasion comfort and strength to our hearts; what may not be expected from the continual supports, and daily visits, and powerful love, of the sinner's Saviour, the believer's covenanted Friend? And what will heaven be, where perfect universal friendship reigns, without interruption, separation, or alloy? Let us then continually seek the renewed ratification of the covenant of grace, and cultivate the friendship of the Lord and of his people. Our most rational and pleasing expectations of another kind may be frustrated; all other unions must be dissolved; but here disappointment and disunion can have no place for ever.

V. 19—29. The influence of wickedness, in those who fill exalted stations, widely and fatally diffuses itself among their inferiors: many will pay court to them, by aiding their sinful purposes; nay, some will pride themselves in resembling them in their vices! and those only will be treated as friends, who in fact are their most destructive enemies. They therefore who are thus distinguished, have additional reasons for bridling their passions, and exercising themselves unto godliness; lest they should occasion the ruin of multitudes, and thus aggravate their own condemnation.—The language of piety, separate from its substantial effects, can only amuse and deceive those who hear, and those who use it.—Malice is ever restless and tormenting; and though disappointed, it still hopes for success: but numbers, power, rage, and subtlety can never destroy those whom God protects. His methods of preserving his people are unnumbered. (Note, Acts. ix. 3—6.) He sometimes leads them into the most imminent danger, to endear their deliverance, and to increase the torment of their persecuting foes. And he can employ one enemy, contrary to his intention, to deliver us from another still more formidable; or he can fill the hands of persecutors with other work, so that they are constrained to postpone their malicious purposes. But we must not expect much comfort in this evil word, which uses the best of men in so base a manner, and which once "crucified the Lord of glory." We should therefore study to pass through it as pilgrims; and to leave it, as they who are departing to a better, that is, a heavenly, country.

AND it came to pass, "when Saul was returned from "following the Philistines, that "it was told him, saying, Behold, David is in "the wilderness of En-gedi.

2 Then Saul took "three thousand chosen men out of all Israel, and "went to seek David and his men upon "the rocks of the wild goats.

3 And he came to the sheep-cotes by the way, where was a cave; and Saul went in "to cover his feet: and "David and his men remained in the sides of the cave.

4 And "the men of David said unto him, Behold, the day of which the LORD said unto thee, Behold, "I will deliver thine enemy into thine hand, that thou mayest do to him as it shall seem good unto thee. Then David arose, and cut off the skirt of "Saul's robe privily.

5 And it came to pass afterward, that "David's heart smote him, because he had cut off Saul's skirt.

6 And he said unto his men, "The LORD forbid that I should do this thing unto my master, the LORD's anointed, to stretch forth mine hand against him, seeing he is the anointed of the LORD.

7 So David "stayed his servants with these words, and "suffered them not to rise against Saul. But Saul rose up out of the cave, and went on his way.

8 ¶ David also arose afterward, and went out of the cave, and cried after Saul, saying, "My lord the king. And when Saul looked behind him, "David stooped with his face to the earth, and bowed himself.

9 And David said to Saul, "Wherefore hearest thou men's words, saying, Behold, David seeketh thy hurt?

10 Behold, this day thine eyes have seen, how that the LORD had delivered thee to-day into mine hand in the cave: and some "bade me kill thee: but mine eye spared thee; and I said, I will not put forth mine hand against my lord; for he is "the LORD's anointed.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIV. V. 1-3. When Saul had repelled the Philistines, he selected three thousand of his troops, and resumed his pursuit of David, who had taken refuge among some uncultivated rocks, inhabited only by wild goats; and Saul, supposing him at a distance, retired into a cave, while his men were absent. But in this very cave David and his company lay concealed. Thus "God delivered Saul into David's hand;" (Note, xlii. 7, 8:) he was absolutely in his power; he could have made no resistance; nay, the manner of his death might have been concealed, till David had taken proper measures to secure himself, and to seize the throne. (Notes, Ps. lvi. xlii. titles.)

V. 4-7. David's men urged very plausibly, that God had brought his enemy into his power, in order to fulfil his promises to him: yet they were greatly mistaken; as in reality the Lord intended to give David an opportunity of exercising faith, patience, and generous kindness; of shewing the tendency of his religion, the tenderness of his conscience, and the steadfastness of his loyalty; for the confutation of his accusers, a rebuke to Saul, and an example to all who read it.—He had a promise of the kingdom, but no command to slay the reigning king, or promise that God would deliver Saul into his hand. (xxvi. 10. Notes, 1 Kings xi. 37. 40.)—Saul had been anointed by God's command, as well as made king over Israel in his providence: he had indeed been rejected; and David had been greatly injured, but he was not his own avenger. David's peculiar circumstances constrained him to defend himself, but not to slay Saul; whom he looked upon as his sovereign, and the LORD's anointed, and not as his rival and persecutor. Note, xxvi. 8-12.) He aimed to perform his present duty, and left his protection and future advancement to God; and he deemed it an atrocious offence to "stretch forth his hand," to hurt even so wicked a prince as Saul, and in defence of his own life. Nay, when he had privily cut off the skirt of Saul's robe, as a demonstration of what he could have done, his heart smote him, lest in this action he had failed of due respect to the LORD's anointed! (Note, 2 Sam. xxiv. 10.) Neither would he allow his men do injure him; though they seem to have been so impatient for security and preferment, that he had much difficulty in restraining and appeasing them.

V. 8-15. Nothing can be imagined more respectful, pathetic, and forcible, than David's conduct and address on this occasion. He shewed all reverence to Saul as his prince, bowing himself before him to the earth: he called him respectfully, "my lord the king," and in token of affection, "my father," being his son-in-law: he avoided all reproaches, and sharp expostulations: he intimated that Saul's prejudice against him arose from slanderous reports; and reminded him, that he had been counselled to take away his life, but would not do it. He adduced the most decisive evidence that he did not mean to injure him; while he repeatedly assured him that his hand should never be upon him. He mildly expostulated with him, on the injustice and unreasonableness of his conduct; and humbly represented himself as beneath the notice of so great a prince, who degraded himself in coming out "after a dead dog, a single flea," an imagined enemy equally insignificant. In illustration of his conduct he quoted the proverb of the ancients, that "wickedness proceedeth from the wicked," that men's actions manifest their dispositions; and if he had been a wicked person, his actions that day would have shewn it. At the same time he plainly and repeatedly warned Saul, that the Lord would judge between them, and both deliver him out of his hand, and avenge his cause upon him—"The LORD will judge,—will avenge," &c.—future, not imperative. (Heb. Notes, xxvi. 13-20.)

V. 16-22. These forcible words, and this generous behaviour, produced a temporary conviction in Saul's mind, of David's excellency, the righteousness of his cause, and the certainty of his advancement; and consequently, that himself was very culpable, and in a ruinous path. Probably, he was in some measure convinced of these things at other times; but they now more deeply affected him; nor could he suppress his emotion, or refuse to acknowledge his convictions. Instead therefore of attempting to destroy David, as he intended, his malice was arrested, and he both spoke well of him, foretold his establishment on the throne, and begged of the Lord to reward him for sparing his life; and he owned that he should not have behaved thus, if David had been in his power. Under this conviction Saul desired of David the security of an oath, that he would not, when king, extirpate his posterity; and David was willing thus to bind himself to his duty; (Note, 2 Sam. xxi. 4-7:) but he did not ask Saul to swear to him, that he would no more seek his life; knowing that he did not duly regard the obligation of an oath: nor would he trust himself with him, being aware how little such transient appearances could be depended on.—Saul's conduct in persecuting David, even when convinced of his excellency, and that he would be advanced to the throne, illustrates the behaviour of the prosperity, "Peace be both to thee, and peace be to thine house, and peace be unto all that thou hast.

7 And now I have heard that thou hast shearers: now thy shepherds which were with us, we hurt them not, neither was there ought missing unto them all the while they were in Carmel.

8 Ask thy young men, and they will shew thee. Wherefore let the young men find favour in thine eyes; for we come in a good day: give, I pray thee, whatsoever cometh to thine hand unto thy servants, and to thy son David.

9 And when David's young men came, they spake to Nabal according to all those words in the name of David, and ceased.

10 ¶ And Nabal answered David's servants, and said, Who is David? and who is the son of Jesse? There be many servants now a days that break away every man from his master.

11 Shall I then take my bread, and my water, and my flesh that I have killed for my shearers, and give it unto men whom I know not whence they be?

12 So David's young men turned their way, and went again, and came and told him all those sayings.

13 And David said unto his men, Gird ye on every man his sword. And they girded on every man scribes and priests in their determined enmity to Christ, notwithstanding they could not resist the wisdom of his words, deny the reality of his miracles, or at all impeach his character. (Notes, John xi. 47, 48. xii. 9—11. Acts v. 33—39.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—7. Wicked men are often interrupted in their evil courses; yet return to them when the restraint is removed, as if delivered from trouble that they might commit more sins: (Note, Jer. vii. 8—11.) but the Lord disappoints their malice; and by bringing them into danger, gives them manifest proof of their folly and wickedness. We should be careful how we interpret events in providence; lest we mistake the opportunity of following our own inclinations, for an approbation of our conduct: and in doubtful cases we must neither judge by appearance, nor be determined by plausible arguments.—An accurate knowledge of the Divine law, an established judgment, and a holy state of heart, are requisite to mark out the path of duty, in some important cases. But it is always safe to deny the suggestions of revenge, covetousness, ambition, impatience, or other selfish principles: it savours more of piety to interpret a providential dispensation as a trial of faith and patience, and an exercise of self-denial, than to consider it as a license for self-indulgence: and a tender conscience will fear a plausible temptation, and "abstain from all appearance of evil."—We should perform all our relative duties from regard to the authority of God; when others violate his law in their conduct towards us, we must not do the same towards them; and in waiting for the performance of his promises, we must use lawful means alone. Under the deepest injuries we must not avenge ourselves, but after the example of David, and of David's Lord, "commit our cause to him that judgeth righteously." (Note, 1 Pet. ii. 18—25.)—Magistracy is the ordinance of God, and confers dignity on those advanced to it, who, in all ordinary cases and lawful things, should be honoured and obeyed: and if they abuse their trust, the Lord will execute vengeance upon them. If persecuted in one city we may flee to another, and use necessary means of self-preservation; but we must not lift up our hands, or adopt offensive measures, against those whom God has placed over us, though like Saul or Nero. (Notes, Rom. xiii. 1—8.)

V. 8—22. It is not enough that we avoid evil ourselves; we should use our influence to restrain others also, or we shall be chargeable before God for it.—Mild language and respectful behaviour, even to wicked and injurious superiors, are ornamental to piety: we must not indeed flatter any one with the hope of impunity in sin; yet we may put the most candid construction on their actions, and satisfy ourselves with manifesting our own innocence, modestly complaining of hard usage, and employing forcible arguments and pathetic expostulations. It is also more prudent to abate envy by seeking to appear inconsiderable, than to excite it by boasting of dignity or excellence.—While we are thankful for having been hitherto preserved from open crimes, we cannot bind ourselves too strongly, in dependence on the grace of God, to avoid them for the time to come: for our conduct as Christians should form a contrast to that of the enemies of true religion; in order to convince all men on what principles we act, and that our cause is worthy of God. The noblest of all victories consists in "overcoming evil with good:" if men in eminent stations had a proper sense of the importance attached to their characters and conduct, it would keep them from debasing themselves by such mean pursuits, as they are often engaged in: and a due reflection on our rational powers, and the unspeakable value of our immortal souls, would have a similar effect upon us all.—They who act conscientiously will find opportunities of confuting their revilers, and of being manifested in the consciences of their most determined enemies: and at length the Lord will plead and avenge their cause.—Flattering and slanderous favourites are the bane of princes: by hearing their words, they prefer their enemies, and persecute their friends; because the clamour of their passions silences the whisper of their consciences.—But the most atrocious sinners have seasons of remorse, when they perceive and are affected with their situation: they are almost persuaded to renounce their sins; they are convinced of the excellency of true Christians, as acting from principles superior, and even contrary, to those which influence their own conduct: they cannot withhold from them a good word and wish, and at once forbode their felicity, and their own misery. Yet as they are not truly humbled or changed, sin and the world reign in their hearts: they acknowledge that they are not so good as some men, but will not confess how very vile they are; they are more careful about their credit and interests in the world, than the forgiveness of their sins; and whilst they confess their own injustice, and their obligations to others, they leave it to the Lord to repay them. They who are experimentally acquainted with the grace of God, will place little dependence on these appearances, especially in those who have long sinned against the light of their own consciences: for there is great reason to fear that these transient affections also will subside, and leave the heart still harder than before.—The grace of God will teach us to forgive and be kind to our enemies, but not to trust those who have repeatedly deceived us: for malice often seems dead, when it is only dormant, and will ere long revive with double force. Yet, whether the Lord employ men, bind their hands, or awe and affect their hearts, so that they lose for a season their inclination to hurt us; the deliverance is from him, an evidence of his love, and an earnest of our final salvation.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXV. V. 1. If Samuel were eighteen years of age at the death of Eli, he must have been at least thirty-eight, when he vanquished the Philistines at Ebenezer. (Notes, vii.) But how many years elapsed, from that time, to his anointing Saul; how long he lived after Saul was made king; how long Saul survived him; or how long Saul reigned in all, are matters of conjecture or calculation, without any certain data to proceed upon. (Note, Acts xiii. 21.) Perhaps Saul survived Samuel three or four years.—Doubtless Samuel, to the end of his days, presided over the seminary of prophets, and, by his prayers, instructions, and example, was very useful in private; though he did not much intermeddle in public business. When he died the people were very sensible of their loss, and of their sin and folly in rejecting him; and, collecting themselves together, made general lamentations for him. Upon this event David removed into the wilderness of Paran, in part of which Israel wandered before they entered Canaan; (Marg. Ref.) perhaps concluding that Saul's malice would be now more unrestrained than ever.

V. 2. (Note, Job i. 3.)—Carmel. Not mount Carmel in the north of Canaan, (1 Kings, xviii. 19:) but another place of the same name belonging to Judah. (Josh. xv. 55.)

V. 3—6. (Marg.) Ref. That liveth, &c. (6.) The words, in prosperity, are not in the original.—David seems to have spoken unadvisedly, in calling a sottish and luxurious wicked man, one "that liveth;" as if his own indigence scarcely deserved the name of life. (Note, 1 Thes. iii. 6—10.)

V. 7, 8. David had not only restrained his men from molesting Nabal's flocks, but protected them against the depredations of their invaders. Note, 14—17.) He might therefore have demanded a reward for his services; but he was rather desirous of becoming Nabal's supplicant, for whatever came to hand in a season of festivity; as he was in great distress, and unwilling to subsist by plunder. (Note, Philem. 8—11.) Nothing could be more modest, respectful, and friendly, than this message was.

V. 10, 11. Nabal knew that David had slain Goliath, and often smitten the Philistines; that he was a man of eminent valour and capacity, and of unblemished reputation; that he was the son-in-law of Saul, and unjustly persecuted; and that in his present necessity he behaved in an unexceptionable manner. But to vindicate his selfish refusal, he abused him and his men as run-away slaves; and thus he foolishly rendered his answer as exasperating as his sword, and ^aDavid also girded on his sword, and there went up after David about four hundred men; ^aand two hundred abode by the stuff.

14 ¶ But one of the young men told Abigail, Nabal's wife, saying, Behold, David sent messengers out of the wilderness to salute our master; and he ^arailed on them.

15 But the men ^{were} ^bvery good unto us, and we were not ^churt, neither missed we any thing, as long as we were conversant with them, when we were in the fields:

16 They were ^aa wall unto us both by night and day, all the while we were with them keeping the sheep.

17 Now therefore know and consider what thou wilt thou do; for ^devil is determined against our master, and against all his household: for he ^{is} ^esuch ^ason of Belial, ^fthat a man cannot speak to him.

18 ¶ Then Abigail ^{made} haste, and ^{took} two hundred loaves, and two bottles of wine, and five sheep ready dressed, and five measures of parched ^{corn}, and an hundred ^{clusters} of raisins, and two hundred cakes of figs, and laid ^{then} on asses.

19 And she said unto her servants, Go on before me; behold, I come after you. ^{But} she told not her husband Nabal.

20 And it was ^{so}, as she ^{rode} on the ass, that she came down by the covert of the hill, and, behold, David and his men came down against her: and she met them.

21 Now David had said, ^{Surely} in vain have I kept all that this ^{fellow} hath in the wilderness, so that nothing was missed of all that ^{pertained} unto him: and ^{he} hath requited me evil for good.

22 ¶ ^{So} and more also do God unto the enemies of David, ^{if} I leave of all that ^{pertain} to him, by the morning light ^{any} that pisseth against the wall.

23 And when Abigail saw David, she hastened, and ^alighted off the ass, and ^ffell before David on her face, and bowed herself to the ground,

24 And ^ffell at his feet, and said, ^{Upon} me, my lord, ^{upon} me ^{let this} iniquity ^{be}: and ^{let} thine handmaid, I pray thee, speak in thine ^audience, and hear the words of thine handmaid.

25 Let not my lord, I pray thee, ^{regard} this ^aman of Belial, ^{even} Nabal: for as his name ^{is}, so ^{is} he; ^{Nabal} ^{is} his name, and folly ^{is} with him: but I thine handmaid saw not the young men of my lord, whom thou didst send.

26 Now therefore, my lord, ^{as} the LORD liveth, ^{and} as thy soul liveth, seeing ^athe LORD hath withholden thee from coming to ^{shed} blood, and ^{from} ^{avenging} thyself with thine own hand, now ^{let} thine enemies, and they that seek evil to my lord, be as Nabal.

27 And now this ^{blessing}, which thine handmaid hath brought unto my lord, let it even be given unto the young men that ^{follow} my lord.

28 I pray thee, ^{forgive} the trespass of thine handmaid: for ^athe LORD will certainly make my lord a sure house; because my lord ^{fighteth} the battles of the LORD, and ^{evil} hath not been found in thee ^{all} thy days.

29 Yet a man is risen to pursue thee, and to seek thy soul: but the soul of my lord shall be ^{bound} in the bundle of life ^{with} the LORD thy God; and the souls of thine enemies, them shall he ^{sling} out, ^{as} out of the middle of a sling.

30 And it shall come to pass, when the LORD shall have done to my lord ^{according} to all the good that he hath spoken concerning thee, and shall have appointed thee ruler over Israel;

31 That this shall be no ^agrief unto thee, nor offence of heart unto my lord, either that thou hast shed blood causeless, or that my lord hath ^{avenged} himself: but when the LORD shall have dealt well with my lord, then ^{remember} thine handmaid.

he could!—It is observable, that he copied Saul's contemptuous way of calling David the son of Jesse, though he pretended he knew not whence he was! (Notes, xx. 30. xxii. 9, 10.)

V. 13. David had watched against anger and revenge when most basely used by Saul; (Notes, xxiv. 1—14;) but he did not expect such language and treatment from Nabal; he was therefore off his guard, and in great indignation he determined to avenge himself. It was also more humiliating to be insulted by such a man, than to be persecuted by the king. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 14—17. This servant not only confirmed what David ^{had} said, concerning his conduct and that of his men; but stated that they had been very ^{useful} to them. (Notes, 7, 8. xxii. 1, 2.) It does not appear, whether he had got intelligence of David's determination, or had only formed a shrewd conjecture from circumstances. But, anxious for his own safety, as well as for that of the family, and not daring to mention his apprehensions to Nabal, who would probably have grossly abused him for his impertinence; he applied to Abigail, complaining of his master, "as such a son of Belial, that a man could not speak unto him:" words not proper to be used by a servant concerning his master, if the urgency of the case had not required them. (Notes, Eph. vi. 5—9. 1 Tim. vi. 1—5. Tit. ii. 9, 10. 1 Pet. ii. 18—25.)

V. 18, 19. Abigail was about to dispose largely of Nabal's property without his consent; but this was necessary for the preservation of him and his family. She was fully satisfied that his obstinacy would ruin them all, if he were made acquainted with her design: the peculiarity of her situation therefore justified her conduct. (Notes, Prov. xxxi. 10—12.)

V. 21, 22. David, in his sober judgment, knew better than to repent of his good deeds; or to think them done in vain, because requited with ingratitude: his determination to destroy, or carry off, every male, at least, of Nabal's family, for his fault, was unjust and cruel in the extreme: and his confirming this with a kind of oath, (though he turned off the imprecation from himself unto his enemies,) was rash, and savoured of profaneness.—If he had been permitted to execute his purpose of revenge, it would have occasioned him much bitter reflection, greatly tarnished his character, and given his enemies an immense advantage against him. (Note, 32, 33.)—It is probable, that his officers approved of his designs against Nabal, as necessary to deter others from insulting them.

V. 23—31. The conduct and address of Abigail, on this emergency, are worthy of admiration. Nabal had insulted David as a run-away slave: but in order to pacify him, Abigail shewed him the reverence due to a superior, and to her sovereign in the purpose of God. Though he was evidently in an unbecoming heat, she took no notice of it; but only intreated him to allow her, as if she had been the criminal, to plead her cause, and to give her a candid hearing. She could not excuse her husband's conduct, and the case did not allow her to veil his infirmities: but she attempted to convert his well-known rashness and insolence into an argument with David, why he should lay aside his resentment. She intimated, that Nabal, (whose very name signified folly,) meant no peculiar affront to him; but only spoke according to his usual way of treating those who applied to him: and it was beneath a person of character and eminence, to notice the rudeness of such a man; but had she been present, the young men would have met with better treatment. With consummate address, she expressed a full confidence, that the Lord had sent her to keep his servant David "from avenging himself with his own hand:" and she solemnly desired, that "as sure as the Lord lived, and as David's soul lived," (Note, xx. 3,) all that sought evil to him, might be as weak and infatuated in their counsels as Nabal: and then he would have nothing to fear from them, for they would effectually ruin themselves. The liberal present, (which she called a blessing, being an expression of her good-will, Marg. Ref.) she represented as unworthy of his notice, but begged that it might be given to his followers. She professed her firm belief that he and his family would be established in the kingdom: she made honourable mention of his great services to Israel, and of his unblameable conduct; and adverted to the injustice of Saul's persecution, whom in honour of his authority she did not mention. She declared her assurance of David's preservation by a remarkable expression, "that his soul would be bound up in the bundle of life with the Lord his God," as men bind up those things which they are afraid of losing. (Notes, Acts xxiii. 11. xxvii. 23—26.) He was irreversibly appointed unto the kingdom, and in consequence was numbered with those whose lives are upheld and protected against all possible dangers, by the almighty power of the everlasting God: while his enemies would be driven into destruction, as a stone is violently thrown from a sling. In pleading for forgiveness, she intimated that it would be vastly more honourable to his character, and comfortable to his mind, when the promises of God were performed, to reflect that he had mastered his anger, than that he had avenged himself, and shed blood without cause; and she concluded with begging of him to think of her, and what she had said, when these things were come to pass. (Note, Luke xxiii. 39—43.)—Nothing seems to have been omitted in this address which suited the occasion; nothing unsuitable added; all was expressed in the most persuasive manner; and the whole manifests Abigail to have been a woman of strong faith and great piety, as well as of singular prudence and ingenuity.

32 And David said to Abigail, "Blessed be the LORD God of Israel, which sent thee this day to meet me:

33 And "blessed be thy advice, and blessed be thou, "which hast kept me this day from coming to shed blood, and from "avenging myself with mine own hand.

34 For in very deed, as the LORD God of Israel liveth, which hath kept me back from hurting thee, except thou hadst "hasted and come to meet me, surely "there had not been left unto Nabal, by the morning light, any that pisseth against the wall.

35 So David received of her hand that which she had brought him, and said unto her, "Go up in peace to thine house; see, I have hearkened to thy voice, and have "accepted thy person.

36 ¶ And Abigail came to Nabal; and, behold, he held "a feast in his house, like the feast of a king; and Nabal's heart was "merry within him, for he was very drunken: wherefore "she told him nothing, less or more, until the morning light.

37 But it came to pass in the morning, when the wine was gone out of Nabal, and his wife "had told him these things, that "his heart died within him, and he became as a stone.

38 And it came to pass about ten days after, that "the LORD smote Nabal, that he died.

39 ¶ And when David heard that Nabal was dead, he said, "Blessed be the LORD, that hath "pleaded the cause of my reproach from the hand of Nabal, and hath "kept his servant from evil: for the LORD "hath returned the wickedness of Nabal upon his own head. And David sent and communed with Abigail, "to take her to him to wife.

40 And when the servants of David were come to Abigail, to Carmel, they spake unto her, saying, "David sent us unto thee, to take thee to him to wife.

41 And she arose, and bowed herself on her face to the earth, and said, Behold, let "thine handmaid be a servant "to wash the feet of the servants of my lord.

42 And "Abigail hasted, and arose, and rode upon an ass, with five damsels of hers that "went after her; and she went after the messengers of David, and became his wife.

43 David also took Ahinoam of "Jezreel; and they were also "both of them "his wives.

44 ¶ But Saul had given "Michal his daughter, David's wife, to "Phalti the son of Laish, which was of "Gallim.

V. 32, 33. Abigail's speech brought David to view the matter in its true light, to bless God for sending her, to pray for her, and to thank her for coming so speedily with such reasonable advice, by which very much mischief and guilt had been prevented. (Note, Prov. xxv. 11, 12.) David repented of his rash oath, and did not think himself bound by it to destroy Nabal and his family. (Notes, 21, 22. Matt. xiv. 8—11.)

V. 34. Any that, &c. This seems to have been a proverbial expression in common use among the Israelites; and it may, with the utmost propriety, be read "every male." (Marg. Ref.)—Though David only intended the death of the men: yet if Abigail and the other women had escaped the massacre, they must have been greatly injured; therefore "the LORD had kept him back from hurting her."

V. 35—38. (Marg. Ref.) When Nabal heard of the imminent danger, to which his own folly had exposed him, at the very time when he was stupefied with drunkenness, and surrounded with those whom he had tempted to the same excess, his terror and vexation were so great, that they sunk his spirits, and in ten days, by the just judgment of God, he ended his life, and left his wealth to others. (Notes, 2 Sam. xiii. 22—29. Dan. v. 5—9. Luke xii. 15—21. xxi. 34—36.)—It seems his provisions were so large, his attendants so numerous, and his mind so dissipated, that he did not miss either Abigail, or her liberal present to David, or the servants who went with her!

V. 39—42. David blessed God that he had been kept from avenging himself: and he considered the death of Nabal, as a proof of the Lord's special regard to him, in pleading his cause against his enemies; as an earnest of further favours, and as suited to awe others from injuring him. (Notes, xxvi. 8—12. Rom. xii. 17—21.)—The prudence, ingenuity, and piety, as well as the beauty, of Abigail, made a deep impression on David; and therefore, according to the custom of those times, he sent messengers with proposals of marriage to her. On the other hand, Abigail firmly believed that David would be king over Israel, and greatly esteemed his pious and excellent character: she therefore deemed his proposals honourable and advantageous, notwithstanding his present difficulties: and with great humility acceded to them; being willing to share his trials, and to submit to any services for his sake. (Note, Gen. xxiv. 51.)

V. 43, 44. It is probable that David had married Ahinoam, as soon as Michal was married to Phalti, and that he afterwards married Abigail also. (Note, 2 Sam. iii. 13—16.) In this he was carried away with the custom of the times, and was connived at, in having more than one wife.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—17. The most honoured servants of God have the measure and period of their usefulness appointed them; but they who persevere unto the end, walking with God, and living consistently with their profession, are happy, though rejected by men, and driven into a retired situation. Their unblemished characters, their good examples, and their testimony to the truth, will produce salutary effects; and their unceasing prayers will be answered in behalf of numbers, after they are removed by death. Indeed whole nations have cause to lament, when faithful instructors, holy men of God, and public intercessors are taken away. But Jesus, our Prophet, Priest, Intercessor, and Judge, ever liveth to take care of those who trust in him.—Riches make men look great in their own eyes, and in the eyes of other worldly people: but they are often lavished on those, who have neither wisdom nor grace; and who so pervert them, as to ruin themselves, and to render numbers wicked or wretched. To be descended from honourable ancestors, forms another branch of man's foolish vanity, (3); yet it frequently is a most severe reproach to the character and conduct of those who value themselves upon it.—Women of virtue, good sense, and amiable qualifications, are often married, for the sake of wealth, to such unsuitable persons as render their whole lives wretched, and exposed to manifold temptations, as well as distresses. It is therefore incumbent on parents, in respect of their children, and on young persons in their own case, to resist all temptations to a conduct, which is likely to be so fatal in its consequences. But prudent and pious relations are an invaluable treasure, and often retard the ruin of those, who have not sense to know their worth.—They, whom the Lord most honours, are frequently very destitute for a season; and, as they will not have recourse to fraud or violence, like others in similar circumstances, they are sometimes constrained to become supplicants to ungodly persons. On such occasions it is proper to speak with modesty of themselves, and with decent respect to those whose assistance they request, wishing them the continuance, increase, or accession of every blessing: but they must be careful, lest they verge towards flattery, and pass such compliments as do not consist with truth, and as tend to confirm sinners in a favourable opinion of themselves.—Worldly men deem their riches their own; but God declares they are another's, and that they must shortly give an account of their stewardship. (Luke xvi. 12.) When they are determined not to relieve the necessitous, they often excuse themselves by railing, and by charging the vices of some poor persons upon all: and by representing almsgiving as an encouragement to idleness, impertinence, and extravagance: nor are the most excellent characters any defence against such undistinguishing invectives, which betray the pride, ignorance, malice, and avarice of the heart from which they proceed.—In imitation of the Lord's example, we are commanded to do good to the evil and ungrateful; and wretched should we all be, if he dealt with us by such rules, as we are often disposed to adopt in our behaviour to our poor brethren. While we enjoy abundance, we should be liberal to the indigent: but many will lavish as much upon one unnecessary, proud, and luxurious feast, or upon the excessive indulgence of their own appetites or vanity; as would be deemed an exorbitant sum to expend in acts of charity. (Note, Luke xiv. 12—14.)—Silence is generally our wisdom, when assaulted by provoking language; otherwise we shall be betrayed into folly and sin: and when the messengers of the Son of David meet with abuse for his sake, they must hold their peace, and report it to their Lord, who will surely and justly resent it.—How changeable are the best of men! how contrary their conduct in one instance, to what might have been expected from another! A small temptation frequently prevails over them, after a greater hath been resisted: for, when off their guard, they are driven away "as a rolling thing before the whirlwind!"—Passionate resolutions, formed without time for reflection or prayer, are the result of Satan's counsel; and under this influence we are capable of imitating the worst actions of the worst of men, and of disregarding all consequences to our character and peace, to the church of God, or to those who rejoice in being thus emboldened in impiety!—Many servants have more wisdom and grace than their masters, and could suggest to them useful hints: but they, who are such sons of Belial, that a man cannot speak to them, will lose this advantage, and will not permit any one to extricate them from the dangers, to which they are exposed by their own imprudence. (Note, 2 Kings, v. 13, 14.)—General rules of submission to superior relations must be interpreted according to circumstances. In great emergencies the form may be dispensed with; and the preservation of a man's life or fortune will justify a failure in exterior indications of respect.—It is honourable when others commend us for those services, of which we say nothing; and when it appears, that we had a right to demand more than we petitioned for.

V. 18—44. In urgent cases despatch is as requisite as prudence: inferior interests should always be sacrificed to preserve the greater: our property, to preserve our lives; our very lives, for the salvation of our souls.—Respect and liberal kindness are proper means of averting wrath: but with wise and godly men, right words are most forcible. When, in mild language, matters are fairly stated, and proper topics adduced, their judgments, affections, and consciences are appealed to; and they cannot but be overcome, if they can be pre-

CHAP. XXVI.

Saul, informed by the Ziphites, pursues David to Achilah, 1-4. David by night comes to Saul's tent, with Abishai, whom he hinders from slaying Saul; but he takes away his spear and cruse, 5-12. David reproves Abner's negligence, protests his own innocence, and expostulates with Saul, 13-20. Saul owns his sin, and returns home, 21-25.

AND the "Ziphites came unto Saul to Gibeah, saying, "Doth not David hide himself in the hill of Achilah, which is before Jeshimon?

2 Then "Saul arose, and went down to the wilderness of Ziph, having "three thousand chosen men of Israel with him, to seek David in the wilderness of Ziph.

3 And Saul pitched in the hill of "Achilah, which is before Jeshimon, by the way. But David abode in the wilderness, and he saw that Saul came after him into the wilderness.

4 David therefore "sent out spies, and understood that Saul was come in very deed.

5 ¶ And David arose, and came to the place where Saul had pitched: and David beheld the place where Saul lay, and "Abner the son of Ner, the captain of his host: and Saul lay in the "trench, and the people pitched round about him.

6 Then answered David and said to Ahimelech the "Hittite, and to "Abishai the son of "Zeruiah, brother to Joab, saying, "Who will go down with me to Saul to the camp? And Abishai said, I will go down with thee.

7 So David and Abishai came to the people by night: and, behold, Saul lay "sleeping within the trench, and his spear stuck in the ground at his bolster: but Abner and the people lay round about him.

8 Then said Abishai to David, "God hath "delivered thine enemy into thine hand this day: now therefore let me smite him, I pray thee, with the spear, even to the earth at once, and I will not "smite him "the second time.

9 And David said to Abishai, Destroy him not:

19 Now therefore, I pray thee, ^alet my lord the king hear the words of his servant : If the LORD have ^bstirred thee up against me, let him ^caccept an offering : but if they be the children of men, ^dcursed be they before the LORD ; for ^ethey have driven me out this day from ^fabiding in ^gthe inheritance of the LORD, saying, Go, serve other gods.

20 Now therefore, let not my blood fall to the earth before the face of the LORD: for ^kthe king of Israel is come out to seek a flea, as when one doth hunt a partridge in the mountains.

21 ¶ Then said Saul, 'I have sinned: return, my son David; for ^mI will no more do thee harm, because ⁿmy soul was precious in thine eyes this day: behold, I have played the fool, and have erred exceedingly.

22 And David answered and said, Behold the king's spear; and let one of the young men come over and fetch it.

23 The LORD render to every man his righteousness and his faithfulness: for the LORD delivered thee into my hand to-day, but ¹I would not stretch forth mine hand against the LORD's anointed.

24 And, behold, ^{as} thy life was much set by this day in mine eyes, so let my life be much set by in the eyes of the LORD, and let him deliver me out of all tribulation.

25 Then Saul said to David, "Blessed be thou, my son David: thou shalt both do great things, and also shalt still 'prevail. "So David went on his way, and Saul returned to his place.

any particular offence; he would offer a sacrifice, that his sin being pardoned, his trials might cease: or, if Saul was instigated to this persecution by the evil spirit, whom God judicially permitted to trouble him, he advised him to seek forgiveness and deliverance in the appointed way. (Notes, xvi. 14-23.) But if wicked men influenced him to it, they might expect severe vengeance, for thus banishing David from the worship of JEHOVAH, and tempting him to idolatry. The clause might be rendered, "they are accursed."—David carefully avoided mentioning Saul's envy and malice, which were the real causes of his conduct: for he did not mean to irritate, but to mollify him.

V. 20. Though David was so very inconsiderable a person, according to his modest representation of himself; (Note, xviii. 23—27;) yet he intimated that if his blood were shed, the Lord would certainly require it. (Note, Jer. xxvi. 12—15.)—The word rendered a partridge, is supposed to mean a kind of bird which was very difficult to be caught, and of very little value.

V. 21—25. The second instance of David's fidelity seems to have affected Saul more than the former. He confessed his guilt and folly in much stronger terms, and even invited David to return to court, and promised that he would not hurt him: he repeated his good words and wishes, and his persuasion that he would prevail and be very eminent. But no evidence appeared, of true repentance to God: and David plainly intimated that he could not trust his promises, and that he expected no recompense from him; but he referred his cause to the Lord, who would protect and deliver him, and do him justice. (Notes, Ps. vi. 3—7. xvii. 1—3. cxli. 6, 7. 2 Thes. i. 5—10.) Thus they parted, to meet no more.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

One crime generally proves an inducement to another. If sin be not dethroned and mortified, it will recover its strength when a suitable temptation is presented; and Satan and his agents will suggest such thoughts as tend to rekindle the smothered flame: thus, after deep convictions and temporary reformatations, men return to their sins, and become worse than ever. The servants of God ought to persevere in a blameless conduct, however injured. Thus it will appear, that they act from a settled purpose of doing good for the Lord's sake; and in some cases, they will need the boldness of a lion, as well as the wisdom of the serpent and the harmlessness of the dove, in order to avoid evil and the appearance of evil, and yet to use proper means of escaping the malice of their enemies.—Confidence in God fortifies the soul against temptations to seek relief by sin; and it often requires as much resolution to restrain the excesses of misjudging zealous friends, as to stand firm against the rage of incensed enemies.—If we would have outward blessings with comfort and reputation, we must wait for them in the path of duty; and when wicked men obstruct the purposes of God and the performance of his promises, he can easily remove them without our help.—We are exposed to so many dangers, whenever we close our eyes, that we should previously examine our state, whether we be ready for death, and then commit ourselves to the keeping of that Almighty Protector who neither slumbereth nor sleepeth; otherwise our necessary repose may confine us, as in a prison, till some awful calamity comes upon us with unexpected destruction. (Notes, 1 Thes. v. 1—3.)—The supposed friends of ungodly men are either incapable of serving them, or they treacherously neglect and expose them; and the pious people, whom they hate and revile, are their most valuable friends, as they persevere in prayers for them and kindness to them.—Good works give energy to persuasive words; and whether we plead our own cause, or the cause of God.

CHAP. XXVII.

David escapes to Gath, and is received by Achish, 1-3. Saul seeks him no more, 4. He asks Ziklag of Achish, 5-7. He invades the adjacent countries, and leads Achish to suppose that he warred against Judah, 8-12.

AND David ^asaid in his heart, I shall now ^{*}perish one day by the hand of Saul: ^b*there is nothing* better for me, than that I should speedily escape ^cinto the land of the Philistines; and Saul shall despair of me, to seek me any more in any coast of Israel: so shall I escape out of his hand.

2 And David arose, and he passed over, with ^athe six hundred men that were with him, unto ^eAchish, the son of Maach, king of Gath.

3 And David dwelt with Achish at Gath, he and his men, every man with his household, even David with his two wives, Ahinoam the Jezreelitess, and Abigail the Carmelitess, Nabal's wife.

4 And it was told Saul that David was fled to Gath: and ^ghe sought no more again for him.

5 ¶ And David said unto Achish, If I have now found grace in thine eyes, let them give me a place in ^{some} town in the country, that I may dwell there: for why should thy servant dwell in the royal city with thee?

6 Then Achish gave him 'Ziklag that day: wherefore Ziklag pertaineth unto the kings of Judah unto this day.

7 And [†]the time that David dwelt in the country of the Philistines was [†]a full year and four months.

8 ¶ And David and his men went up, and invaded ^kthe Geshurites, and ^lthe ^sGezrites, and ^mthe Amaevident integrity and consistency of conduct go further in producing conviction than the utmost powers of eloquence: for want of this confirmation, much sound reasoning and pathetic exhortation pass for unmeaning declamation.—Men's transgressions against God are the cause of their enmities against each other; and no reconciliation has an immovable basis, which is not founded on peace with God through Jesus Christ.—They who drive us from our duty, or tempt us to sin, are our worst enemies; and persecutors, besides murdering men's bodies, must give a dreadful account, as chargeable with murdering the souls of all whom they have driven to apostacy, or to do violence to their own consciences, by the terrors of exile, imprisonment, or death.—In sinning against God, men “play the fool exceedingly.” this the believer perceives; he therefore repents, receives a pardon, and acts more wisely for the time to come; but many others obtain a transient view of the mortifying truth, and close their eyes against it. (Note, Jam. i. 22—25.) Yet eternity will fully discover their exceeding foolishness, and they will never cease to reflect upon their own madness, in stifling their convictions, and holding fast their iniquities.—No good words or fair professions entitle those to our confidence who have long sinned against the light; yet the confessions of obstinate sinners may be useful, in satisfying us that we are in the right way, and shall prevail; and in encouraging us to persevere, expecting our recompense from God alone.

NOTES

CHAP. XXVII. V. 1, 2. David, while reflecting on the inveterate malice of Saul, and the neglect or treachery of his countrymen, lost sight of his having been anointed to be king of Israel, with the annexed promises of God, and the manifold deliverances which he had experienced : so that, being weak in faith, he despaired of safety in the land of Judah ; and he went to Gath, perhaps invited by Achish, but probably without enquiring of the Lord. This measure was calculated to alienate the affections of the Israelites, and to give credit to the slanders of his accusers ; he thus ran himself and his men into temptations to idolatry, and he laid himself under obligations to those, whom he could never favour without betraying the cause of God. (Notes, xxvi. 19. xxviii. 1, 2. xxix. 2, 8. Ps. cxli. title. 1-5.)

V. 3. Achish probably hoped that he should be able to fix David in his interests, and employ him against the Israelites; or, that he should thus secure an advantageous alliance with him, if ever he came to be king of Israel.

V. 4. It does not appear that Saul's malice was abated; but the object of it was out of his reach. (Note, xxvi. 21—25.)

V. 5, 6. David wanted to avoid ostentation, and to escape the effects of envy; and perhaps to be out of the way of temptation, more at leisure for the exercises of religion, and more unembarrassed in his whole conduct, than he could be near the court, and among the nobles of Achish. (Note, Gen. xlvii. 32-34.)—After the division of the land, the Philistines had seized Ziklag; but in this manner it came again into the possession of the Israelites. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 8—12. Probably, the Jeshurites and Gezrites were tribes of the Amalekites, or of Canaanites who were in alliance with them. (Marg. Ref.) We may therefore commend David for attempting to complete the work which Saul had begun; and should not censure the severity with which he conducted the war.—These nations lived to the south of Judah; and David used such equivocal terms in speaking to Achish, as induced him to conclude that he had been fighting against his own countrymen. Intelligence was not then readily lekites: for those nations were of old the inhabitants of the land, "as thou goest to Shur, even unto the land of Egypt.

9 And David smote the land, and left neither man nor woman alive, and took away the sheep, and the oxen, and the asses, and the camels, and the apparel, and returned and came to Achish.

10 And Achish said, "Whither have ye made a road to-day?" And David said, Against the south of Judah, and against the south of the Jerahmeelites, and against the south of the Kenites.

11 And David saved neither man nor woman alive, to bring tidings to Gath, saying, "Lest they should tell on us, saying, So did David, and so will be his manner, all the while he dwelleth in the country of the Philistines.

12 And Achish believed David, saying, He hath made his people Israel utterly to abhor him; therefore he shall be my servant for ever.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Achish, preparing war against Israel, places confidence in David, 1-3. Saul, after having destroyed those who had familiar spirits, fearing the Philistines, and being forsaken by God, goes to the witch of En-dor, and engages to indemnify her, 4-10. She, by his desire, calls up Samuel, who predicts his ruin, 11-19. Saul falls down in despair; but, being prevailed on to take food, he returns to his army, 20-25.

AND it came to pass in those days, that the Philistines gathered their armies together for warfare, to fight with Israel. And Achish said unto David, Know thou assuredly, that thou shalt go out with me to battle, thou and thy men.

2 And David said to Achish, Surely thou shalt know what thy servant can do. And Achish said to David, Therefore will I make thee keeper of mine head for ever.

conveyed, and so no one undeceived Achish; and he believed, that David had so widened the breach between himself and his people, that it could not be healed. (Note, 2 Sam. xvi. 20-23.) Had he, however, known the truth of the case, he would have been convinced that David could not be detached from Israel, or united to their enemies. David's situation powerfully tempted him to this deceit; but it can by no means be justified, or even excused. (Note, xix. 12-17.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The strongest believers cannot wholly exclude the incursions of unbelief, during tedious trials, and when sense and reason bring in no report of deliverance. Many, under sharp temptations, have overlooked former mercies and experiences; forgotten the power and promise of the Lord; and feared that sin and Satan would finally prevail against them. When faith thus staggers, obedience wavers, and sinful expedients prevail; which involve men more and more in difficulties and temptations.—If at any time we lean to our own understanding, and do not ask counsel of God, we are sure to do wrong.—We ought not to quit the path of duty, or to join interests with the enemies of religion, even for self-preservation, or out of care for our families; nor should we willingly contract obligations, where we cannot consistently make requitals of kindness.—It is our wisdom to shun notoriety, and to shelter ourselves from envy; for obscurity is commonly more safe and comfortable, and no less advantageous. Yet we must in no situation be wholly inactive, but attempt something in the cause of God and his people; even though ungratefully required by those whom we would serve.—The fear of man is so ensnaring, that we should, if possible, keep out of those places where doing our duty will expose us to danger or reproach.—An equivocation, which serves the purpose of a lie, bears the same relation to it that a hypocrite does to a profane person; it is only apparently better, and therefore a more dangerous cheat. But though believers often betray their imperfections, they can never be prevailed upon to renounce the service of God, and to unite interests with his enemies, or to become the servants of sin and Satan.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXVIII. V. 1, 2, Achish, when determined to make war against Israel, required David's assistance: and David could not have refused it without the utmost danger. Yet if he had directly promised it; and had then either stood neuter, or gone over to the Israelites, he must have behaved with great ingratitude and treachery: and if he had fought against Israel, he would have been guilty of a great sin, alienated the affections of his people, and perhaps exposed himself to the reproach of having murdered Saul. It seemed therefore impossible that he should extricate himself, with a good conscience and a clear reputation. He, however, returned an insincere and evasive answer, which was intended to gain time, but which Achish understood as a promise of effectual assistance; (Note, xxvii. 8-12;) and on that account promised to make him captain of his guard, or some great officer about his person.

V. 3. (Note, xxv. 1.) Perhaps the death of Samuel, and David's apparent desertion of his people, concurred with Saul's disordered state of mind, to encourage the Philistines to this war. Saul had filled up his measure of iniquity, 3 ¶ Now Samuel was dead, and all Israel had lamented him, and buried him in Ramah, even in his own city. And Saul had put away those that had familiar spirits, and the wizards, out of the land.

4 ¶ And the Philistines gathered themselves together, and came and pitched in Shunem: and Saul gathered all Israel together, and they pitched in Gilboa.

5 And when Saul saw the host of the Philistines, he was afraid, and his heart greatly trembled.

6 And when Saul enquired of the LORD, the LORD answered him not, neither by dreams, nor by Urim, nor by prophets.

7 ¶ Then said Saul unto his servants, Seek me a woman that hath a familiar spirit, that I may go to her, and enquire of her. And his servants said to him, Behold, there is a woman that hath a familiar spirit at En-dor.

8 And Saul disguised himself, and put on other raiment, and he went, and two men with him, and they came to the woman by night: and he said, I pray thee, divine unto me by the familiar spirit, and bring me him up whom I shall name unto thee.

9 And the woman said unto him, Behold, thou knowest what Saul hath done, how he hath cut off those that have familiar spirits, and the wizards, out of the land: wherefore then layest thou a snare for my life, to cause me to die?

10 And Saul swore to her by the LORD, saying, As the LORD liveth, there shall no punishment happen to thee for this thing.

11 Then said the woman, Whom shall I bring up unto thee? And he said, Bring me up Samuel.

12 And when the woman saw Samuel, she cried and the day was come when he was to "descend into battle and perish." He "had put away those that had familiar spirits, and the wizards, out of the land;" probably before the Spirit of the Lord departed from him; or perhaps when troubled with an evil spirit, he charged some of them as the cause of it; or by his zeal in this respect he aimed to atone for his other sins, that the kingdom might not be taken from him; and to shew the people that he had a regard to religion. Whatever were his motive, the measure itself was right. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 4, 5. As Shunem lay far north in the land, in the lot of Issachar, (Josh. xix. 18;) either this invasion was very formidable, or Saul had been very negligent; otherwise the enemy could not have marched thither without being opposed. Saul's excessive terror arose chiefly from a guilty conscience. It is probable, that his contempt of Samuel, his murder of the priests, and his malicious persecution of David, dismayed his heart upon every recollection; and that he foreboded his own approaching doom. (Note, xxiv. 16-22.)

V. 6. "Saul enquired of the Lord," under urgent terror, but without humiliation for sin, or purposes of repentance; and therefore God would not vouchsafe him any answer. He did not enquire, till his doom was sealed; and then only in a hypocritical manner: therefore it was nearly the same as "not enquiring." (Note, 1 Chr. x. 13, 14.) After Abiathar had fled to David, probably, Saul appointed another high priest: yet neither by him, nor by any prophet, nor in any way, could he obtain an answer. (15.) This shewed, that God was greatly displeased with him, and warned him to repent, and to cry for mercy with humble perseverance. (Note, Judg. x. 10-16.) It also proved, that God no longer regarded him as chief magistrate in Israel. (Notes xxiii. 9-13. Ex. xxviii. 30. Num. xxvii. 21.)

V. 7, 8. Saul imagined that a few persons still secretly practised these diabolical arts: but nothing could exceed the presumption of consulting those whom he had, according to the law of God, endeavoured to extirpate. He disguised himself, not only lest the woman should fear to use her incantations if she knew him; but perhaps likewise lest the people should be exasperated against him, if acquainted with his infatuated conduct.

V. 9, 10. Instead of being cut to the heart by the woman's suspicion, which implied the most severe reproof, Saul most profanely swore by the Lord, that the woman should not be punished for violating the Divine law! She would understand this merely as an engagement not to inform against her: but Saul expressly swore, that he would not perform his duty. Indeed both parties acted almost atheistically; when one engaged, and the other was satisfied with the engagement, that no punishment should happen to her!

V. 11. Samuel had anointed Saul, and often counselled him for his good: and though Saul had neglected him during the latter part of his life, yet he now was convinced, that it was better with him, when he regarded his advice. Nothing therefore could now satisfy him, but a conference with the departed prophet: and he was so ignorant, or infatuated, as to suppose, that the woman by means of her familiar spirit, could bring him up for that purpose, even without the Lord's permission! It is probable, that she expected to impose on Saul by some satanical apparition.

with a loud voice: and the woman spake to Saul, saying, Why hast thou deceived me? for 'thou art Saul.

13 And the king said unto her, Be not afraid: for what sawest thou? And the woman said unto Saul, I saw 'gods ascending out of the earth.

14 And he said unto her, *What form is he of? And she said, An old man cometh up: and he is covered with 'a mantle. And Saul perceived that it was Samuel, and he stooped with his face to the ground, and bowed himself.

15 ¶ And Samuel said to Saul, 'Why hast thou disquieted me, to bring me up? And Saul answered, 'I am sore distressed: for 'the Philistines make war against me, and 'God is departed from me, and 'answereth me no more, neither by 'prophets, nor by dreams: 'therefore I have called thee, that thou mayest make known unto me what I shall do.

16 Then said Samuel, 'Wherefore then dost thou ask of me, seeing the LORD is departed from thee, and is become thine enemy?

17 And the LORD hath done 'to him 'as he spake by 'me: for the LORD hath rent the kingdom out of thine hand, and given it to 'thy neighbour, even to David:

20 Then Saul 'fell straightway all along on the earth, and was 'sore afraid, because of the words of Samuel: and there was no strength in him; for he had eaten no bread all the day, nor all the night.

21 ¶ And the woman came unto Saul, and saw that he was sore troubled, and said unto him, Behold, thine handmaid hath obeyed thy voice, and 'I have put my life in my hand, and have hearkened unto thy words which thou spakest unto me:

22 Now therefore, I pray thee, hearken thou also unto the voice of thine handmaid, and let me set a morsel of bread before thee; and eat, that thou mayest have strength, when thou goest on thy way.

23 But he refused, and said, 'I will not eat: but his servants, together with the woman, 'compelled him, and he hearkened unto their voice. So he arose from the earth, and sat upon the bed.

24 And the woman had 'a fat calf in the house; and she hasted, and killed it, and took flour, and kneaded it, and did bake unleavened bread thereof:

25 And she brought it before Saul, and before his servants; and they did eat. Then they rose up, and went away that night.

V. 12—19. It is much disputed, who it was that appeared on this occasion: and the whole narrative manifests that it was no human imposture. Many expositors, ancient and modern, have maintained, that it was Satan personating Samuel; though the text gives not the least intimation of it. Now it is by no means advisable, to give those men any countenance, who, to support a favourite system, put a forced construction upon the words of holy writ, very different to their obvious meaning: and scarcely any of their interpretations can sound harsher, than the insertion in every place, where Samuel is mentioned, 'that it was Satan personating Samuel.' It is indeed argued, that the woman's incantations could have 'no power over a glorified saint: but to this it may fairly be answered, that neither could an evil spirit appear at her call without the Lord's permission. Though the woman was not the cause of Samuel's being sent, Saul's enquiry might be the occasion of it. The word disquieted, seems to be used merely in accommodation to the general notions of mankind on that subject: and the woman's surprise and terror proved, that it was an unusual and unexpected appearance, and not the ordinary effect of her art. It is, however, further urged, that the apparition's discourse tended to drive Saul to despair, which is one of Satan's temptations; and that it contained no exhortations to repentance, which were usual with the prophets. But to this it may be replied, that Elijah's message to Ahaziah, Daniel's address to Belshazzar, and even Christ's discourse in the presence of Judas, were equally calculated to drive each of them to despair; and equally void of exhortations to repent, or proposals of mercy. (Notes, 2 Kings i. 15, 16. Dan. v. 18—28. Matt. xxvi. 21—24.)—Saul had despised Samuel's solemn warnings in his lifetime; yet now he hoped, as it were, in defiance of God, to obtain some counsel and encouragement from him: and why might not God permit the soul of his departed prophet, to appear and confirm his former sentence, and denounce Saul's irrevocable doom? It was not beyond the power of God, nor, that I can see, any way unworthy of him; but rather a declaration of his immutable and irreversible truth and justice. Satan could not have predicted the several events, (which came to pass accordingly, as far as we know,) without being inspired by God to do so: and it would give far more countenance to consulting witches, to suppose that he inspired Satan to prophesy by them, than that Samuel was sent with this tremendous message from God, when Saul consulted one of them. Indeed this would most powerfully discourage such attempts; as the request of the rich man in hell to Abraham, being entirely vain, is calculated to discourage praying to departed saints. (Note, Luke xvi. 24—26.) The local situation of departed spirits is so concealed from us, that the circumstance of the spirit apparently 'arising out of the earth,' forms no real objection against its being the soul of Samuel: and the expression, 'shalt thou and thy sons be with me,' means no more, than that they should be in the eternal world. The transaction was suited to impress the idea of a future state, and it determined nothing about the different conditions of the righteous and the wicked. Upon the whole, there appears much solemnity, in God for once permitting the soul of a departed prophet to make his appearance, as a witness from heaven; and in sending him to confirm the word which he spake on earth, (evinced, that the words of the prophets would surely take effect;) and to sit in judgment upon a proud enemy of God, who foolishly sought encouragement in his impenitency, by the most atrocious crimes. This interpretation is certainly more obvious, and suited to the apprehensions of the unlearned reader, and according to the general simplicity of the Scriptures: and nothing short of unanswerable arguments and objections, should constrain us to suppose, that when the Holy Spirit said Samuel, he meant Satan, not speaking by Samuel, as he did by the serpent and by the demoniacs; but actually counterfeiting his shape, and speaking with his voice, though Samuel himself was in every sense absent from the place. The venerable appearance of Samuel, or somewhat that he spoke, convinced the woman that it was Saul who consulted her. Saul's bowing down before Samuel, was not an act of religious worship, any more than Abigail's bowing down before David. The answer of Samuel was very suitable to his character, and to the occasion. It was entirely in vain for Saul to consult the servant, when the Lord was become his enemy: the Lord was only doing to him, or for himself, (17, Marg.) as he declared he would: and as Samuel knew him to be finally given up, he neither gave him counsel nor comfort. The woman first saw the appearance: but afterwards Saul seems to have seen it, as well as to have heard the words spoken. Some think, that neither Saul's servants, nor the woman, heard what passed.

V. 20—25. Saul, though terrified even to desperation, was not humbled. A miserable state he was indeed reduced to, when the witch was his only comforter! But he did not confess his sins; and, as far as we can learn, he offered no sacrifices, and presented no supplications: nor does he seem to have expressed any concern about his sons, or his people, or to have attempted any escape; but in sullen despair to have rushed upon his doom.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—10. When we in the least deviate from the plain path of duty, every circumstance tends to draw us further aside, and increase our perplexity and temptation. Needless intimacies with the avowed enemies of true religion, or obligations to them, will reduce us, ere we are aware, to the necessity of being unfaithful to God, or treacherous and ungrateful to our benefactors: and we shall scarcely ever be able to speak with that candour and simplicity which become Christians. (Note, 1 Kings, xxii. 4.)—When death has removed, or persecution expelled, the ministers and servants of God, a land is deprived of its best defence, and its enemies have their best opportunity of preparing war against it. Hypocrites are frequently very zealous against those crimes to which they are not tempted, or from which they may suffer detriment; and apostates frequently commit those sins, which they once were most earnest in opposing. Ungodly persons fear the reproach of man, or the punishments denounced by human laws, more than the wrath of God: they do not therefore forsake their sins, but dissemble their real characters, and conceal their conduct; and deem all well, if they can escape detection: but frequently they are employed to rebuke or correct each other, either for their present conviction, or their future deeper condemnation. When habits of perjury, or profane swearing, have been contracted, the sacred name of God, and the most solemn oaths, are often introduced in the midst of the most horrible wickedness, and made the obligations and encouragements to the most enormous crimes! But the atrocious guilt of such impiety cannot be expressed. Consulting witches, or diviners of any kind, real or pretended, is a malignant and ignorant attempt to gain intelligence or assistance from some creature, when it cannot be had, or is not sought, from the Lord in the path of duty; and is therefore essentially idolatry, and virtually the worship of the devil. Note, Ex. xxii. 18.)

V. 11—25. Many, who despise the servants of God while they live, are so far convinced of their wisdom and fidelity, that they vainly wish for their counsel and instruction, in distressing circumstances, after their death. But in that blessed world, to which they are removed, they have done with fear,

CHAP. XXIX.

David attends Achish, which offends the lords of the Philistines, 1—5. Achish dismisses him with commendations, 6—11.

NOW ^athe Philistines gathered together all their armies to ^bAphek: and the Israelites pitched by a fountain which is in ^cJezreel.

2 And ^dthe lords of the Philistines passed on by hundreds, and by thousands: but ^eDavid and his men passed on in the rereward with Achish.

3 Then said the princes of the Philistines, What do these Hebrews ^fhere? And Achish said unto the princes of the Philistines, Is not this David, the servant of Saul the king of Israel, which hath been with me ^gthese days, or these years, and I have ^hfound no fault in him since he fell ⁱunto me unto this day?

4 And the princes of the Philistines were wroth with him; and the princes of the Philistines said unto him, ^jMake this fellow return, that he may go again to his place which thou hast appointed him, and let him not go down with us to battle, lest in the battle he be an adversary to us: for wherewith should he reconcile himself unto his master? ^kshould it not be with the heads of these men?

5 Is ^lnot this David, of whom they sang one to another in dances, saying, Saul slew his thousands, and David his ten thousands?

6 ¶ Then Achish called David, and said unto him, Surely, ^mas ⁿthe LORD liveth, ^othou hast been upright, and ^pthy going out and thy coming in with me in the host, ^qis good in my sight; for I have not found evil in thee, since the day of thy coming unto me unto this day: nevertheless, ^rthe lords favour thee not.

favour, and affection, and are become far more determined than ever in the service and cause of God; and were they to appear, they would denounce the doom of impenitent sinners, with more dreadful decision than before. Wretched indeed are they, from whom God is for ever departed! What can they expect either from good or evil men, holy or unholy spirits? Neither the servants, nor the enemies, of the Lord can do them any service, and every thing combines to drive them to desperation. This, Satan labours to effect, and he is sometimes permitted to succeed: nay, the very testimony of God's word and ministers concurs in convincing the unhappy wretches "that there remains nothing, but a certain fearful looking-for of judgment, and fiery indignation!" while the remembrance of former crimes, convictions, warnings, and relapses into sin, combine to assure them of the certainty and justice of their doom. Yet all these things do not humble or soften them; for it is "impossible to renew them to repentance:" and not having believed Moses and the prophets, neither will they be "persuaded though one rose from the dead:" (Note, Luke xvi. 27—31.) but either in sullen or in furious despair they wait and meet their doom! In every age God sets up a few such beacons for a tremendous warning to their fellow-sinners, not to listen to temptations, not to sin against conviction, or despite the word of God; and to beware of hypocrisy, apostacy, procrastination, or other great wickedness: for none are thus given up of God, who have not provoked him to it by their previous crimes. But while one relenting thought remains, let no sinner ever suppose himself in this awful case, (Note, Heb. x. 26—31.) God will not indeed hear the prayer of the unhumiliated and impenitent; and many inquire of him in vain, because they are not in earnest: when therefore they do not meet with encouragement, they detect their own hypocrisy, by giving up their religious duties, plunging again into sin, and seeking help from the world, and "the god of this world." Let the discouraged, but sincere and earnest, enquirer persevere in knocking at mercy's gate, until it be opened: let him humble himself more and more before God, and determine to live and die supplicating his favour; and he will be sure at length to succeed. Let us all learn "to seek the LORD, while he may be found, and to call upon him while he is near," and without reserve to obey his voice, and do his will. Finally, though subjects suffer with their wicked governors, and children with their parents; either it is for their own sins, or else their sufferings "will work for them a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIX. V. 2. David, &c. It may be reasonably supposed, that David was undetermined how to act on this occasion, and waited with a secret hope that the Lord would help him out of this very great difficulty, as indeed he did in a very wonderful manner. (Note, xxviii. 1, 2.) He was influenced by fear of man too much, in so readily consenting to attend Achish, when he might have framed very plausible excuses for declining that service. (Note, Prov. xx. 25, 26.)

V. 4—6. These lords, or princes, possessed so much authority in their own cities, and in the camp at the head of their troops, and were so decided against employing David, that Achish would not venture their displeasure in retaining him. 7 Wherefore now return, and go in peace, that thou ^adisplease not the lords of the Philistines.

8 And David said unto Achish, ^b"But what have I done? and what hast thou found in thy servant, so long as I have been ^cwith thee unto this day, ^dthat I may not go fight against the enemies of my lord the king?"

9 And Achish answered and said to David, I know that thou ^eart good in my sight, ^fas an angel of God: notwithstanding, the princes of the Philistines have said, He shall not go up with us to the battle.

10 Wherefore ^gnow rise up early in the morning, with thy master's servants that are come with thee: and as soon as ye be up early in the morning, and have light, depart.

11 So David and his men rose up early to depart in the morning, to return into the land of the Philistines. ^hAnd the Philistines went up to Jezreel.

CHAP. XXX.

The Amalekites burn Ziklag, and carry captive the women and children, 1, 2. David and his men are greatly distressed, 3—5: but enquiring of God, he is encouraged to pursue them, 6—10. He obtains intelligence of them from an Egyptian slave, 11—15. He smites them, recovers all, and takes much spoil, 16—21. His law for dividing it, 22—25. He sends presents to his friends, 26—31.

AND it came to pass, when David and his men ^awere come to Ziklag on the third day, that ^bthe Amalekites had invaded the south and Ziklag, and smitten Ziklag, and burned it with fire;

2 And had taken the women captives, that ^cwere therein: they ^dslew not any, either great or small, but carried ^ethem away, and went on their way.

3 ¶ So David and his men came to the city, and, behold, ^fis was ^gburned with fire; and their wives, lords, would have been honourable to David, if they had not been in part the effect of deception. (Note, xxviii. 8—12.) When Achish swore by JEHOVAH, that he did not send David away for any suspicion that he entertained of him, he shewed that he had collected some notions at least concerning the true God and his worship.

V. 8—12. (Marg. Ref.) David could not but rejoice at this occurrence; yet he was unwilling that Achish should think he did; and therefore he pretended a desire "to fight with the enemies of my lord the king." (Note, 2 Sam. xvi. 15—19.) Achish would understand these words to mean the Israelites; but they were ambiguous, as several of his speeches were on this occasion: so hard is it in such circumstances to avoid all dissimulation and flattery, either from fear or courtesy!

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Whilst presumptuous sinners are given up to the effects of their own counsels, and driven headlong to destruction, the sins of the upright are repented of and pardoned; and the Lord takes care both of their peace and reputation. He has various methods of extricating us out of difficulties, when we can perceive no way of escaping: and while ungodly men pursue their own purposes, and follow their own judgments, he secretly influences them to such determinations, as subserve the good of his people.—Reputation, esteem, and affection, frequently become snares to us; whilst reproaches, contempt, and injurious suspicion prove beneficial: and the ill usage of the wicked, by which we are driven from them, is much better for us, than that friendship which draws us among them.—When worldly people have no evil thing to say of us, but will bear testimony to our uprightness, we need desire no more from them: and this we should aim to acquire by prudence, meekness, and a blameless life. But their flattering commendations are almost always purchased by improper compliance, or some measure of deception, and commonly may cover us with confusion.—It is seldom prudent to place great confidence in one who has changed sides; except as the fear of God influences a true convert to conscientious fidelity.—Obscurity, or the company of those who are of one heart with us, is generally more safe, comfortable, and honourable, than high stations in the palaces of the ungodly. Thus David in the cave was more worthy of our imitation, than when in a favourite in the camp of king Achish: and he never had a greater deliverance, than when he was dismissed from that ensnaring service.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXX. V. 1—3. Ziklag was distant from the camp of the Philistines, about three days' march; and David did not receive an authentic account of the battle at Gilboa, till two days after his return thither. But it does not thence follow, that the battle was not fought on the morrow after Saul consulted the witch of Endor, as some have thought, (xxviii. 19;) for the narrative of Saul's conduct is perfectly distinct from that which relates to David and to the Philistines: and it is not said, at what time Saul went to Endor.—The Lord had extricated David reputably from his ensnaring connexion with Achish; but he severely rebuked him for his misconduct, by the calamity that came upon Ziklag in his absence. (Notes, 2 Chr. xviii. 31. xix. 1—3.)—He might reasonably have expected that the Amalekites would and their sons, and their daughters, were taken captives.

4 Then David and the people that were with him, 'lifted up their voice and wept, until they had no more power to weep.

5 And David's 'two wives were taken captives, Ahinoam the Jezreelitess, and Abigail, the wife of Nabal the Carmelite.

6 And David 'was greatly distressed; for 'the people spake of stoning him, because the soul of all the people was 'grieved, every man for his sons and for his daughters: but 'David encouraged himself in the LORD his God.

7 And David said to 'Abiathar the priest, Ahimelech's son, I pray thee bring me hither the ephod. And Abiathar brought thither the ephod to David.

8 And David 'enquired at the LORD, saying, Shall I pursue after this troop? shall I overtake them? And 'he answered him, Pursue; for thou shalt surely overtake them, and without fail recover all.

9 ¶ So David went, he and the six hundred men that were with him, and came to the brook Besor, where those that were left behind stayed.

10 But David pursued, he and four hundred men: for two hundred abode behind, which were 'so faint that they could not go over the brook Besor.

11 And they found an Egyptian in the field, and brought him to David, and 'gave him bread, and he did eat; and they made him drink water;

12 And they gave him a piece of a cake of figs, and two clusters of raisins: and when he had eaten, 'his spirit came again to him: for he had eaten no bread, nor drunk any water, 'three days and three nights.

13 And David said unto him, To whom belongest thou? and whence art thou? And he said, I am a young man of Egypt, servant to an Amalekite; and 'my master left me, because three days ago I fell sick.

14 We made an invasion upon the south of 'the Cherethites, and upon the coast which belongeth to Judah, and upon the south of 'Caleb; and we burned Ziklag with fire.

15 And David said unto him, 'Canst thou bring me down to this company? And he said, 'Swear unto me by God, that thou wilt neither kill me, 'nor deliver me into the hands of my master, and I will bring thee down to this company.

16 And 'when he had brought him down, behold, they were spread abroad upon all the earth, 'eating, and drinking, and dancing, 'because of all the great spoil that they had taken out of the land of the Philistines, and out of the land of Judah.

17 And David smote them from the twilight even unto the evening of 'the next day: 'and there escaped not a man of them, save four hundred young men which rode upon camels, and fled.

18 And David recovered all that the Amalekites had carried away: and David rescued his two wives.

19 And 'there was nothing lacking to them, neither small nor great, neither sons nor daughters, neither spoil, nor any thing that they had taken to them: David recovered all.

20 And David took all the flocks and the herds, which they drove before those other cattle, and said, 'This is David's spoil.

21 And David came to the 'two hundred men, which were so faint that they could not follow David, whom they had made also to abide at the brook Besor: and they went forth to meet David, and to meet the people that were with him: and when David 'came near to the people, he 'saluted them.

22 ¶ Then answered all the 'wicked men and men of Belial, of 'those that went with David, and said, 'Because they went not with us, we will not give them ought of the spoil that we have recovered, save to every man his wife and his children, that they may lead them away, and depart.

23 Then said David, Ye shall not do so, 'my brethren, with that 'which the LORD hath given us, 'who hath preserved us, and delivered the company that came against us into our hand.

24 For who will hearken unto you in this matter? 'but as his part is that goeth down to the battle, so shall his part be that 'carrieth by the stuff: they shall part 'alike.

25 And it was so from that day 'forward, that he made it a statute and an ordinance for Israel unto this day.

watch their opportunity of retaliating; and his fear of offending Achish made him very improvident, in leaving the city and the women and children in it, without any adequate guard.—But the Amalekites were wonderfully restrained from slaying any of them, after the example set them: (Note, xxvii. 8—12;) preferring the profit of enslaving them, to the pleasure of revenge: for God intended to rebuke his servant, but not to permit his family and friends to be destroyed. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 6. The loss of his wives, the desolations of the city, and the bitterness of his followers, (Marg. Ref.) who, not entirely without reason, were enraged against him for thus exposing their families, all combined to enhance David's distress: at the same time he could not but consider his calamities as resulting from unbelief, in leaving the land of Judah, in being so much afraid of Achish, and in neglecting to consult the Lord. Yet in the midst of all these complicated troubles, his spirit was soon calmed and encouraged: he neither murmured against God, nor resented the rage of his soldiers, nor despaired of redress, nor confided in his own valour or conduct; "but he encouraged himself in the LORD his God." (Notes, Gen. xxxii. 6—12.) He meditated upon his perfections, upon his promises in general to all believers, and in particular to him; and his own experience of the faithfulness of God, as well as his wonderful works of old in behalf of his worshippers: and upon the relations in which he stood to those, who had been enabled to choose him as their salvation and portion. Thus he was encouraged to expect forgiveness, protection, help, and a favourable event, notwithstanding external appearances. (Note, xvii. 34—37.)

V. 7—10. Circumstanced as David was, no time was to be lost; and as his troubles originated from neglecting to enquire of the Lord, he immediately consulted him by the high priest: (Note, xiv. 16—23.) His answer quieted the minds of his followers; so that after their long march they were willing to go in pursuit of the ravagers, without taking rest, or regular refreshment. But the fatigue of the former march continued in this new expedition, and the anguish of their spirits, rendered a part of the company so faint, that they could proceed no farther. David, however, though his small troop was thus reduced, and he might fear that the others would be unable to proceed, still "encouraged himself in the LORD his God." (Note, Judg. vii. 4.)

V. 11—15. This sick slave was considered of small value to his master, and was likely to be an encumbrance; the life of a fellow-creature was rated at nothing; and so he was inhumanly left to perish, though he might have been carried on one of the camels: but in the righteous providence of God, this cruelty of his master occasioned the destruction of the invading army; whilst David's kindness to a perishing stranger and slave was the means of his signal success, and proved true policy! (Marg. Ref.)—This slave "fell sick on the third day" before, (13. Heb.) yet it is said that he had been without meat and drink three days and three nights. (12. Matt. xii. 40.)

V. 16—19. It is likely, the Amalekites knew, that the Israelites and the Philistines were engaged in war at a great distance: and therefore, deeming themselves secure, they very imprudently began to riot on the abundance which they had taken, without placing guards to give notice of an enemy's approach. So that David and his little troop came on them unawares, and made a dreadful and long continued slaughter of them; and recovered all their spoil. (8.)

V. 20. Besides the cattle, which had been taken from the several countries which the Amalekites had ravaged, it is probable that David entered their lands, and fetched away some of their cattle also.

V. 22—25. (Marg. Ref.) No doubt, many of David's men had profited by his example and instructions: yet there were also wicked men, even "men of Belial," among them; who aimed not only to take all the spoil, but likewise to seize the property of their fellow-soldiers; because they had not been able to go with them. But David's answer was full of piety, equity, and meekness, and well worthy of careful notice; and it prevailed against their unjust demands. Had he hearkened to these "men of Belial," the others would have gone away disgusted; and the consequences might have been permanently evil: but by thus mildly taking up the affair, he conciliated the minds of the well-disposed, and silenced the injurious party.—This edict was different from that, by which the spoil of the Midianites had been divided, (Notes, Num. xxxi. 25—47:) but that related to the whole people; this only to the soldiers, some of whom went to battle, and others guarded the baggage.

V. 26—31. No doubt David considered those, who secretly favoured and assisted him, during Saul's persecutions, as his steady friends: but, sending a blessing to them at this crisis, from the spoil of the enemies of God and his people, was the result of genuine policy, and served to remove obstructions to his advancement to the throne. (Notes, 1 Chr. xii. 1—8.)—He sent no presents to the Ziphites, or to the men of Keilah: (Notes, xxiii. 1—13. 19—25. xxv. 1, 2:); for, though enemies should be helped, when in distress; friends alone are entitled to our confidence, gratitude, and liberality.—It is evident, that some of the places, here mentioned, were not situated in the lot of Judah: and David had passed over Jordan, to place his parents under the protection of the king of Moab, whose kingdom was near to Aroer. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—15. When we leave our families, we cannot foresee what may befall them, or ourselves, ere we return: we ought therefore to commit each other to the protection of God; and to render him unfeigned thanks when we meet, from time to time, in peace and safety.—It is wisdom on all occasions to moderate our expectation of earthly comfort; lest we should, by being too sanguine, meet with the more distressing disappointments.—Many of our troubles may be traced back to our imprudence; all of them in one way or other originate from our sins.—Inordinate passions blind men's minds: excessive fear of one danger, causes them to overlook those which are still more formidable: and they, who give offence to others, should prepare for retaliations. But the Lord restrains the rage of the most barbarous; while one selfish principle counteracts another, wicked men proceed as far as his purposes require, and no further; and by various instruments he rebukes and chastens his offending people, but restrains all from doing them essential detriment. (Note, Ps. lxxvi. 10.)—Generous minds are most susceptible of rational affections: and the bravest are not disgraced by mourning the loss or the sufferings of beloved relations: but all our passions are prone to excess; and unless the fear of God possess the heart, men fret against him under afflictions, and vent their impatience against the guilty or innocent occasions of them: and thus our helpers may become our terror, or our destroyers.—Conscious guilt and a sense of the Divine displeasure form the keenest aggravations of a believer's distress: yet the very reflection, which pains and humbles his heart, silences the tempest of his passions, and induces hope in God, who chastens that he may not condemn.—“The Lord is rich in mercy, and ready to forgive;” so that the greatest sinner, when first he approaches the mercy-seat in the Redeemer's name, with penitent confessions and fervent prayers, may be encouraged to expect salvation for his soul, and assistance in all his troubles. But the believer, who hath long trusted in his mercy, chosen him for his portion, walked with him in his ordinances, sought his glory, and experienced his faithfulness, power, and love; notwithstanding failures and conscious unworthiness, may with confidence “encourage himself in the Lord his God,” amidst the most extreme danger and distress.—Bitter complaints and mutual recriminations are of no use in the hour of trouble: we are then called to perform the present duty; and to enquire the will of God by searching the Scriptures, and prayer. When our sins are forgiven, and we act by the Lord's direction, we shall soon recover all, and be enriched by our very losses and trials: and even if our companions cannot, or will not, help us, “the Lord of hosts will be for us, the God of Jacob will be our refuge.”—Some of those, who are cordially attached to the cause of God, are less capable of hard services, than others: but he mercifully accepts them, and so should their brethren.—It is good policy, as well as charity, to relieve the meanest in their distresses; for in some great emergency God may enable them to render us the most important services: but he will certainly punish inhumanity to the poor and the sick; especially that of masters to their sick and afflicted servants.

V. 16—31. The success and abundance of ungodly men, increasing their presumption, and being spent on their lusts, frequently accelerate their destruction; and sensual indulgence is a common introduction to “weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth.”—In the most favoured companies selfish men will be found, who, being ungrateful to God for his kindness, will enrich or pamper themselves, while they leave their more deserving, though less prosperous, brethren to starve. But they, who consider the Lord, as the Giver of their abundance, will dispose of it with equity and in liberality: they will employ their influence to restrain the injustice of others; and take occasions from evil suggestions to establish useful precedents: and instead of spending their wealth on their lusts, will share it with their friends, and with the poor; thus subserving their most important future interests, with the very “mammon of unrighteousness!” (Notes, Luke xvi. 1–13.)—Yet how far do they all come short of the Saviour, who divides the spoil of his victories with the meanest of his followers! (Notes, Ps. lxxviii. 18. Eph. iv. 11–13.) But, though the rebellious are now invited to accept of mercy and participate his favour: yet if they will not have him to reign over them, they shall receive no benefit from his redemption; the blessings of which will be confined to his friends, who trust and love him, and keep his commandments.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXI. V. 2. Probably, Saul never informed his sons, of what he had been told concerning his own, and their approaching death: so that they were in the army, and slain before his eyes. Thus David's way to the throne was cleared: for if a large proportion of Israel stood up for the rights of Ish-bosheth, who was a very insignificant person, (2 Sam. ii. iv.) doubtless far more would have been strenuous for Jonathan. And, though he would readily have given place; yet his brethren and the people in general would no doubt have made much opposition to David's succession to the kingdom. (Note, xxiii. 17.)

V. 3—6. Saul, when grievously wounded, and unable to resist or to flee, expressed no concern about his immortal soul; but only desired to be speedily despatched, that the Philistines might not insult over him, and put him to pain! (Note, Judg. ix. 50—57.) His armour-bearer seems neither to have feared death, the guilt of murder, nor the wrath of God: but he had such reverence for the person of his prince, that he was incapable of lifting up his hand against him. Thus Saul became his own murderer; and his armour-bearer, in a mad expression of respect, imitated his example. Ahithophel and Judas the traitor likewise murdered themselves; and I do not recollect any other instances in Scripture of this practice; unless Ahimelech be added, who was mortally wounded, when he ordered his armour-bearer to despatch him; and Zimri, who burnt his palace, and himself in it. (Marg. Ref.) When the character of these suicides is considered, it confirms the opinion, which has been advanced, of the enormous guilt and direful consequences of this crime; (Note, Ezech. xx. 13.) Men, either madly presuming on the mercy of God, or despairing of it, to escape temporal sufferings or disgrace, despise his gift of life, and thus rush, uncalled upon his tribunal, by an act of direct rebellion against his authority, and in proud defiance of his justice, with the guilt of all their unrepented crimes upon their heads! Yet so exceedingly hath Satan blinded men's minds, that this worst of murders, when really intended, has been held honourable in very many ages, places, and situations, and has often been committed out of vain glory, in imitation of, or from affection to, those who have obtained renown among their fellow-sinners.—The Jews say, that Doeg was Saul's armour-bearer, having been preferred for slaying the priests of the Lord: and 9 And they cut off his head, and stripped off his armour, and sent into the land of the Philistines round about, to publish it in the house of their idols, and among the people.

10 And they put his armour in the house of Ashtaroth; and they fastened his body to the wall of Beth-shan.

heard of that which the Philistines had done to Saul,

12 All the valiant men arose, and went all night, and took the body of Saul, and the bodies of his sons, from the wall of Beth-shan, and came to Jabesh, and burnt them there.

13 And they took their bones, and buried them under a tree at Jabesh, and fasted seven days.

if so, his death was worthy of his life. (Notes, xxii. 9—19.)—Saul's sons and servants died in the performance of their duty to him and to their country: but he and his armour-bearer died in direct violation of God's commandment.

V. 7. The inhabitants of the cities, near the valley of Jezreel, and of the cities near "the passage of Jordan," or the place where men passed over that river; (Heb.) were so affrighted at these events, that they fled, and left their habitations to the conquerors.—These were the effects of rejecting the Lord and his prophet, and demanding a king! (Notes, viii. 1—9. xii. 16—19. Hos. xiii. 10, 11.)

V. 8—10. The Philistines sent the head of Saul to be fastened in the temple of Dagon, and his armour in that of Ashtaroth; as memorials of their victory, and in honour of their idols: (Notes, v. 1—5. Judg. xvi. 23, 24. Dan. v. 1—9.) But his body, and the bodies of his sons, they fastened to the wall of Beth-shan, a city near to the field of battle. Thus Saul escaped being tortured by them, but no dead body could be more inhumanly abused.—As the death of Saul made way for David to ascend the throne, the Philistines had no great cause to triumph on that account. (Notes, 2 Sam. v. 17—25. xxi. 15—22. Is. xiv. 28—32.)

V. 11—13. This conduct of the men of Jabesh-gilead was a becoming expression of gratitude to Saul, as their deliverer in the beginning of his reign, and a proper rebuke to the barbarity of the Philistines. (Notes, xi. 2 Sam. ii. 5—7. xxi. 9—14.) It is probable that they burned the bodies, lest the Philistines should recover, and further abuse, them. For though burning the dead was not customary in Israel, it was not prohibited. They fasted seven days, each day until the evening, as a token of their sorrow and humiliation under the Divine rebuke. But there was no general lamentation made for Saul, as there had been for the prophet Samuel. (Notes, xxv. 1. 2 Chr. xxi. 18—20. Ec. vi. 3—5. viii. 9, 10.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The objects of the Divine displeasure are not only wretched themselves, but likewise the cause of calamities to all around them: yet, while the righteous are often involved with them in temporal troubles and death; they will be separated in the other world, and possess eternal happiness, when the wicked sink into everlasting misery: and frequently men's behaviour, in the closing scene of life, strongly indicates their state beyond the grave.—How should we watch and pray, that we may not be given up to presumption, or despair; but enabled patiently to bear the evils of life, and quietly to hope for the salvation of the Lord, that Satan may not tempt us to the horrible sin of self-murder!—It is comparatively of little consequence, in what manner, or with what circumstances, we die, or what is done with our dead bodies: if our souls be but saved; our bodies likewise will be raised at last, incorruptible and glorious. But to be anxious to avoid pain or disgrace from men, and not to "fear Him who is able to destroy both body and soul in hell," is the extreme of infatuation and impiety. yet even here also, ungodly men are often disappointed. Indeed, every worldly object that is inordinately craved, will become our trouble; and the desire, the possession, and the loss of it will all be sources of uneasiness to us.—When inhumanity and impiety attend prosperity, it will be transient: and the successes of ungodly men are commonly introductions to their misfortunes.—It behoves us to shew gratitude to our benefactors, even though they be wicked men; and to venture danger and trouble in doing it: yet how ineffectual is the kindness and respect of fellow-creatures to those, who are enduring the wrath of God!—Whilst pompous funerals, magnificent monuments, and flattering encomiums combine to honour the memory of some illustrious deceased impenitent sinner, his poor soul is suffering the extremest misery and disgrace, in the regions of darkness and despair! "This also is a sore vanity." (Note, Luke xvi. 22, 23.) May we seek and find that honour which cometh from God only!

THE SECOND BOOK OF

OTHERWISE CALLED

THE SECOND BOOK OF THE KINGS.

This book derives the name, by which it is generally called, from the prophet Samuel, though he had been dead some time, when the history contained in it commences: perhaps because he anointed that king, whose actions it records; or because the prophets by whom it was written were raised up in those seminaries which he instituted. The names, however, of the books are no part of divine revelation; and its authority, as a part of the sacred oracles, is not at all lessened, by conceding, that the title given it in the Septuagint, and the Vulgate, namely, "The Second Book of the Kings," is more appropriate.—The book itself most evidently continues the preceding narrative, and introduces that which follows: and its authenticity is considered as undoubted in every subsequent part of Scripture. The Psalms abound with references to the events recorded in it. (Ps. iii. title. lxxii. lxxviii. 71, 72. lxxxix. 19—36. cxxxii.) The narrative of David's fall in the matter of Uriah, related only in this book, is mentioned in other parts of Scripture. (1 Kings xv. 5. Ps. li. title. Matt. i. 6.) In short, wherever the covenant made with David, concerning the regal authority, as perpetuated in his family, and at length inherited by the Messiah to descend from him; or the promises made respecting Solomon, the especial type of Christ; or the Lord's choice of Jerusalem, and of mount Zion, as the place of his sanctuary, to which the Israelites should resort; or the building and continuance of the temple there, are mentioned; the events recorded in this book are divinely attested.—As containing the history of almost the whole of David's reign, and exclusively that of many important transactions, during that interesting period, it has perhaps more references made to it in other parts of the Scripture, in one way or other, than any part of the sacred narrative. The promises made to David, were, both in the literal and typical sense of them, evident prophecies, the fulfilment of which, as recorded in the subsequent books of Scripture, and in the history of the church and kingdom of Christ even to this day, are a divine attestation, that it was written by inspiration of that God, "to whom were known all his works from the beginning of the world." (Notes, vii. xxii. xxiii. 1—7.)—It opens with David's accession to the throne, his gradual prevalence against the house of Saul, and his establishment in the kingdom; it proceeds to relate his victories over his enemies, together with his zealous endeavours to reform the state of religion among his people, as well as to enlarge their territory and advance their prosperity. But with these more pleasing events, are recorded the grievous sins which he committed, and the many domestic and public calamities with which he was chastised. These, as a dark cloud, cover the latter part of the history of this book, (which brings us almost to the close of his reign of forty years;) yet, through all, his character shines very bright in many instances, and we learn from another place, that he closed his life in a most honourable manner. (Notes, 1 Chr. xxviii. xxix.)

CHAP. I.

A. M. 2949.

B. C. 1055.

An Amalekite brings Saul's crown and bracelet to David, informs him of the event of the battle, and asserts that he slew Saul, 1-10. David rends his clothes, weeps; and orders the messenger to be put to death, 11-16. His poetical lamentation for Saul and Jonathan, 17-27.

NOW it came to pass after the death of Saul, when David was returned from the slaughter of the Amalekites, and David had abode two days in Ziklag;

2 It came even to pass on the third day, that, behold, a man came out of the camp from Saul, with his clothes rent, and earth upon his head: and so it was, when he came to David, that he fell to the earth, and did obeisance.

3 And David said unto him, From whence comest thou? And he said unto him, Out of the camp of Israel I am escaped.

4 And David said unto him, How went the matter? I pray thee tell me. And he answered, That the people are fled from the battle, and many of the people also are fallen and dead, and Saul and Jonathan his son are dead also.

5 And David said unto the young man that told him, How knowest thou that Saul and Jonathan his son be dead?

6 And the young man that told him said, As I happened by chance upon mount Gilboa, behold, Saul leaned upon his spear; and, lo, the chariots and horsemen followed hard after him.

7 And when he looked behind him, he saw me, and called unto me. And I answered, Here am I.

8 And he said unto me, Who art thou? And I answered him, I am an Amalekite.

9 He said unto me again, Stand, I pray thee, upon me, and slay me; for anguish is come upon me, because my life is yet whole in me.

10 So I stood upon him, and slew him, because I was sure that he could not live after that he was fallen: and I took the crown that was upon his head, and the bracelet that was on his arm, and have brought them hither unto my lord.

11 Then David took hold on his clothes, and rent them, and likewise all the men that were with him.

12 And they mourned and wept, and fasted until even, for Saul, and for Jonathan his son, and for the people of the LORD, and for the house of Israel, because they were fallen by the sword.

13 ¶ And David said unto the young man that told him, Whence art thou? And he answered, I am the son of a stranger, an Amalekite.

14 ¶ And David said unto him, How, wast thou not afraid to stretch forth thine hand to destroy the LORD's anointed?

15 And David called one of the young men, and said, Go near, and fall upon him. And he smote him that he died.

16 And David said unto him, Thy blood be upon thy head: for thy mouth hath testified against thee, saying, I have slain the LORD's anointed.

17 ¶ And David lamented with this lamentation over Saul, and over Jonathan his son:

18 (Also he bade them teach the children of Judah the use of the bow; behold, it is written in the book of Jasher.)

19 The beauty of Israel is slain upon thy high places; how are the mighty fallen!

20 Tell it not in Gath, publish it not in the streets of Askelon; lest the daughters of the Philistines rejoice, lest the daughters of the uncircumcised triumph.

21 Ye mountains of Gilboa, let there be no dew neither let there be rain upon you, nor fields of offerings: for there the shield of the mighty is vilely cast away, the shield of Saul, as though he had not been anointed with oil.

22 From the blood of the slain, from the fat of the mighty, the bow of Jonathan turned not back, and the sword of Saul returned not empty.

23 Saul and Jonathan were lovely and pleasant in their lives, and in their death they were not divided: they were swifter than eagles, they were stronger than lions.

24 Ye daughters of Israel, weep over Saul, who clothed you in scarlet, with other delights; who put on ornaments of gold upon your apparel.

25 How are the mighty fallen in the midst of the battle! O Jonathan, thou wast slain in thine high places.

26 I am distressed for thee, my brother Jonathan; very pleasant hast thou been unto me: thy love to me was wonderful, passing the love of women.

27 How are the mighty fallen, and the weapons of war perished!

NOTES.

CHAP. I. V. 1. David and his men had returned to Ziklag, and probably were employed in repairing its desolations, when tidings were brought him of the death of Saul. It does not appear that he made much enquiry concerning the event of the war, though he had every reason to be anxious about it. The decisive blow must have been given about the time when he was so exceedingly distressed. (Notes, 1 Sam. xxx. 1-6.)

V. 2-10. As it is expressly said, that the armour-bearer saw that Saul was dead before he slew himself, (1 Sam. xxxi. 5.) we may conclude that this man feigned many circumstances of his story. But happening to pass by the field of battle, and finding Saul's dead body, with the insignia of royalty on it, or near to it, he knew who it was; and by bringing these away, he sufficiently proved Saul's death. He therefore framed his story, and ordered his behaviour in that manner in which he supposed would most ingratiate him with David.—It is remarkable, that an Amalekite should boast of having slain Saul, who had been rejected for not punctually executing the command of God, concerning that nation: (1 Sam. xv. 23. xxviii. 18.) But this rendered the story more improbable; for it might well be supposed, that Saul would be as unwilling to be slain by an Amalekite, as by a Philistine.—Anguish. (9.) The marginal reading seems the true meaning of the original.

V. 13-16. This man was an Amalekite, and so devoted by God himself to destruction; and David, as the king of Israel after Saul's death, was appointed to put this sentence in execution. He had boasted of having killed the king of Israel: David could not disprove his testimony; and having received no other intelligence, probably he believed it. By his own confession, he deserved death, (for a man's desire to die cannot authorize another to kill him;) and by his punishment, David solemnly protested that he had no hand in the death of Saul; he warned all others not to expect favour from him, by doing violence to any of Saul's family; and he aimed to conciliate their good-will, and that of Israel in general. (Notes, iv. 7-12.)

V. 18. Perhaps the bow had fallen into disuse among the Israelites, and this had given the Philistines an advantage: at the time therefore that this poem was inserted in the book of Jasher, (Note, Josh. x. 12-14;) it was also recorded that David had given orders to the people, to habituate themselves to the expert use of the bow.—Some, however, understand this expression of a tune, or musical instrument, to which this poem was adapted.

V. 19-27. This elegy contains little directly relating to religion; but is highly poetical. It was intended as a tribute of respect to the memory of Saul, and of affection to that of Jonathan; who perhaps was principally meant by "the beauty of Israel," being in every respect an ornament to his religion and people. Saul's valour and military renown are celebrated, and his faults are veiled; but nothing is spoken of his piety or justice. The charge given to every one, not to mention the catastrophe in the cities of the Philistines, lest the enemies of God should rejoice, is very beautiful. The wish that neither rain nor dew might fructify the fields, on which the fatal battle was fought; and that no sacrifices might thence be brought to the altar of God, because there the anointed of the LORD had cast away his shield, as if he had been a common soldier, is a strong expression of regret for such an event. The harmony, which generally subsisted between Saul and Jonathan, in warring against the enemies of Israel; the impetuosity and fury with which they had together charged, and pursued them; and their falling in the same battle, are touched upon in a very poetical manner.—It is probable, that Saul had encouraged the manufactures of Israel, and perhaps had increased their wealth: the daughters of Israel therefore, as most delighted with external embellishment, are called upon to lament over their prince. Every thing is mentioned to his commendation, which truth permitted: but Jonathan is named with most passionate affection; as having fallen upon the high places, where he had often successfully displayed his valour; and as having shewn a strong and faithful affection, in such trying circumstances, and in so disinterested a manner, as could not be equalled by any instances of conjugal fidelity, or the most constant love which

CHAP. II.

David, by divine direction, goes with his company to Hebron, and is anointed king over Judah, 1-4. He commands the men of Jabesh-gilead for their kindness to Saul, 5-7. Abner sets up Ish-bosheth as king over Israel, 8-11. Twelve of Abner's men, and twelve of Joab's, engage in a fatal contest, which brings on a battle, in which Israel is vanquished, 12-17. Asahel is slain by Abner, 18-24. At Abner's motion, Joab sounds a retreat, 25-29. The number of the slain, 30, 31. Asahel's burial, 32.

AND it came to pass after this, that David ^aenquired of the LORD, saying, Shall I go up into any of the cities of Judah? And the LORD said unto him, Go up. And David said, Whither shall I go up? And he said, Unto Hebron.

2 So David went up thither, and his two wives also, Ahinoam the Jezreelitess, and Abigail, Nabal's wife, the Carmelite.

3 And his men that were with him did David bring up, every man with his household: and they dwelt in the cities of Hebron.

4 And the men of Judah came, and there they anointed David king over the house of Judah. And they told David, saying, That the men of Jabesh-gilead were they that buried Saul.

5 ¶ And David sent messengers unto the men of Jabesh-gilead, and said unto them, Blessed be ye of the LORD, that ye have shewed this kindness unto your lord, even unto Saul, and have buried him.

6 And now the LORD shew kindness and truth unto you: and I also will requite you this kindness, because ye have done this thing.

7 Therefore now let your hands be strengthened, has subsisted betwixt the sexes. Considering therefore how pleasant his friendship had been to David, he could not but be greatly distressed at his premature death.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-16. The deepest distress sometimes immediately precedes the dawning of deliverance: but they, who have committed their concerns to the Lord, should quietly abide his will, and repress that eagerness and anxiety, with which others disquiet themselves, when they expect important changes.—Many secretly wish for the death of those who keep them from honours or estates, without excepting even their nearest relations; and inwardly rejoice at those events for which they decently appear to mourn. This is well known to mercenary men, who form their plans accordingly; and are apt to conclude that all are actuated by the same selfish principles. But the grace of God subdues this base disposition, and forms the mind to a more liberal temper: the true believer does not allow himself to desire, or to rejoice in, the calamity or death of a rival or an enemy; much less for that of a kind and superior relation, to whom gratitude and honour are justly due: and his mourning will on such occasions be unfeigned, though moderated by submission to the will of God. He cannot exult in the prospect of worldly advancement; for he considers himself as by it entrusted with more talents, surrounded by greater temptations, and called to increasing cares, duties, and burdens. Those therefore will be deceived, who court his favour, as sycophants do that of ungodly superiors: they will meet with a frown, a rebuke, and perhaps punishment, where they expected a large reward: and this treatment of such mercenary men promises an useful and honourable possession of worldly pre-eminence.

V. 17-27. The faults even of our enemies should not be needlessly exposed, and all remembrance of injuries should be buried with the deceased, except the glory of God and the benefit of men require the contrary; and the offices and rank of distinguished persons are entitled to respect, though their characters do not deserve our esteem.—Useful endowments are conferred on those who are destitute of true piety; and it is in some cases allowable and decent to give them due commendation, yet we must on no account praise them for virtues which they do not possess. But holiness demands our peculiar love, and renders the society of those who possess it very pleasant to the true believer. Next to the love, which subsists between the Lord and his people, that endeared affection which springs from it, produces the most vigorous, durable, faithful, and disinterested friendship: yet even this heavenly love occasions deep distress in this world, in which it is an exotic; but in its own climate above, it will flourish into unalloyed and eternal pleasure.—The calamities of the Lord's people, and the triumphs of his enemies, always grieve the hearts of true believers, whatever advantages they may incidentally derive from them; and it would be well, if many things which continually occur among professed Christians, could be concealed from infidels and profligates, who are exceedingly hardened and emboldened by them. But it is not enough to conceal, we must watch and pray against, such offences. Let us then learn to repress ambition, resentment, and self-love; and to exercise patience, meekness, gratitude to our benefactors, love to our country, and good-will to men; with zeal for the glory of God, and the interests of true religion.

NOTES.

CHAP. II. V. 1-3. After the death of Saul, many of the Israelites resorted to David at Ziklag, till his forces became very considerable: (Notes, 1 Chron. xii. 1-22;) yet he took no step to obtain possession of the vacant throne, without consulting the Lord. (Marg. Ref. Note, Num. xxvii. 21.) He trusted and be ye ^avaliant: for your master Saul is dead, and also the house of Judah have anointed me king over them.

8 ¶ But Abner the son of Ner, captain of Saul's host, took Ish-bosheth the son of Saul, and brought him over to Mahanaim;

9 And made him king over Gilead, and over the Ashurites, and over Jezreel, and over Ephraim, and over Benjamin, and over all Israel.

10 Ish-bosheth Saul's son was forty years old when he began to reign over Israel, and reigned two years: but the house of Judah followed David.

11 (And the time that David was king in Hebron over the house of Judah, was seven years and six months.)

12 ¶ And Abner the son of Ner, and the servants of Ish-bosheth the son of Saul, went out from Mahanaim to Gibeon.

13 And Joab the son of Zeruiah, and the servants of David, went out, and met together by the pool of Gibeon: and they sat down, the one on the one side of the pool, and the other on the other side of the pool.

14 And Abner said to Joab, Let the young men now arise, and play before us. And Joab said, Let them arise.

15 Then there arose and went over by number twelve of Benjamin, which pertained to Ish-bosheth the son of Saul, and twelve of the servants of David.

in him who had promised him the kingdom, to give it him in his own time and manner; that he might possess it with a clear conscience, and avoid all appearance of those evils, with which he knew Saul's adherents would be ready to charge him. (Note, 1 Kings xi. 37.) Accordingly he was directed to go up to Hebron, a chief city of Judah: and his men with their families were placed in the adjacent towns, dependent on Hebron.

V. 4. David had been privately anointed by Samuel, as Saul's successor; (1 Sam. xv. 12, 13:) and now the principal persons in the tribe of Judah publicly anointed him to be their king; but they did not attempt to place him over the other tribes.

V. 5-7. David took every opportunity of expressing the same regard to Saul, which he had done in his life-time. But he, and three of his sons, were now dead: and all Israel knew that his family had been rejected by the Lord, who had appointed David his successor. The tribe of Judah had recognized his title; it was proper that he should act as king: and he could not begin his reign by a more conciliating measure, than by sending a deputation to thank those, who had rescued, and performed the funeral ceremonies over, the bodies of Saul and his sons. (Note, 1 Sam. xxxi. 11-13.) He not only besought the Lord to reward the men of Jabesh, but promised that he also would requite them; being determined to shew all kindness to the friends of his predecessor; and he also encouraged them to expect his firm support against the Philistines and other enemies.

V. 8.—Abner was a near relation of Saul, and commander of his armies; and Ish-bosheth was an insignificant person: Abner therefore doubtless intended to give him only the title of king, and to possess the authority himself. (Marg. Ref. Notes, iii. 6-12. 17-21.)

V. 9. Abner deemed it prudent to fix Ish-bosheth's residence at Mahanaim, east of Jordan, as most secure both from David and the Philistines; yet all the tribes west of Jordan adhered to him, except the tribe of Judah.—The Ashurites were the tribe of Asher.—The nation in general had rejected the judges, whom God had raised up for them, and had demanded a king: and, in the same rebellious spirit they refused the prince whom the Lord had selected for them, who was a man of approved abilities and character; and preferred the surviving son of their rejected king, though in every respect an improper person. In this, David was a type of Christ, whom Israel would not submit to, though anointed by the Father to be their Prince and Saviour. (Notes, 1 Sam. viii. 1-9. Ps. ii. Luke xix. 11-27. Acts vii. 51-53.)

V. 10, 11. For two years Ish-bosheth reigned in peace, and David made no attempts against him: but for the remainder of the seven years and six months, there was war. Abner possessed the authority, and Ish-bosheth was only a nominal king.

V. 12, 13. David was made king by God himself, and had never been subject to Ish-bosheth: yet he did not begin hostilities, but waited to see how God would order things in his favour. When, however, Abner made war on him, he was not bound to the same measures of mere self-defence, as when persecuted by the Lord's anointed.—Abner marched his army over Jordan, unto Gibeon of Benjamin, doubtless expecting to be effectually supported, in subjecting the tribe of Judah to Ish-bosheth: but David opposed an army to him under the command of Joab, his sister's son; and to the instructions given him we may ascribe the moderation with which he conducted the war. 'For he had sworn to Saul, that he would not cut off his seed, and therefore would not willingly engage against Ish-bosheth.' (Ep. Patrick.) (Note, 1 Sam. xxiv. 16-22.)

16 And they caught every one his fellow by the head, and thrust his sword in his fellow's side; so they fell down together; wherefore that place was called "Helkath-hazzurim, which is in Gibeon.

17 And there was a very sore battle that day: and Abner was beaten, and the men of Israel, before the servants of David.

18 ¶ And there were three sons of Zeruiah there, Joab, and Abishai, and Asahel: and Asahel was as light of foot as a wild roe.

19 And Asahel pursued after Abner; and in going he turned not to the right hand nor to the left, from following Abner.

20 Then Abner looked behind him, and said, Art thou Asahel? And he answered, I am.

21 And Abner said to him, Turn thee aside to thy right hand or to thy left, and lay thee hold on one of the young men, and take thee his armour. But Asahel would not turn aside from following of him.

22 And Abner said again to Asahel, Turn thee aside from following me: wherefore should I smite thee to the ground? how then should I hold up my face to Joab thy brother?

23 Howbeit, he refused to turn aside: wherefore Abner, with the hinder end of the spear, smote him under the fifth rib, that the spear came out behind him; and he fell down there, and died in the same place: and it came to pass, that as many as came to the place where Asahel fell down and died, stood still.

24 Joab also and Abishai pursued after Abner:

and the sun went down when they were come to the hill of Ammah, that lieth before Giah, by the way of the wilderness of Gibeon.

25 ¶ And the children of Benjamin gathered themselves together after Abner, and became one troop, and stood on the top of an hill.

26 Then Abner called to Joab, and said, Shall the sword devour for ever? knowest thou not that it will be bitterness in the latter end? how long shall it be then ere thou bid the people return from following their brethren?

27 And Joab said, As God liveth, unless thou hadst spoken, surely then in the morning the people had gone up every one from following his brother.

28 So Joab blew a trumpet, and all the people stood still, and pursued after Israel no more, neither fought they any more.

29 And Abner and his men walked all that night through the plain, and passed over Jordan, and went through all Bithron, and they came to Mahanaim.

30 And Joab returned from following Abner: and when he had gathered all the people together, there lacked of David's servants nineteen men, and Asahel.

31 But the servants of David had smitten of Benjamin, and of Abner's men, so that three hundred and threescore men died.

32 ¶ And they took up Asahel, and buried him in the sepulchre of his father, which was in Beth-lehem. And Joab and his men went all night, and they came to Hebron at break of day.

V. 14—16. It is probable that Joab kept upon the defensive, and gave Abner no opportunity of attacking him; and that Abner's impatience to engage induced him to give this rash challenge. He expressed himself, as if he only intended to make diversion for the two armies, according to the horrible custom of gladiators in after ages, who gratified the diabolical spectators by murdering each other. Joab, though backward to engage, had not resolution to refuse the challenge. Some think that only the twelve Benjamites were slain: but the words more obviously mean, that all the company were butchered.

V. 18—23. These circumstances shew that Abner was not at all to blame in the death of Asahel, for he was constrained to slay him in his own defence; as nothing could satisfy Asahel, but either killing or taking captive the commander of Ish-bosheth's army, for which he was wholly incompetent. (Notes, iii. 26, 27, 31.)

V. 26—29. Abner used very different language, when vanquished, than when eager to engage. Now, he spake "of the sword devouring for ever," and of the bitterness which the slaughter would occasion in the event; and recollected that the combatants were brethren. He forgot himself, however, when he threw the blame upon Joab; and he would not have made so moderate an use of victory, had he obtained it. But though Joab was deeply exasperated by the death of his brother; yet in regard to David's inclinations and Israel's advantage, he stopped the pursuit, and gave Abner and his troops an opportunity of retiring to a place of safety.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—11. If we would possess temporal things with a blessing, we must not eagerly seize upon them; nor be determined by favourable events, or carnal counsellors: but we must observe the rules of God's word, and pray for his direction; using those means, and those only, which he hath appointed or allowed, and avoiding all evil, and "appearance of evil," in our pursuit of them: and then whatever else we fall in, we shall certainly be directed in the way to the kingdom of heaven.—They, who have shared our afflictions should be associated in our prosperity; as they, "who suffer with Christ, shall also reign with him." When we are influenced by faith, and the fear and love of God, and act with integrity, kindness, forgiveness, and a desire of peace, we conduct our affairs with the best wisdom.—We are bound to pray for, and do good to, those who have acted properly, even to our enemies, and to use conciliatory measures towards all men, but especially to those who have behaved with gratitude and fidelity, in dangerous circumstances, and without prospect of advantage; for such friends are worthy of attention: and they, who have been grateful to one benefactor, will find another to protect them when he is removed. But the believer's progress must be gradual: his faith and graces must be exercised and proved, and his pride subdued, before he can properly endure any kind of prosperity: and for these purposes, the Lord often employs the perverseness of his brethren, without their knowledge or intention.—In the professing church, few honour those whom the Lord will honour: before Jesus came, and in every succeeding generation, the very builders have rejected such as He intended for eminent situations; and his servants must be conformed to him. Ambition, jealousy, envy, and other evil passions, cause men to rebel against the word of God: but they generally attempt to conceal their real motives under plausible pretences. The believer's wisdom, however, consists in waiting, quietly and silently, under injuries, and in leaving God to plead his cause, except it is evidently his duty to be active. But there is a respect due to superior relations, to which equals or inferiors, in similar circumstances, are not entitled.

V. 12—32. Ambitious and bloody men often consider the trade of war, and the slaughter of their fellow-creatures, as a mere diversion; and the lives of millions have been trifled away, out of an irrational point of honour, to the great gratification of Satan, that first great murderer of the bodies and souls of men. From age to age numbers are ambitious of venturing their lives and souls, for the empty hope of being celebrated as valiant men, after they are dead! and from the same motive they mingle the blood of their brethren with their own; though they bear them no resentment, and have received no provocation from them: but what can be more senseless and infatuated than such a conduct!—The sword of civil war, when once unsheathed, is not easily returned into the scabbard: and they who, in their eagerness to engage, have made light of such unnatural contests, will perceive in the event that they are bitterness to all concerned.—Men are exceedingly disposed to throw the blame of manifest evil upon others, that they may exculpate themselves: and those arguments which were disregarded as futile when they made against them, will often be deemed very conclusive when urged on their own behalf.—Success, as well as self-love, has a great effect in determining men's judgments: of the evil of prosperous attempts, they cannot be convinced; yet they can easily perceive those measures to be wrong, which occasion loss or peril to themselves! Such partial decisions should be exposed and rebuked: yet it is always right to exercise clemency to the vanquished, and generosity to the wretched; to spare the shedding of human blood, and to alleviate the sum of human misery, and to strive for peace, especially in the intestine contentions of nations or churches, where the common cause must suffer, which party soever may acquire the ascendancy.—Different endowments qualify us for varied kinds of service; and should be improved for that purpose. But when talents are over-rated, and when men confide and glory in them, they will go out of the line of duty, in order to distinguish themselves; they will despise warning and counsel, as the effect of envy and cowardice; and they will always be shamed, and frequently ruined, by those qualifications in which they prided themselves. Often do men fancy themselves about to seize upon happiness, when death stops their career, and lays them in the dust: and if they will rush forwards in the road to destruction, though plainly warned of their danger, they can blame none but themselves.—Finally, there are many distinctions among us, both during life, and in the disposal of our bodies after death; but in the eternal world no distinction subsists, except betwixt those "who have served the Lord, and those who have not served him."

CHAP. III.

David grows stronger, and Ish-bosheth weaker, during the war, 1. Six sons are born to David in Hebron, 2-5. Abner quarrels with Ish-bosheth, and offers his services to David, 6-12. David demands and receives back Michal, 13-16. Abner communicates with the Israelites, goes to David, and is feasted by him, and sent away in peace, 17-21. Joab is angry with David, and murders Abner, 22-27. David protests against his wickedness, and denounces a curse upon him, 28-30. David mourns for Abner, 31-39.

NOW there was "long war" between the house of Saul and the house of David: but David waxed stronger and stronger, and the house of Saul waxed weaker and weaker.

2 ¶ And unto David were "sons born in Hebron: and his first-born was "Amnon, of "Ahinoam the Jezreelitess;

3 And his second, "Chileab, "of Abigail the wife of Nabal the Carmelite; and the third, "Absalom the son of Maacah, the daughter of "Talmi king of "Geshur;

4 And the fourth "Adonijah the son of Haggith; and the fifth, Shephatiah the son of Abital;

5 And the sixth, Ithream, by Eglah David's wife. These were born to David in Hebron.

6 ¶ And it came to pass, while there was war between the house of Saul and the house of David, that "Abner made himself strong for the house of Saul.

7 And Saul had a concubine, whose name was "Rizpah, the daughter of Aiah: and Ish-bosheth said to Abner, Wherefore hast thou "gone in unto my father's concubine?

8 Then was Abner "very wroth for the words of Ish-bosheth, and said, Am "I a dog's head, which against Judah "do shew kindness this day unto the house of Saul thy father, to his brethren, and to his friends, and have not delivered thee into the hand of David, that thou chargest me to-day with a fault concerning this woman?

9 "So do God to Abner, and more also, except "as the Lord hath sworn to David, even so I do to him;

10 To translate the kingdom from the house of Saul, and to set up the throne of David over Israel and over Judah, "from Dan even to Beer-sheba.

11 And he could not answer Abner a word again, "because he feared him.

12 ¶ And Abner sent messengers to David on his

24 Then Joab came to the king, and said, 'What hast thou done? behold, Abner came unto thee: why is it that thou hast sent him away, and he is quite gone?

25 Thou knowest Abner the son of Ner, "that he came to deceive thee, "and to know thy going out, and thy coming in, and to know all that thou doest.

26 And when Joab was come out from David, "he sent messengers after Abner, which brought him again from the well of Sirah; but David knew it not.

27 And when Abner was returned to Hebron, Joab "took him aside in the gate to speak with him "quietly, and smote him there "under the fifth rib, that he died, "for the blood of Asahel his brother.

28 ¶ And afterward when David heard it, he said, I and my kingdom are "guiltless before the LORD for ever, from the "blood of Abner the son of Ner.

29 Let it "rest on the head of Joab, and on all his father's house: and "let there not "fail from the house of Joab one that hath "an issue, or that is a "leper, or that leaneth on a staff, or that falleth on the sword, or that lacketh bread.

30 So Joab and Abishai his brother "slew Abner, "because he had slain their brother Asahel at Gibeon in the battle.

31 ¶ And David said to Joab, and to all the people that were with him, "Render your clothes, and gird you with sackcloth, and mourn before Abner. And king David himself followed the "bier.

32 And they buried Abner in Hebron: and the king "lifted up his voice, and wept at the grave of Abner; and all the people wept.

33 And the king lamented over Abner, and said, Died Abner "as a fool dieth?

34 Thy "hands were not bound, nor thy feet put into fetters: as a man falleth before "wicked men, so fellest thou. And all the people "wept again over him.

37 For all the people, and all Israel, understood that day, that it was not of the king to slay Abner the son of Ner.

entertained, and peaceably dismissed, he expected, no doubt, to obtain high preferment under him.

V. 22. A troop. Probably, this was a troop of Philistines, or other enemies, not of Ish-bosheth's forces.

V. 24, 25. Joab and his brother Abishai, David's nephews, had been very faithful and useful to him in his afflictions; and from gratitude and natural affection, he had inadvertently given them almost as great an ascendancy over him, as Abner had over Ish-bosheth: so that he had trusted and feared them too much, and allowed them all the importance which they claimed; and that had emboldened them, especially Joab, to a high degree of presumption. Indeed nothing could well be more affronting than Joab's address to his prince, whom he grossly charged with the most egregious folly, and then left his presence without waiting for an answer! (Marg. Ref.) But it was the language of envy and ambition, as well as of resentment: he supposed that he had missed an opportunity of avenging the death of Asahel, and he feared a formidable rival, if Abner made a league with David: for it is evident he only pretended to doubt his sincerity.

V. 26, 27. Joab seems to have recalled Abner, in David's name, without his knowledge; which was very base treatment of him, as if he meant to bring him under suspicion of conniving at the murder: and when Abner, imprudently indeed, but in confidence, stepped aside to confer with him as the officer of David, he treacherously assassinated him, in violation of every law of hospitality and public faith. Abishai also was privy to, or concerned in, the base transaction. (30.) But, while Joab's conduct cannot be too severely reprobated; the wisdom and justice of God are manifest in Abner's punishment. From ambition, he had pertinaciously, against his conscience, opposed the declared will of God; and was induced by base resentment to desert Ish-bosheth, and offer his services to David. He was therefore thrown aside, as unworthy to raise David to the throne, or to give peace to Israel. Indeed it is probable, that if he had lived, his ambition, talents, influence, and ungodliness would have occasioned further mischief to all parties.

V. 28, 29. David no doubt intended by these protestations, and imprecations upon Joab and his family, to wipe off all suspicion of his own guilt, and to remove it from the land; being perhaps afraid of a revolt of the soldiers, if he proceeded to execute vengeance on the murderer. But he should have remembered, that He, "who stilleth the raging of the sea," is able also "to still the madness of the people." In so just a cause he ought to have risked all consequences. He was anointed king to administer justice without respect of persons; and he might have been assured of the Lord's support in doing so important a duty; the example would have been very salutary; all impartial persons would have applauded his firmness; perhaps Ish-bosheth's murder would have been prevented, and many other crimes and calamities, in the latter part of his reign. But his fear of man in this instance overcame his faith in God, and Joab continued and increased in authority, and in crimes, to the end of David's life: he was at length, however, called to account for them all. (Notes, 38, 39. xx. 5-10. Num. xxxv. 31-34. 1 Kings ii. 5, 6. 28-34. Marg. Ref.)

V. 31. Joab was constrained to do penance, so to speak, by appearing as a mourner for Abner: but, as his revenge was gratified, his rival removed, and no heavier punishment inflicted, it is likely he would have but little objection to such a ceremonial. David, however, no doubt intended to lessen Joab's authority with the people, by requiring his attendance.

V. 33, 34. Abner did not die as criminals do, who are bound, fettered, put to shame, and executed for their offences; nor as a coward fleeing from, or taken prisoner by, the enemy; nor as a rash man, who had needlessly run himself into danger: but as an honest man, who is unexpectedly set upon by ruffians, and murdered. It must have been very mortifying to Joab, to be thus publicly reproached as an assassin.

V. 35. The Israelites had a custom of inviting, and urging the friends of the dead to take food, after the funeral was over; it being supposed that their sorrow would indispose them to it. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 38, 39. David, in thus addressing his officers, seems first to have given a reason why he made such lamentation over Abner; and then to have excused himself for not punishing Joab and Abishai. But the satisfaction, which the people expressed in the former part of his conduct, shewed, that he might very safely have proceeded to execute the Divine law on the offenders, in its utmost strictness.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-16. The power and policy of Satan, and of wicked men, may struggle against the purposes of God and the cause of his anointed King, and seem to occasion delays: but his interest is gaining ground, though by unnoticed degrees, and his glory will ere long be displayed throughout the earth. When he sets up his kingdom in any heart, inbred lusts and outward temptations will powerfully oppose it: but grace will gather strength, and every corruption be weakened continually in the conflict, till the believer is at length sanctified wholly in body, soul, and spirit. Inconstancy must be incident to selfish men: if their avarice or ambition meets with disappointment in one course, they will turn into another: and sometimes making pretensions to religion seems the readiest way to the gratification of worldly lusts. Many are not above committing very base crimes, who are too proud to bear reproof, or even the suspicion of being guilty: and whilst men go on in their sins apparently without concern, they are often conscious that they are fighting against God! Little confidence can be placed in those who affront their Maker, betray their country, or deceive those who confide in them, under the pretence of serving their friends: most certainly they mean to serve their own purposes; and will betray those also who now trust them, when they can obtain advantageous terms for doing it. Yet even by such as act from revenge, ambition, lust, or avarice, the Lord secretly subverts his own designs; but as they intend not to honour him, whatever they profess; so when his ends are answered, he will throw them aside with contempt. In some cases, and for some purposes, we too may use their help, without enquiring about their motives; but it will require great caution and wisdom, else we shall not escape guilt or reproach. The re-union of near relatives, who have been involuntarily separated, is right in itself: and it is always our duty to express our regard for the divine law, and to bear testimony against sin: and though guilt commonly renders men the objects of our deepest compassion; yet no affection can be either truly amiable or allowable, which is not regulated according to the word of God.

V. 17-39. The bulk of mankind in all ages are guided by those who rule or teach them, and address their passions by eloquence or flattery: but let us seek for a sound judgment, a good conscience, and an upright heart; that we may know, and adhere to, the truth and will of God amidst all changes. They, who have deceived others, should endeavour to undeceive them: but good words will do little, while a man continues the slave of his lusts. In cultivating Christian tempers and performing relative duties, extremes and counterfeits must be guarded against: as zeal and boldness may become furious and contentious; so meekness, and the love of peace, may degenerate into imbecility and irresolution; and through undue ascendancy of those inferiors, who ought "to be kept in subjection with all gravity," shameful things will often be done, or connived at, to the disgrace of individuals, and the reproach of the common cause. Every one, therefore, should know his own place and duties, and exer-

Ish-bosheth and Israel are troubled at Abner's death. I. After Saul's death, several changes took place, 2, 3. Mephibosheth, Jonathan's son, was lame, 4. Rechab and Baanah slay Ish-bosheth, and bring his head to David, 5-8. David causes them to be put to death, and Ish-bosheth's head to be buried, 9-12.

AND when Saul's son heard that Abner was dead in Hebron, ^ahis hands were feeble, ^band all the Israelites were troubled.

2 And Saul's son had two men that were captains of bands; the name of the one was Baanah, and the name of the ^cother Rechab, the sons of Rimmon a Beerothite, of the children of Benjamin: (for ^dBeeroth also was reckoned to Benjamin;

3 And the Beerothites ^efled to Gittaim, and were sojourners there until this day.)

4 And ^fJonathan, Saul's son, had a son that was lame of ^ghis feet. He was five years old when ^hthe tidings came of Saul and Jonathan out of Jezreel, and his nurse took him up, and fled: and it came to pass, as she made haste to flee, that he fell, and became lame. And his name was ⁱMephibosheth.

5 And the sons of Rimmon the Beerothite, Rechab and Baanah, ^jwent, and came about the heat of the day to the house of Ish-bosheth, who ^klay on a bed at noon.

6 And they came thither into the midst of the house, as though they would have fetched wheat; and they smote him ^lunder the fifth rib: and Rechab and Baanah his brother escaped.

7 For when they came into the house, he lay on his bed in his bedchamber, and they smote him, and slew him, and beheaded him, and ^atook his head, and gat them away through the plain all night.

8 And they brought the head of Ish-bosheth unto David to Hebron, and said to the king, Behold the head of Ish-bosheth the son of Saul, thine enemy, ^bwhich sought thy life; and ^cthe LORD hath avenged my lord the king this day of Saul, and of his seed.

9 ¶ And David answered Rechab and Baanah his brother, the sons of Rimmon the Beerothite, and said unto them, As the LORD liveth, who hath redeemed my soul out of all adversity,

10 When ^done told me, saying, Behold, Saul is dead, (thinking to have brought good tidings,) I took hold him, and slew him in Ziklag, ^ewho thought that I would have given him a reward for his tidings:

11 How much more, ^fwhen wicked men have slain a righteous person in his own house upon his bed? shall I not therefore now ^grequire his blood of your hand, and take you away ^hfrom the earth?

12 And David commanded his young men, and they ⁱslew them, and cut off their hands and their feet, and ^jhanged them up over the pool in Hebron. But they took the head of Ish-bosheth, and buried ^kit ^lin the sepulchre of Abner in Hebron.

cise the Christian temper in doing them; and not make the fear of being ruffled an excuse for neglecting them. Proud men rate their services so high, and are so regardless of relative duties and decorum, that it is not desirable to be under obligations to them: we should, however, receive every thing as from God; and consider every man as a channel through which the gift is communicated, of whom there is indeed no real necessity, on whom we should rest no dependence, and to whom that gratitude is due, and that alone, which consists with every other duty. Ungodly men, who cannot brook an affront or a rival, and who deem themselves too powerful for human justice, have little to restrain them from the commission of the most horrid crimes: and the human heart is capable of making the highest professions of friendship subservient to the most cruel murders, and of violating every sacred tie. It is not enough for those, who are vested with authority, to express their abhorrence of such crimes and criminals, or their compassion for those who suffer by them: but all partialities and interested considerations should be laid aside, and condign punishment inflicted; that "others may hear, and fear, and do no more such wickedness:" and in every state the executive authority should possess power sufficient to punish the proudest subject, lest blood be imputed to the land. As our lives are so exposed on every side, and as he most emphatically "dieth as a fool," who dieth in his sins; we should be careful to be always ready: for all the honour or commendations, that men can bestow on us after our decease, will not affect, or amend, the state of the departed soul. Alas, what are the imagined advantages of royalty? The king "after God's own heart" finds as much cause for lamentation and complaint, as when a poor fugitive! But he who now reigns upon the throne of David, has a kingdom of a nobler kind: whatever he doeth is noticed by, and pleases, all his willing people: and he will bring them all to share his glory and joy. Many, however, are outwardly serviceable to his cause, who only seek themselves in all they do, and from time to time disgrace it with their crimes: these may escape for a season, but at length they shall be numbered with his enemies, and shall perish for ever.

NOTES.

CHAP. IV. V. 1. Perhaps Ish-bosheth had not before been certainly informed, that Abner had deserted to David; or, both he and the people hoped by Abner's means to have obtained better terms. But by his death their affairs were left in confusion; and they had no person capable either of leading them to battle, or of negotiating a treaty.

V. 3, 4. When Saul's army was routed, and he and his sons slain, the inhabitants of Beeroth deserted their city, and went to sojourn at Gittaim; where they still remained when this history was written. At the same time Mephibosheth fell and was lame.—These facts seem to have been recorded to illustrate the consternation which followed the death of Saul and his sons; and perhaps Mephibosheth's youth and lameness emboldened Rechab and Baanah to murder Ish-bosheth; as Mephibosheth was the heir of Saul, and the avenger of blood. (Note, Num. xxxv. 11-15.)

V. 5. Ish-bosheth had enough to do in this emergency, without sleeping on his bed at noon. But he appears to have been an inactive self-indulgent man. It was indeed, and is still, a custom in the East countries, to retire for sleep about noon; that is, for such as live in ease and luxury, not for others except in very sultry regions.—The Scripture gives no intimation that this was a common practice in Israel. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 8. These men entirely mistook David's character, as if he had such a thirst for revenge, that he would reward any villany by which it could be accomplished; and they presumed that they had performed the will of God in this complicated treason and parricide! The Lord had indeed avenged his servant of his enemies; but neither David, nor David's Lord, had commissioned them to murder their prince, whom they professed to serve. (Note, iii. 6-10.)

V. 9. Redeemed, &c. (Note, Gen. xlviii. 16. Marg. Ref.) By using this language, David reminded all who heard him, that in his extremest dangers, he had neither used treachery or cruelty himself, nor allowed his men to use them. It must, therefore, be evident, that, now the Lord had rescued and prospered him, he had no temptation to countenance such traitors as Rechab and Baanah.

V. 10-12. (Note, i. 13-16.) Whatever Ish-bosheth's character was before God, he was righteous, as to his murderers, having done them no injury, and given them no provocation; so that in slaying him, they shed innocent blood, from the basest motives, and with the greatest aggravations; and David, as God's vicergerent, most justly executed vengeance upon them for it. (Note, Ex. xxiii. 6-9.)—It had been well if he had been equally decisive in the case of Joab; that there might have been no appearance of partiality, and on hope of impunity to any criminal. (Note, iii. 28, 29.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Innumerable are the perils to which our tender years are exposed; and we owe much gratitude both to God and to our parents, if preserved during that period from losing our limbs or senses, or contracting harms, which would have rendered our whole lives uncomfortable to ourselves and others. Parents, too, should take occasion from this reflection, not only to be very attentive to their offspring, but by prayer to commit them continually to the Lord's keeping.—Everything will concur in forwarding the accomplishment of God's word, whether of promise or of wrath, when the appointed time approaches: on one hand there can be no failure; on the other, no escape.—Wretched indeed are they who are engaged in such undertakings, that none can serve them without opposing the known will of God! The more exalted their station, the greater is their danger; for the very men in whom they repose their chief confidence, are destitute of principle, serve them only for gain, and will betray or murder them when their mercenary schemes require it.—Alas! what numbers sink from self-indulgence and carnal security into unsuspected and inevitable destruction! Many are conscious, that they should be pleased with villany, provided it conduced greatly to their profit; they are led confidently to conclude that others will be so too; and as numbers are rewarded for villainous actions, they expect the same. Persons in authority should therefore decidedly manifest, that they will not be served by such wretches, but will, instead of rewarding, severely punish their crimes.—The servants of God are encouraged by the Scriptures, and by their own experience, to trust him in the path of duty, to redeem them from all adversity, without countenancing, any more than committing, sin for that purpose; and they will pity and pray for, and behave kindly to, their opposers, and speak as favourably of them as they can; and on no account become their own avengers.—Finally, the Son of David will require those who pretend to serve his cause by frauds, treasuries, massacres, and persecutions, with more dreadful vengeance than was inflicted by David on Ish-bosheth's murderers.

CHAP. V.

The elders of the tribes, at Hebron, anoint David king over all Israel, 1-3. His age, and the length of his reign, 4, 5. He takes Hiram king of the Jebusites, and calls it the city of David, 6-10. Hiram sends him timber and workmen to build him a house, 11. He prospers, and takes more wives; and eleven sons are born to him, 12-16. By divine direction, he gains two victories over the Philistines, 17-25.

THEN came all the tribes of Israel to David unto Hebron, and spake, saying, Behold, ^bwe are thy bone and thy flesh.

2 Also in time past, when Saul was king over us, thou wast he that leddest out and broughtest in Israel: and the LORD said to thee, ^aThou shalt feed my people Israel, and thou shalt be ^aa captain over Israel.

3 So ^aall the elders of Israel came to the king to Hebron; and king David ^amade a league with them in Hebron ^bbefore the LORD: and they ^aanointed David king over Israel.

4 ¶ David was ^athirty years old when he began to reign, and he reigned ^aforty years.

5 In Hebron he reigned over Judah ^aseven years and six months: and in Jerusalem he reigned thirty and three years over all Israel and Judah.

6 ¶ And the king and his men ^awent to Jerusalem unto ^athe Jebusites, the inhabitants of the land: which spake unto David, saying, ^aExcept thou take away the blind and the lame, thou shalt not come in hither: ^athinking, David cannot come in hither.

7 Nevertheless David took the strong hold of Zion: ^athe same is the city of David.

8 And David said on that day, ^aWhosoever getteth up to the gutter, and smiteth the Jebusites, and the lame and the blind, ^athat are hated of David's soul, ^ahe shall be chief and captain. ^aWherefore they said, The blind and the lame shall not come into the house.

9 So David dwelt in the fort, and called it the city of David. And David built round about from ^aMillo and inward.

10 And David ^awent on, and grew great; and ^athe LORD God of hosts was with him.

11 ¶ And ^aHiram king of Tyre sent messengers to David, and cedar trees, and carpenters, and ^amasons: and ^athey built David an house.

12 And ^aDavid perceived that the LORD had established him king over Israel, and that he had exalted his kingdom for ^ahis people Israel's sake.

13 And ^aDavid took ^ahim more concubines and wives out of Jerusalem, after he was come from Hebron: and there were yet sons and daughters born to David.

14 And these ^abe ^athe names of those that were born unto him in Jerusalem; ^aShammuah, and Shobab, and ^aNathan, and ^aSolomon,

15 Ibhar also, and ^aElishua, and Nepheg, and Japhia,

16 And Elishamah, and ^aEliada, and ^aEliphalet.

17 ¶ But when the Philistines heard that they had anointed David king over Israel, all the ^aPhilistines came up to ^aseek David; and David heard of it, and went down to ^athe hold.

18 The Philistines also came, and spread themselves in ^athe valley of Rephaim.

19 And David ^aenquired of the LORD, saying, Shall I go up to the Philistines? wilt thou deliver them into mine hand? And ^athe LORD said unto David, Go up; for I will doubtless deliver the Philistines into thine hand.

20 And David came to ^aBaal-perazim, and David smote them there, and said, The LORD hath broken forth upon mine enemies before me, as the breach of waters. Therefore he called the name of that place ^aBaal-perazim.

21 And there they left their images, and ^aDavid and his men ^aburned them.

were said to be "hated of David's soul;" for they were devoted Canaanites and idolaters, if not blasphemers of God.—But, by "the blind and the lame," some understand the idols of the Jebusites, which David's soldiers had thus called in contempt: but their worshippers so confided in them, that they defied David to take the citadel whilst they kept their station, or by any means to remove them; and declared, that if he did, they would no longer admit them into their temples or houses. David, however, got possession: and near to this mount the ark was placed, and the temple was built; and the residence of the family of David was fixed. (Notes, 11. vi. 1. 17. Ps. cxxii.)

V. 9. Millo seems to have been a place of public convention, all around which David erected such buildings, as were proper for rendering the city the seat of government. (Note, Judg. ix. 20. 2 Kings xii. 20, 21.)

V. 11. Hiram sent to congratulate David on his accession to the throne, and to enter into a league with him; and as his subjects were better architects than the Israelites, they were employed in building David a palace, suited to his exalted station. Though Saul affected the splendour of royalty, yet he did not build a royal palace; but David built one, perhaps as a token of his belief that the kingdom would be continued in his family.

V. 12. David was sensible, that God had advanced him to the kingdom, not so much that he might be honourable and prosperous, as that he might promote the temporal and spiritual interests of his people.

V. 13-16. (Marg. Ref.) It was customary for kings to multiply wives, and to strengthen their interest by many alliances; and to this David improperly conformed. Notes, iii. 2-5. xi. 1-5. xv. 16. xvi. 29-23. 1 Kings, xi. 1-8.) Some names are mentioned in Chronicles not found here; perhaps the sons there mentioned died in infancy. (Note, 1 Chr. iii. 1-9.)

V. 17, 18. The Philistines, satisfied with the advantages which they had enjoyed since the death of Saul, had been restrained from molesting the Israelites during their civil dissensions: but they invaded them as soon as they were united again under one king. Thus they delivered David from any embarrassment, about warring against those who had previously protected him. Notes, 1 Sam. xxvii. 1-3. xxviii. 1, 2.) He immediately therefore marched to some fortified place, where he might check their incursions, and consult what measures to take.—The valley of Rephaim was not far from Jerusalem.

V. 20. Baal-perazim properly signifies the lord of breaches. By some evident interposition the Lord himself fought against the Philistines, like the breaking forth of impetuous torrents, which bear all down before them. David therefore gave the place the name of Baal-perazim, by way of ascribing to God all the honour of the victory.

V. 21. The Philistines expected protection from their images, but they became a prey to the conquerors. When the Philistines had taken the ark of the Lord, he by grievous judgments constrained them to restore it: (Notes,

NOTES.

CHAP. V. V. 1, 2. (Note, 1 Chr. xii. 23-40.) When Abner and Ishbosheth were dead, the tribes of Israel were left "as sheep without a shepherd;" they had no inclination to set up another of Saul's family in opposition to David; and having observed the prosperous state of Judah under his government, they began to entertain higher and more honourable thoughts of him. Of their own accord, therefore, they applied to him, by their elders, to take the government upon him; and as a reason why he should forgive their ill-usage, they pleaded their near relation to him, being his brethren, the descendants of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. They now praised his former services, which before they had overlooked; and they acknowledged the Lord's appointment of him, which before they had resisted. They therefore desired "to put themselves under his protection; and hoped that he would rule over them in tenderness and equity, for their safety and comfort, as a shepherd feeds his flock; as well as that he would lead them forth to victory over their enemies. This is introduced as a part of the Lord's commission to him, when he appointed him to the kingdom, by which they conveyed the intimation in the most unexceptionable and efficacious manner.—This is the first time good rulers are spoken of under the emblem of shepherds, which is afterwards very common, and is especially applied to Christ our King. (Marg. Ref.) But wicked rulers are characterized as lions, bears, wolves, and leopards. (Notes, Prov. xxviii. 15, 16. Ez. xix. 2-9. xxii. 27, 28. Dan. vii. 2-8.)

V. 3. It is probable that David agreed to an act of indemnity for past offences, and engaged to rule over his people according to the law of God; and they submitted to his authority according to the same rule.—On this occasion he was anointed a third time, probably by the high priest. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 4, 5. If David was twenty years of age when Samuel anointed him, Saul reigned ten years after that transaction; but it is not certainly known how long he had reigned before. (Note, Acts, xiii. 21.)

V. 6-8. The greater part of Jerusalem lay in the lot of Benjamin, and had hitherto been possessed by the Jebusites; (Notes, Josh. xv. 63. Judg. i. 8. 21;) but as soon as Israel had submitted to David, he marched to dispossess them. The citadel, called "the stronghold of Zion," was fortified by nature and art, and the Jebusites set him at defiance. Confiding in its strength, they told him that blind and lame men could defend it against his army; and, perhaps in derision, placed a company of such persons upon it, who insulted David and his soldiers: for the last clause, (8,) may be read, "They had said, even the blind and the lame, that he shall not come into the house." But David commanded his men, "when they smote the Jebusites; to throw down the blind and the lame into the gutter," or ditch, as it might be read; which, under the conduct of Joab, they effected accordingly. These 22 And the Philistines came up yet again, and spread themselves in the valley of Rephaim.

23 And when David enquired of the LORD, he said, Thou shalt not go up; but fetch a compass behind them, and come upon them over against the mulberry-trees.

24 And let it be, when thou hearest the sound of a going in the tops of the mulberry-trees, that then thou shalt bestir thyself: for then shall the LORD go out before thee, to smite the host of the Philistines.

25 And David did so, as the LORD had commanded him; and smote the Philistines from Geba until thou come to Gazer.

CHAP. VI.

David fetches the ark from Kirjath-jearim on a new cart, 1-5. Uzzah is smitten, David is disconcerted, and the ark is left with Obed-edom, whose house is blessed on account of it, 6-11. David brings the ark to Zion with sacrifices; and dances before it, for which Michal despises him, 12-18. He places it in a tabernacle with joy and feasting, 17-19. Michal, deriding David for his religious joy, is childless till her death, 20-23.

AGAIN, David gathered together all the chosen men of Israel, thirty thousand.

2 And David arose, and went with all the people, that were with him, from Baale of Judah, to bring up from thence the ark of God, whose name is called by

1 Sam. v. vi.) but the Israelites burnt their idols without either fear or hurt. (1 Chr. xiv. 12. Note, Deut. vii. 25, 26.)

V. 24. When David heard a sound among the mulberry-trees, like the marching of an enemy, denoting the assistance of angels, or of God himself; he was directed to bestir himself. Sometimes the Lord commands and employs, and sometimes he rejects, man's concurrence; that we may neither be self-important, nor negligent.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Mercies, long waited for in faith and patience, will be conferred in the most reputable and comfortable manner: nor shall any go unrewarded, who persist in refusing to employ sinful means for their own deliverance, or advancement. —Civil government is fixed on its firmest basis, and is likely to produce the most permanent blessings, when it is regulated by wholesome laws; marking out duties, prerogatives, and privileges to the prince and people, and reciprocally ratified, as in the presence of the Lord, by the most solemn assurances, with a view to his authority, appointments, and commandments. —We are all brethren; "of one bone, and of one flesh;" and none ought to oppress, or to be cruel to another: princes should use clemency, and tenderly watch over their people, like shepherds over their flocks; and the people should gratefully acknowledge the blessings which they enjoy under their government, honour the authority of God in them, and yield them willing submission in all things lawful. Thus Jesus became our brother, assumed and inhabits our nature, that he might be our Prince and Saviour. Thus the humbled sinner takes encouragement from this endearing relation; applies for his salvation, voluntarily submits to his kind authority, and craves his powerful protection. —The false confidences of ungodly men will assuredly deceive them, and their proud boastings will hasten their ruin: whilst they with whom is the Lord God of hosts, go forward and grow great. In the day of his power, Satan's stronghold, the human heart, is converted into "an habitation of God through the Spirit;" and into a throne, on which the Son of David rules, and brings every thought into obedience to himself. May he thus come and claim and cleanse each of our hearts; and having destroyed every idol, may he dwell and reign there for ever. —It is in mercy to a nation, when wise and righteous persons are exalted to authority: and every advancement or endowment which we receive, should remind us, that the Lord alone had conferred the distinction; and that he did it, that we might be useful to his people by the talents entrusted to us. We have therefore cause to be thankful and watchful; and to pray earnestly for grace sufficient to enable us duly to improve them: nay, we have double cause for humility, when we reflect how little we do so. —Alas! even good men are apt to grow secure and self-indulgent in prosperity, and to sanction by their example, those abuses, which they should oppose or repress: and all our returns for the Lord's mercies are deeply tinged with ingratitude. —When the church of God begins to prosper, its enemies will generally exert themselves: and the great exemption from all kinds of persecution, and the friendliness of the world to religion, with which many are pleased, arise from the policy of the enemy, who determines to let men alone with their empty notions, forms, and profession. —In our spiritual warfare, we must decidedly declare for the Lord, though against relatives or benefactors; and if we consult him, he will teach us to do it without even the appearance of evil. —All those objects, which men idolize, will prove an useless encumbrance to them, when the Lord shall arise to execute judgment on his enemies: and when the wicked shall be swept into destruction, as with an impetuous flood, the earth and all its contents shall be burnt up. But, they who depend upon the Lord, and act according to his directions, and are ready to give him all the praise, will doubtless prevail against all enemies, add one victory to another, and at length be admitted into his presence, to see and adore their before invisible helper.

NOTES.

CHAP. VI. V. 1. In a short time after David had obtained two victories over the Philistines, he formed the plan of bringing the ark to Jerusalem; and he collected thirty thousand principal, or most valiant men, in order to put honour upon the ark, which had been so long left in obscurity.

the name of the LORD of hosts, that dwelleth between the cherubims.

3 And they set the ark of God upon a new cart, and brought it out of the house of Abinadab that was in Gibeah: and Uzzah and Ahio, the sons of Abinadab, drove the new cart.

4 And they brought it out of the house of Abinadab, which was at Gibeah, accompanying the ark of God; and Ahio went before the ark.

5 And David, and all the house of Israel, played before the LORD on all manner of instruments, made of fir-wood, even on harps, and on psalteries, and on timbrels, and on cornets, and on cymbals.

6 And when they came to Nachon's threshing-floor, Uzzah put forth his hand to the ark of God, and took hold of it; for the oxen shook it.

7 And the anger of the LORD was kindled against Uzzah: and God smote him there for his error; and there he died by the ark of God.

8 And David was displeased, because the LORD had made a breach upon Uzzah; and he called the name of the place Perez-uzzah to this day.

9 And David was afraid of the LORD that day,

V. 2. Baale, or Baalim, or Baalah, (the two former masculine, the latter feminine,) was another name for Kirjath-jearim: (Notes, 1 Sam. vii. 1, 2. 17. 1 Chr. xiii. 1—4.) —The terms used in speaking of the ark are very expressive of reverence: "The ark of God, whose name is called by the name of the LORD of hosts, that dwelleth between the cherubims." The name of JEHOVAH Sabaoth, the LORD of hosts, was, as it were, affixed to the ark, because it was the most honoured external representation of his invisible glory: and when the ark was in its proper place, in the holy of holies, the Lord manifested his presence, by the visible glory above it, as the Protector and Glory of Israel. It especially typified Christ, and his merits and mediation, in which the name of JEHOVAH, and all his glorious excellencies, are harmoniously displayed; whilst all his hosts of angels, (represented by "the cherubim,") desire to look down into those mysteries, or to be employed by him who is the Saviour and Glory of his redeemed people, and whom sinners now approach upon a mercy-seat. (Notes, Ex. xxv. 10—22. Ps. lxxx. 1. 1 Pet. i. 10—12.)

V. 3. (Notes, 1 Sam. vi. 2—15.) David and the Israelites seem to have taken the Philistines for their precedent on this occasion, instead of consulting the law of God! (Notes, Num. vii. 4—9. (It is probable, that Abinadab and Eleazar his son were dead before this time, as the ark had continued at Kirjath-jearim perhaps seventy years; but Uzzah and Ahio, two other sons, or descendants, of Abinadab, had succeeded in attendance upon the ark; and they now undertook to drive the cart upon which it was conveyed. There is no proof that they were Levites; though some expositors think they were: (Note, 1 Sam. vii. 1.) and if any of the priests attended, they seem not to have taken an active part in the service. It does not even appear, that the ark was covered previously to its removal, according to the law! Notes, Num. iv. 5, 6.) —Gibeah signifies the hill, and means that division of the city, in which the house of Abinadab stood.

V. 5. (Murg. Refs. Notes, 1 Chr. xv. 16—24.)

V. 6. "—Uzzah, fearing lest the ark should fall, because the oxen stumbled, apparently with a good intention, laid hold of it: yet God smote him for his error." But in what did his error consist? Even the Kohathites, who were appointed to carry the ark, were forbidden to touch it on pain of death: that is, it must first be covered by the priests, and then the Kohathites must carry it by the staves only, and not touch the ark itself, (Num. iv. 15.) but Uzzah, who certainly was not a priest, laid hold on the ark, which probably was not covered. It may be supposed, that neither Eleazar, nor Uzzah, nor Ahio, had thus touched it during all the years it had remained with them; and that it was placed on the cart by the staves only; and though it seemed necessary for Uzzah to lay hold of it; yet the necessity arose from the method of conveyance, which some think, Uzzah had proposed, and he was therefore answerable for all the consequences. It is probable, that he had become too familiar with this sacred symbol of the Lord's especial presence: and that he presumed on the services which he and his family had rendered in taking care of it, when generally neglected; as if that had given him a sanctity equal, or even superior to, that of the priests; so that he and his brother seem to have taken the principal management of the business on themselves. Whereas, when all orders of men concurred in shewing honour to the ark; they ought to have declined any further interference; and referred the care of it to the priests, on whom it properly devolved. No doubt, the Lord saw that in Uzzah's conduct which indicated irreverence and presumption; not wholly unlike the sin of Nadab and Abihu, when they offered strange fire before him: and therefore he smote him, perhaps in a similar manner, and for the same reasons. (Notes, Lev. x. 1—5. 1 Sam. vi. 19—21.) But though he was singled out to be made an example of; his death was a rebuke and warning to David, to the priests, and to all Israel.

V. 8, 9. David's heart was upright, and his zeal and love very fervent: but there were many things faulty in his frame of mind, as well as irregular in his proceedings, on this occasion. He seems to have been possessed with some measure of self-complacency, on account of the important service which he was performing, in honouring the ark after it had been so long neglected; and to and said, "How shall the ark of the LORD come to me.

10 So David would not remove the ark of the LORD unto him into the city of David; but David carried it aside into the house of "Obed-edom the Gittite.

11 And the ark of the LORD continued in the house of Obed-edom the Gittite three months: and the LORD blessed Obed-edom, and all his household.

12 And it was told king David, saying, The LORD hath blessed the house of Obed-edom, and all that pertaineth unto him, because of the ark of God. "So David went and brought up the ark of God from the house of Obed-edom into the city of David with gladness.

13 And it was so, that "when they that bare the ark of the LORD had gone six paces, he sacrificed "oxen and fatlings.

14 And David "danced before the LORD "with all his might; and David was "girded with a linen ephod.

15 So David and all the house of Israel brought up the ark of the LORD "with shouting, and with "the sound of the trumpet.

16 And as the ark of the LORD came into the city of David, "Michal Saul's daughter looked through a window, and saw king David leaping and dancing before the LORD; and she "despised him in her heart.

17 And "they brought in the ark of the LORD, have thought that the goodness of the work would counterbalance a degree of informality in the manner of doing it, and ensure him comfort and commendation: and he had not taken time to examine the law of God, or to consult the priests, how this good work ought to be performed. When therefore matters turned out contrary to his expectations, he was greatly disconcerted; and his lively religious affections were extinguished. He was angry, (so the word signifies,) that occasion had been given for this unexpected stroke; though it does not appear with whom he was displeased, and certainly his anger implied a degree of rebellion against the dispensation of God in smiting Uzzah! A measure of servile fear succeeded to zeal, hope, and joy; and he would not venture to bring the ark any nearer to him, lest he should be destroyed in like manner. (Notes, Num. xvii. 12, 13. Josh. vii. 6—9. 1 Chr. xv. 12—14. Is. vi. 5. Ps. cxix. 120.)

V. 10, 11. Until David had further considered the matter, and come to some determination what to do with the ark, it was carried to the house of Obed-edom; who with humble confidence was ready to receive it, notwithstanding the example of Uzzah. There it abode three months, and the whole multitude returned home, and left the business unfinished. Obed-edom was a Levite, and he is called a Gittite, perhaps from Gath-rimmon, the place of his birth, or of his abode. (Josh. xxi. 24, 25.) All things relating to his health, family, and circumstances, prospered in so extraordinary a manner, whilst the ark was with him, that every one noticed it.—Doubtless Obed-edom behaved to the ark with due reverence. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 12, 13. When David heard of the extraordinary blessing, bestowed on Obed-edom because of the ark of God, he was encouraged to resume his design of bringing it to Jerusalem. He had now learned his mistake, and the reason of the breach made on Uzzah. His mind was also become calm, and his zeal, love, and joy, had revived. Having likewise learned that none but the Levites of the family of Kohath ought to carry the ark, (Notes, 1 Chr. xv.) his "love now abounded in knowledge, and in all judgment," (Note, Phil. i. 9—11.) Conscious therefore that he was unworthy of being employed in such a service, and sensible of his cause for gratitude, if preserved from grievous miscarriages, he set out with offering sacrifices: and, as he thus united humble faith and holy fear, with his fervent affections, he was accepted and prospered accordingly. (Note, Judg. xx. 26—28.)

V. 14, 15. On this solemn occasion David laid aside the distinctions of royalty: and, as taking the lead in the worship of God, he wore a linen ephod, the ordinary garment of the priests, when officiating; yet sometimes worn by others. (Marg. Ref.) But it does not appear that he in the least attempted to encroach upon the priestly office.—The methods adopted by the Israelites, in expressing their joy and gratitude, were such as were customary among them; and the music, blowing of trumpets, and sacred dances, were accompanied with psalms of praise, sung to the glory of God, by vast multitudes in concert. (Notes, Ec. xv. 20, 21. 2 Chron. xv. xvi.)

V. 16. Saul had neglected the ark and religion; and Michal seems to have had no deep sense of the importance and excellency of heavenly things: but she was possessed with high thoughts of temporal dignity and royalty. Perhaps she considered David's zeal for the ark as a reproach of her father's negligence: at least she considered his transports of religious joy, in the midst of the people, as a degradation of his character, and as exposing him to contempt. David the brave captain, leading forth the people to battle, and returning with them in triumph, she had admired: but David the saint, leading the people in the ordinances of God, and setting them an example of fervency of spirit in his and set it in his place, in the midst of the tabernacle that David had pitched for it: and David "offered burnt-offerings and peace-offerings before the LORD.

18 And as soon "as David had made an end of offering burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, "he blessed the people in the name of the LORD of hosts.

19 And "he dealt among all the people, even among the whole multitude of Israel, as well to the women as men, to every one a cake of bread, and a good piece of flesh, and a flagon of wine. "So all the people departed every one to his house.

20 Then David returned to "bless his household. And "Michal the daughter of Saul came out to meet David, and said, How "glorious was the king of Israel to-day, who "uncovered himself to-day in the eyes of the handmaids of his servants, as one of the "vain fellows "shamelessly uncovereth himself!

21 And David said unto Michal, "It was "before the LORD, which "chose me before thy father, and before all his house, to appoint me ruler over the people of the LORD, over Israel: therefore will I "play before the LORD.

22 And I will yet be "more vile than thus, and will be base "in mine own sight; and of the maid-servants, which thou hast spoken of, of them shall "I be had in honour.

23 Therefore "Michal the daughter of Saul had no child "unto the day of her death.

service, she despised in her heart; yet this was by far the most illustrious part of his character.

V. 17. The tabernacle, which had been situated at Shiloh, was from thence carried to Nob, and perhaps when Samuel died, it was placed at Gibeon, with the altar of burnt-offering, &c. (Note, 1 Sam. xxi. 1, 2. 2 Chr. i. 3, 4.) David, however, had prepared another tent for the reception of the ark, where an altar was erected and sacrifices offered; as also there were on the former altar. Note, 1 Chr. xvi. 37—43.) It may be supposed that the building of a temple was already in contemplation, and that this tabernacle was intended for a temporary accommodation, until that should be accomplished.

V. 18, 19. David prayed for the people, and as a prophet solemnly blessed them in the name of the Lord, not using the ministry of the priests. (Notes, Num. vi. 23—26.) Afterwards he distributed of the flesh of the peace-offerings, which he sacrificed at his own expense, a sufficiency to every one present for a sacred feast, with bread and wine in proportion.

V. 20. After all these public solemnities, "David returned to bless his household," to worship God with them, as it is probable he was wont to do, and to join with them in a religious feast.—Michal spake the language of passion and contempt. Because David had expressed great zeal and earnestness, she suggested that he had behaved in an indecent manner: and as he had laid aside his royal robes, she would represent it as if he had improperly stripped himself. (Note, 1 Sam. xix. 23, 24.) But it cannot be supposed that David did any thing indecorous on the occasion; except as Michal considered his piety and activity in religion as unbecoming the dignity of a king.

V. 21—23. David very properly gloried in his zeal for the service and glory of God: before him he was willing to be abased both in his own eyes, and in those of others. And if his earnestness in religion was considered as playing the fool, and rendering himself vile, he desired to be still more vile; for he resolved to be still more zealous in that good cause. But he intimated to Michal, that for want of similar zeal, her father had been rejected; and that he was chosen in his stead to be "ruler of the people of the Lord." He was therefore bound by every tie to be very earnest in promoting his worship: and that which she despised as disgraceful to him, would in the event prove his greatest honour. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—11. Our judgment in religion must be regulated by the word of God, and not by the customs of the world; or even of the church: as human inventions have often long prevailed, when divine appointments have grown into disuse and contempt. But true believers are accepted, notwithstanding such errors and abuses as they either do not discern, or unable to rectify: yet they, who have it in their power, should embrace the first opportunity of replacing matters upon the scriptural foundation, and of bringing to light and reputation those parts of true religion, which have been most neglected and obscured. This is best done by shewing their nature, use, and importance, that others may willingly concur, and gradually call the attention of more and more towards them: for thus the change will appear to be effected by the authority of God, and not by that of man.—That the Lord dwelleth upon the mercy-seat between the cherubim, that the name and perfections of JEHOVAH are in Jesus, the true Ark of the covenant, forms the foundation of every genuine human hope of felicity, and is the source of every believer's privileges and comforts: whilst with all his hosts and all his authority, God is his reconciled Friend, Father, and Protector. Whatever else may be overlooked, these capital truths should be always placed in the most convincing and conspicuous light, in every sermon, or religious ordinance; that sinners may be called on to believe, and believers to rejoice and glorify God our Saviour.—But ignorance and error in the essential truths of religion, are not the only dangers to which men are exposed; the irreverent abuse of the gospel may be equally destructive.—Men frequently, by office, or by habit, are conversant about the most important truths or observances of religion with a carnal mind, till they contract a contemptuous familiarity with them, grow proud of their formal exercises, presumptuously intrude into services which do not belong to them, and, in rash zeal for the supposed cause of godliness, use such means as the Lord hath not commanded, nay, such as he hath prohibited. But whatever necessity may be imagined, or whatever good intentions may be pleaded, He will resent, and perhaps in this world punish, such forbidden touches of his ark: we should therefore be careful to keep our proper place, to do our own work, and to proceed in the manner prescribed in his word.—Even eminently wise and good men cannot perform very important services, without feeling, at some times and in some degree, the emotions of pride and self-preference. And, though religion consists much in high affections, and great love and delight in spiritual things; yet even when the affections are genuine and gracious, except they are accompanied with proportionable knowledge, judgment, and humility, they will betray us into many unwarrantable practices, and expose us to severe rebukes. In the fervency of zeal we are all very prone to forget the precepts of God, and are too eager about the substance of our services, to consult the Scriptures concerning the right method of conducting them. Thus, we are unawares drawn into transgression, and meet with severe checks, when we expected great success and comfort. This is indeed useful and salutary, but it often exceedingly disconcerts the mind: and then the transition is very sudden from elevated joy and confidence, to great dejection and fretfulness; from a hope bordering on irreverence, to slavish fear which verges to despondency, and disheartens from present duty. Such sudden changes the believer recollects with shame. He too has often, especially in the time of his injudicious and inexperienced zeal, been “greatly displeased,” or discouraged, by those things, which were only intended to humble and instruct him: and whilst he cannot excuse David, he sees more cause to condemn himself, and to pray, “Enter not into judgment with thy servant, O LORD, for in thy sight shall no man living be justified.”—But while one is disheartened from active service, through servile fear, others will be animated with humble faith and hope; and not dread the ark, or the ordinance, but only the sin which occasioned the rebuke, or against which the threatening is denounced. And the Lord will abundantly recompense those, who are humbly bold for him, whilst others are either presumptuous or desponding.

V. 12—23. When pious men, who have been betrayed into unwarrantable conduct, have had time for self-examination, searching the Scriptures, and prayer, they will discover and confess their mistakes, and be reduced to a better temper; they will justify God in his corrections; they will be convinced, that safety and comfort consist, not in absenting themselves from his ordinances, or in declining dangerous services, but in attending to their duty in a proper spirit and manner; (Note, Matt. v. 23, 24.—1 Cor. xi. P. O. 23—31;) they will profit by their own errors, stand the stronger for their falls, and not abate in their zeal and affections, but learn to connect them with humility, and to regulate them according to the precepts of the sacred Scripture. Then they may expect to prosper in their attempts to glorify God, and promote the cause of true religion.—We are so unworthy, and our services so defiled, that all our joy in divine ordinances must be connected with the exercise of repentance, and faith in the Redeemer's atoning blood: so that the more we are preserved from sin, and the more we are enabled to do in the work of God, with acceptance and comfort, the greater obligations we are brought under, and the more thankful we ought to be.—We ought to serve the Lord with our whole body and soul, and with every endowment or capacity we possess; our religious affections cannot be too intense, if properly directed; nor our expressions of them too strong, provided “all be done decently and in order,” according to the spirit of that dispensation under which we live.—The greatest of men are as nothing before the infinite God; their dependence is as entire as that of their inferiors, and their obligations and accountability are greater: the meanest employment in his service is in truth the greatest honour of the mightiest princes: they ought to be as base in their own eyes, when worshipping the Lord, and confessing their sins, as their meanest subjects; while they should take the lead, and set the example in every thing good: (Note, Jam. i. 9—11:) and though some will despise their piety, as madness or meanness, they will be had in honour for it by numbers, yea, by many who are not themselves religious.—Indeed proud and carnal persons have always ridiculed fervent devotion, as folly or enthusiasm. Satan hath long deluded men into a persuasion, that such holy earnestness is unprincipled, unmanly, unbecoming persons of genius, learning, wealth, or influence, and only fit for ignorant poor people, women or children. However wise or eminent a man may be in other respects, if he be scripturally zealous and devoted to God, he must expect contempt and insult, even from his inferiors and relatives; nay, he needs not wonder, if he be falsely accused of the most shameless practices. But if the Lord has chosen and accepted us, we should deem such reproaches honourable, and determine to become still more vile in the eyes of ungodly revilers, by abounding in those services which they despise.—Whilst we meekly rebuke such opposers, the Lord will certainly plead our cause against them: for “them that honour him, he will honour; but they who despise him shall be lightly esteemed.”—Piety should always be attended with liberality; and public exercises of religion must not exclude private prayer and family-worship, which should be neglected by none in any rank of life. Finally, in this removal of the ark, let us contemplate the Redeemer's ascension to glory, and seek to participate his precious gifts, and to serve him with ardent love and joy.

NOTES.

CHAP. VII. V. 1—3. (Note, v. 11.) David, now peaceably possessed of the kingdom, victorious over all his enemies, and at rest in his palace, considered how he might employ his leisure and prosperity in the service of God: when it occurred to his mind how stately his own house was, and how meanly the ark was lodged; and he conceived a design of building a magnificent temple for its reception. Notes, Ps. cxxii. 2—5. Matt. vi. 33, 34.) This he intimated to Nathan the prophet, a man of great piety and wisdom, who appears to have been his companion and counsellor. And Nathan, assured that the design arose from zeal for the glory of God, who was with David in all his undertakings, encouraged him to proceed; not by revelation from God, but according to his own private judgment. (Note, 1 Cor. vii. 39, 40.)

V. 4. The message which follows was sent without delay, probably that David might not remain under a mistake, or set his heart on a work not intended for him: and it was sent by Nathan, that he might not be discouraged by having his counsel contradicted by another prophet.—Nathan was not faulty in encouraging David, any more than David was in purposing to build a temple: they both did well, but the Lord had wise reasons for determining otherwise. (Note, 1 Kings viii. 15—21. Marg. Ref.)

V. 5. Shalt thou, &c? That is, ‘Dost thou entertain such a purpose, which did not enter into the thoughts of any that were before thee? yet thou shalt not accomplish that design; for the work is assigned to another person.’—It appears that Nathan spake more to David than is here recorded: for other reasons are afterwards given, why David was not permitted to build the temple. (Notes, 2 Chr. xxii. 8—10. xxviii. 2—8.)

V. 6, 7. Though the building of a temple accorded with the spirit of the Mosaic dispensation, it was not commanded by any law; and was not therefore peculiarly any one's duty, without some further intimation from God. In the days of Moses the Lord had, by the ark, the symbol of his presence, dwelt, and removed, with his people, in a tabernacle of his own appointing. (Notes, Num. x. 33—36. 2 Chr. xvii. 5.) Since Israel had been settled in Canaan, none of the rulers or judges, who had been raised up out of several of their tribes, were commanded to build a temple: yet the Lord had accepted their worship, while the ark abode within curtains. It was not, therefore, necessary either to the glory of God, or the good of Israel, to have a temple: and the erecting of one might therefore very well be delayed a little longer. (Note, Acts vi. 44—50.)

V. 8—11. The Lord did not employ David in building the temple, but he did not in anger reject his intended service: for it was not proper, either that he should engross all the honour, or do all the work. He had been advanced from a very inferior situation to the throne of Israel, and employed in subduing their enemies, as well as made triumphant over his own; and he was, or would become, one of the most honourable and renowned characters in the world. (Marg. Ref.) Moreover the Lord had further employment for him of another sort, which was proper to be done before the building of the temple. The Canaanites still dwelt in the land, and greatly harassed the people; and the neighbouring nations frequently afflicted them. This had been the case from their first entrance into Canaan, even in the time of the judges, who wrought only temporary deliverances from their more grievous oppressors. It was indeed reserved for David to crush the remnant of the Canaanites, to subjugate the other enemies of Israel, and to put them in full and quiet possession of the land of promise; so that it was by their subsequent revolts and apostacies alone, that they afterwards lost the benefit of his victories. This was his peculiar work; and though as a promise thus given to Israel, was intended to mark out David's line of usefulness.—He was also employed in reforming the state of religion, regulating the courses of the priests and Levites, and composing hymns of praise for the use of the church in after ages; and he made vast preparations even for the temple itself. (Notes, xxiii. 1, 2. 1 Chr. xxiii. xxvi. xxviii. xxix.)

V. 12—16. The Lord intended to establish David's posterity upon the throne of Israel; which was a special favour not granted to Moses, Joshua, or any of David's predecessors; and therefore the work and honour of building the temple were reserved for his son, who ^{was} hereafter to be born; for by the future tense, in this connexion, both Absalom and Adonijah, and all the children which David then had, were excluded from the succession. This son and successor of David would be of a peaceable disposition, and enabled to live at peace, through the success of his father's wars, and would have more leisure and ability to complete the design. To him and his posterity very precious promises were given: the Lord engaged to be ^a father to him, to deal with him as his son, and to establish the throne of his kingdom: and if he sinned, to correct him, as men do their children, according to what they are able to endure, and for their good; yet not to take the kingdom from him, as he had done from Saul, but to establish it from generation to generation.—Though for Solomon's sin the ten tribes were rent from his son; (Notes, 1 Kings xi. 9—13. 29—31. xii. 21—24;) yet the kingdom over Judah remained, unto the Babylonish captivity, in the family of David and Solomon.—These promises were, however, in an especial manner, predictions of Christ, the Son of David, the true Solomon, "the Prince of Peace," who builds the spiritual temple of true believers, to be "an habitation of God through the Spirit;" and accordingly a part of the prophecy is applied to Christ in the New Testament, (Heb. i. 5.) The stability and perpetuity of the kingdom in the house of David is, in Christ, fully accomplished: (Notes, Ps. ii. lxxii. lxxxix. 19—37:) the clause concerning the merciful chastisement of David's son if he offended, and the engagement not to reject him for his transgressions, belongs to his people, who are his seed, and one with him. In a parallel passage, it is put in the plural number, "If his children forsake my law, &c." (Marg. Ref.)—The expression, "before thee," might perhaps be a gracious intimation, that though these things would take place after David's death, yet he would be acquainted with them, and rejoice in them.

V. 17. Nathan did not hesitate to contradict his own counsel; nor did he fear lest this should expose him to censure or contempt! (Note, 1 Kings xx. 1—6.)

servant's house for a great while to come. ^{And} is this the ^{manner} of man, O LORD God?

20 And what can David say more unto thee? for thou, LORD God, ^{knowest} thy servant.

21 For ^{thy} word's sake, and ^{according} to thine own heart, hast thou done all these great things, to make thy servant know ^{them}.

22 Wherefore ^{thou} art great, O LORD God: for ^{there is} none like thee, neither ^{is there} any god beside thee, according to all that we have heard with our ears.

23 And ^{what} one nation in the earth ^{is} like thy people, ^{even} like Israel, whom God ^{went} to redeem for a people to himself, and to ^{make} him a name, and to do for you ^{great} things and terrible, for thy land, before ^{thy} people, which thou redeemedst to thee from Egypt, ^{from} the nations and ^{their} gods?

24 For thou hast ^{confirmed} to thyself thy people Israel, ^{to be} a people unto thee for ever: and thou, LORD, ^{art} become their God.

25 And now, O LORD God, the word that thou hast spoken concerning thy servant, and concerning his house, ^{establish} ^{it} for ever, and do as thou hast said.

26 And ^{let} thy name be magnified for ever, saying, The LORD of hosts ^{is} the God over Israel: and let the house of thy servant David be established ^{before} thee.

27 For thou, O LORD of hosts, God of Israel, hast ^{revealed} to thy servant, saying, ^I will build thee an house: therefore hath thy servant ^{found} in his heart to pray this prayer unto thee.

V. 18. David cordially acquiesced in the will of God; and likewise found his love, gratitude, hope, and joy greatly excited, by these remembrances of past, and promises of future mercies, to himself, his people, and posterity; especially as they all centred in the promised Saviour who was to descend from him. Without delay, therefore, he went to the tabernacle of God before the ark, and poured out his heart in prayer.—It is said, that "he sat before the LORD;" but it is the only place in Scripture, which mentions ^{sitting} as the posture of any servant of God in religious worship; and, though circumstances may sometimes render it necessary, it does not otherwise seem becoming. Probably, the expression only means ^{his continuance} before the LORD for a considerable time, and does not determine the posture in which he prayed.—When David considered the mean estate from which he had been advanced to the throne, and how he had been employed, prospered, and honoured; and when he recollected, the infinite majesty and holiness of God, and his own sinfulness and insignificance before him: he thought nothing of his own endowments or performances, but regarded the whole as the subject of admiring gratitude and praise; and was surprised that the Lord had hitherto upheld and blessed so worthless a person in such an extraordinary manner. (Notes, Gen. xxxix. 9—12. 1 Chr. xxix. 10—19.)

V. 19. A more particular consideration of the blessings, which had now been entailed upon his family, as well as upon himself, still more enhanced David's holy admiration: and he adored the riches of the Divine mercy, as infinitely surpassing the largest bounty of man. It is not the manner of men thus to notice the mean, the vile, the unworthy; thus to make one kindness an introduction to another, and an earnest of, and a reason for, further favours. No, this is beyond example, or conception!—Or, "Is this thy manner of dealing with polluted, rebellious man?" (Note, Is. lv. 8, 9.) How wonderful then the love of a holy God to us sinful creatures, especially in the gift of his "only-begotten Son, to be the propitiation for their sins!" (Note, 1 John, iv. 9—12.)

V. 20, 21. David could find nothing to ask for himself, or his people, or his posterity, but what had already been covenanted to him: so that his prayer consisted of thankful repetitions of the promises. For the Lord ^{knew} his servant, and would do every thing in perfect truth, wisdom, and love, for his good; and he desired no prosperity, wealth, or honour, except in reference to the will and glory of God. He could assign no reason for the Lord's former kindness to him, but his sovereign will, according to his own heart, dictating his gracious promises, and then for the word's sake fulfilling them: and he had the same ground for expecting all other blessings, according to his holy covenant. (Notes, Rom. viii. 28—31. 1 Pet. i. 3—5.)

V. 22—25. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Deut. iv. 20. 32—40. 1 Kings viii. 23, 24. Neh. ix. 5—8.) For you. (23.) These words are not found in the parallel passage, (1 Chr. xvii. 21;) and seem here redundant.

V. 26. The Lord by his promises had connected the glory of his own truth, with the establishment of David's family; and David also expected and desired, that his descendants might be instrumental in maintaining true religion for the glory of God.—In Christ all the perfections of the Godhead are glorified;

28 And now, O LORD God, thou art that God, and thy words be true, and thou hast promised this goodness unto thy servant:

29 Therefore now let it please thee to bless the house of thy servant, that it may continue for ever before thee: for thou, O LORD God, hast spoken it, and with thy blessing let the house of thy servant be blessed for ever.

David subdues the Philistines and Moabites, 1, 2. He smites Hadadezer and the Syrians, 3-8. AND after this it came to pass, that David smote the Philistines, and subdued them: and David took Metheg-ammah out of the hand of the Philistines.

2 And he smote Moab, and measured them with a line, casting them down to the ground; even with two lines measured he to put to death, and with one full line to keep alive: and so the Moabites became David's servants, and brought gifts.

3 ¶ David smote also Hadadezer, the son of Rehob, king of Zobah, as he went to recover his border, at the river Euphrates.

4 And David took from him a thousand chariots, and seven hundred horsemen, and twenty thousand footmen: and David houghed all the chariot-horses, but reserved of them for an hundred chariots.

5 And when the Syrians of Damascus came to succour Hadadezer king of Zobah, David slew of the Syrians two and twenty thousand men.

6 Then David put garrisons in Syria of Damascus: and the Syrians became servants to David, and brought gifts. And the LORD preserved David whithersoever he went.

7 And David took the shields of gold that were on the servants of Hadadezer, and brought them to Jerusalem.

8 And from Bethah, and from Berothai, cities of Hadadezer, king David took exceeding much brass.

and by him the cause of truth and righteousness is, and will be, established upon earth. (Notes, 1 Chr. xxix. 10-19. Ps. xxi. 13. lxxii. 17-19. Matt. vi. 13.) In all these respects David prayed for the magnifying of God's name, in the establishment of his posterity. (Note, 1 Chr. xvii. 24.)

V. 27-29. David could not have ventured to make such large requests, if the Lord had not promised the blessings which he implored: but he was humbly bold to ask all that God had engaged to give.—The promises of Scripture are not made personally to us by name, as these were to David; but they belong to all who believe in Jesus Christ, and plead them in his name. (Note, 2 Pet. i. 3, 4. Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-17. The greater leisure and ability any man is favoured with, the more should he form, and attempt to execute, plans of important usefulness; and they, who are largely replenished with the grace of God, will most comfortably enjoy their possessions, when they can render them subservient to his glory and the salvation of souls: they will often be grieved to reflect how much is expended on themselves, and how little in the service of God; and scarcely deem any thing done for him while so much remains undone. Such zealous and liberal Christians should be encouraged by their brethren, and by ministers, in the great designs, which they conceive for the advancement of religion, as far as they agree with the Scripture. Yet many unexceptionable undertakings may fail of success; because they do not accord with the perfect plan of God: but none of them will fail to meet with a gracious recompense.—The wisest and best of men (not excepting prophets and apostles, unless when immediately speaking by divine inspiration,) have been liable to error; and therefore the claim of infallibility forms the very essence of blasphemous arrogance. But the Lord will rectify the prejudicial mistakes of his upright servants, and prevent every bad consequence: and it is their true honour, as well as their duty, to retract what they have unadvisedly advanced, and to acknowledge themselves mistaken; and all wise men will respect them the more for doing so.—The Lord does not need the services of man, neither does he regard external splendour; we cannot therefore please him in his instituted worship, if we have not the warrant of his word for what we do.—He hath accepted and blessed those, who spiritually worshipped him in the midst of external meanness; and he never rejected, or found fault with them, on that account: but no outward magnificence will render formal services pleasing to him.—Our desires, even of usefulness, must be subjected to his holy will, and regulated by his precept. He appoints unto every man his work, and endows him with suitable qualifications: and each of us should thankfully and faithfully mind our proper business; and rejoice in the superior talents, and more honourable and important services, of our brethren.—When we feel the risings of envy or discontent, and are ready to murmur at disappointment, we should reflect on what the Lord hath already done for us; from what a wretched condition he hath brought us; and what blessings he hath prepared for us; and we shall readily perceive that we have been dealt with much better than we have deserved, or could reasonably have expected; nay, that if our desires be not granted, it is merely because our wise and gracious Lord sees it better for us that they should be refused.—Our own plans, though well intended, are often fit for nothing but to be laid aside, to make way for the Lord's purposes respecting us, of which perhaps we had no conception. But, in one way or other, God will bless, and make useful to his church, those persons who simply devote themselves and all they have to his glory. If the Lord deny them one supposed blessing, he will counterbalance the refusal with other tokens of his love, and by raising their expectations of other promised mercies: and he teaches them to rejoice in the prosperity of his church, as in their own felicity.—Israel, according to the flesh, forfeited by their sins the rest to which they were brought: and though the cause of God has hitherto been greatly opposed and run down; yet the time is coming when this cause will gain the entire ascendancy, and overspread the earth; and when the Israel of God shall be planted, and dwell in a place of their own, and move no more, neither shall the children of wickedness afflict them any more for ever.—The most favoured and honoured of men will soon fulfil their days, and sleep with their fathers; but they die at peace with God, and depart hence, to join the blessed company before the throne.—We should desire the entail of our blessings upon our posterity, that they may be the children of God also; but our chief comfort in life and death must arise from looking unto Jesus, the Son of God, and the everlasting King of Israel, and in participating his covenant mercies. In his human nature "all the fulness of the Godhead dwelleth bodily," and by uniting his people to himself through his Holy Spirit, he builds the living temple, in which the Lord will dwell for ever. If we belong to him, he will not finally reject us: but when we offend, he will, by rebukes and chastenings, bring us to repentance, and establish us, as kings and priests before him, to all eternity.

V. 18-29. When we have duly attended to the word which the Lord hath spoken, and when our affections are excited, or our consciences alarmed, let us without delay retire, to pour out our hearts before him in fervent prayer, grounded on his gracious promises in Christ Jesus.—The more God really honours any one, the lower he sinks in self-abasement; as conscious that he has nothing of his own, but meanness, sin, and misery, and that he owes all to the free mercy and goodness of God. But if the blessings which we have already received are so vast and unmerited; if it appears wonderful, as it does to every humble believer, that the Lord has brought him hitherto; what shall we say to the future, the eternal, felicity which he has covenanted to his people! or of the gift of his Son to be the ransom of our souls!—His thoughts and ways are not like ours, or he never would have bestowed such blessings on rebellious polluted man. What can we then say more unto him? What can we ask or desire, but the performance of those promises, which of his own sovereign mercy he hath made unto us? Comparing the former displays of the glorious excellencies of our God, with those which he hath manifested in his dealings with us, we shall at once have our admiring gratitude enlarged, and our expectation of further blessings increased; and shall find in our hearts to plead his precious promises; neither deeming them too large, nor too hard, for him to perform to us wretched sinners. Though he have not given us a great name, "like unto the great men that are in the earth;" we shall be contented with "a name written in the book of life," and a clear character among our brethren: and we can desire no more for our posterity, than that they may be "blessed with the blessing of the Lord for ever."

NOTES.

CHAP. VIII. V. 1. (Note, 1 Chr. xviii. 1.) It is probable, that Metheg-ammah, or "the bride of Ammah," was an eminence or natural fortress on which Gath was built, and which gave the inhabitants an opportunity of retaining the neighbourhood in subjection. (Marg.)—The Philistines had long oppressed Israel: Samson had begun to deliver his people from them; but David effectually subdued the Philistines, and left them no power any more to molest the Israelites. (Notes, Judg. xiii. 4, 5.)

V. 2. The Jews say, that the Moabites had slain David's parents. It may be supposed, that he had just cause for this war; and for the severity with which he treated the vanquished: as he seems to have measured their country, and desolated two-thirds of it, and to have slaughtered two-thirds of the captives. (Note, xii. 26-31.) Thus the Moabites became tributaries to Israel, as Balaam had predicted. (Num. xxiii. 17.)

V. 3. Zobah seems to have been a part of Syria, to the north-east of Canaan, to the south of Damascus, and reaching to the river Euphrates.—It is probable, that Hadadezer was jealous of David's growing greatness, and came to assist the Moabites, in order to secure his own dominions: and that this gave David a fair opportunity of extending his conquests to the Euphrates.—Some think, however, that David went to establish his dominion over all the countries as far as that river, according to the grant made to Israel; and that he was opposed by Hadadezer. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 4. Seven hundred. Seven thousand horsemen are mentioned in Chronicles: perhaps they were divided into seven hundred divisions of ten men each; however, David disabled the most of the horses, not desiring to trust in chariots or in horses, but in the living God. (Note, Josh. xi. 6.) He reserved, however, horses for an hundred chariots; and this is the first time that chariots of any kind are mentioned, as possessed by a ruler in Israel. (Note, Deut. xvii. 16.)

V. 5-8. The Syrians of Damascus were in alliance with Hadadezer, but not subject to him. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 9-11. Hamath lay north of Canaan, and south of Damascus.—Thus,

10 Then Toi sent "Joram his son unto king David, to salute him, and to bless him, because he had fought against Hadadezer, and smitten him: (for Hadadezer had wars with Toi:) and Joram brought with him vessels of silver, and vessels of gold, and vessels of brass;

11 Which also king David did dedicate unto the Lord, with the silver and gold that he had dedicated of all nations which he subdued:

12 Of Syria, and of Moab, and of the children of Ammon, and of the Philistines, and of Amalek, and of the spoil of Hadadezer, son of Rehob, king of Zobah.

13 And David gat him a name when he returned from smiting of the Syrians in the valley of salt, being eighteen thousand men.

14 ¶ And he put garrisons in Edom; throughout all Edom put he garrisons: and all they of Edom became David's servants. And the Lord preserved David whithersoever he went.

15 ¶ And David reigned over all Israel; and David executed judgment and justice unto all his people.

16 And Joab the son of Zeruiah was over the host; and Jehoshaphat the son of Ahilud was recorder;

17 And Zadok the son of Ahitub, and Ahimelech the son of Abiathar, were the priests: and Seraiah was the scribe;

18 And Benaiah the son of Jehoiada was over both the Cherethites and the Pelethites; and David's sons were chief rulers.

CHAP. IX.

David enquires after Saul's family, and is informed by Ziba, of Mephibosheth the son of Jonathan, 1-4. He sends for him, and entertains him at his table for Jonathan's sake, 5-8. He restores to him the family-estate, entrusting the management to Ziba, 9-13.

AND David said, Is there yet any that is left of the house of Saul, that I may shew him kindness for Jonathan's sake?

by arms or alliances, the heathen nations became tributary to David, and furnished those riches, which he dedicated to the Lord for the building of the temple. (Note, 1 Chr. xxii. 14. xxix. 1-9.)

V. 12. Ammon, &c. Either some of the Ammonites at this time assisted the Moabites: or this is spoken by way of anticipation. (Notes, x. xii. 26-31.)

V. 13, 14. Syrians. It is said in Chronicles, that "Abishai smote eighteen thousand Edomites in the valley of salt." Perhaps they were Edomites fighting for the Syrians. It is evident, however, that Edom was subjected in consequence of this victory, by which David acquired great renown.—In the title of the sixtieth Psalm, twelve thousand of Edom are mentioned, as slain by Joab. Perhaps Joab and Abishai commanded distinct bodies of troops, and eighteen thousand were slain between them, six thousand by Abishai, and twelve thousand by Joab. Thus the predictions concerning the Edomites began to be fulfilled. (Notes, Gen. xxv. 22, 23. xxvii. 27-29. 39, 40. Num. xxiv. 18, 19. Ps. lx. 6-12.)

V. 15-18. The assiduity, as well as the equity and impartiality of David's administration, is here stated; in which, as well as in his victories, he was a type of Christ. Under David, Joab was commander in chief of the forces. Jehoshaphat recorded and brought forward every business in an orderly manner, or acted as judge or chancellor. Under Abiathar the high priest, Ahimelech his son, and Zadok descended from Eleazar, were the presiding priests, probably the one on mount Zion, the other at Gibeon where the tabernacle was. (Note, 1 Kings iii. 4. Chr. xvi. 37-43.) Seraiah was scribe or secretary, to inspect and manage all writings concerning foreign or domestic transactions. And Benaiah commanded the Cherethites, and Pelethites, David's constant attendants or guards, who were chosen out from his other troops, and probably consisted chiefly of those, who had accompanied him in his distresses; or of such as had joined him from among the Philistines, for these are called Cherethites. (Marg. Ref.) His sons, also, when grown up, were probably initiated into public business, as they became capable of it.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In due season and succession, every promise and prediction of God's word will receive its full accomplishment.—Short is the triumphing and certain the ruin of all his enemies, however strong and confederated. But they, who confide in his protection and are doing his work, will be preserved and prospered, "whithersoever they go." They will not allow themselves to glory in their success, or to establish any other ground of confidence, than the power and truth of him who hath hitherto helped them, to whom they will dedicate the fruits of their prosperity; and in this they will be distinguished from all the other mighty ones, who have been renowned upon the earth.—It is true wisdom to court the friendship of those whom the Lord prospers. A safe and honourable peace should be the object of all wars: and the diligent impartial

2 And there was of the house of Saul a servant, whose name was Ziba: and when they had called him unto David, the king said unto him, Art thou Ziba? And he said, Thy servant is he.

3 And the king said, Is there not yet any of the house of Saul, that I may shew the kindness of God unto him? And Ziba said unto the king, Jonathan hath yet a son, which is lame on his feet.

4 And the king said unto him, Where is he? And Ziba said unto the king, Behold, he is in the house of Machir, the son of Ammiel, in Lo-debar.

5 ¶ Then king David sent, and fetched him out of the house of Machir, the son of Ammiel, from Lo-debar.

6 Now when Mephibosheth, the son of Jonathan, the son of Saul, was come unto David, he fell on his face, and did reverence. And David said, Mephibosheth. And he answered, Behold thy servant.

7 ¶ And David said unto him, Fear not: for I will surely shew thee kindness for Jonathan thy father's sake, and will restore thee all the land of Saul thy father; and thou shalt eat bread at my table continually.

8 And he bowed himself, and said, What is thy servant, that thou shouldest look upon such a dead dog as I am?

9 ¶ Then the king called to Ziba, Saul's servant, and said unto him, I have given unto thy master's son all that pertained to Saul, and to all his house.

10 Thou therefore, and thy sons, and thy servants, shall till the land for him, and thou shalt bring in the fruits, that thy master's son may have food to eat: but Mephibosheth thy master's son shall eat bread always at my table. Now Ziba had fifteen sons and twenty servants.

11 Then said Ziba unto the king, According to all that my lord the king hath commanded his servant, administration of justice, the business of those who are advanced above others; for their authority was given them to do good with.—Thus the Son of David subjects his enemies: his gospel is a saviour of life to some, and of death to others; he will be glorified upon his obstinate opposers, and by those who welcome him as their Lord and Saviour. Many assist in building his spiritual temple, who have no place in it: his government is in judgment and in justice, as well as in mercy: and all who adhere to him faithfully in a state of humiliation and suffering, shall reign with him for ever in glory. Let us then submit to him, and seek his friendship, counting his service our honour and our pleasure, and diligently attending to the work which he severally assigns us.

NOTES.

CHAP. IX. V. 1. Mephibosheth was only five years old at his father's death, (iv. 4.) but at this time he had a son, (12.) so that many years must have elapsed before David made this enquiry. For above seven years he had been opposed by Ish-bosheth, and his engagements afterwards had been numerous. He had not indeed injured any of Saul's family; yet he seems to have been too forgetful of his friendship with Jonathan, and his engagements to him. (Notes, 1 Sam. xviii. 3, 4. xx. 14-16.) As, however, Mephibosheth was brought up in obscurity beyond Jordan, and perhaps purposely concealed by the suspicious care of his friends, David might not know that Jonathan had any child living. But at length, recollecting himself, he desired to shew his entire forgiveness of Saul's injuries, and his gratitude for Jonathan's kindness, by restoring Saul's estate to some of his remaining posterity; and by conferring further favours on them, for the sake of his friend. (Marg. Ref. Note, Matt. xii. 46-50. John, xix. 25-27.)

V. 3. The kindness of God. For the sake of the oath of God sworn to Jonathan, or according to the example of the Lord's kindness unto himself.

V. 4. Machir. This person was afterwards a very useful friend to David; and perhaps the more willingly, on account of David's kindness to Mephibosheth, whom he had generously brought up. (Note, xvii. 27-29.)

V. 6. David might have heard of the name of Mephibosheth; or perhaps he had seen him in his infancy, and now recollected his features, though he knew not before that he was living.

V. 7. Saul's paternal estate came into David's hands after the death of Ish-bosheth, and it seems to have been large. This was now restored by him to Mephibosheth as the right heir; and he was besides admitted to a place at David's own table.

V. 8. A dead dog. (Marg. Ref.) That is, a person who is very mean, and incapable of being any way serviceable. Mephibosheth adverted, not only to his unworthiness, but to his bodily infirmities, in this expression of grateful surprise. He seems to have been an unambitious, modest, friendly, and pious man.

V. 9-11. Ziba had been greatly enriched under Saul, and was now entrusted so shall thy servant do. As for Mephibosheth, said the king, he shall eat at my table, as one of the king's sons.

12 And Mephibosheth had a young son, whose name was Micha: and all that dwelt in the house of Ziba were servants unto Mephibosheth.

13 So Mephibosheth dwelt in Jerusalem: for he did eat continually at the king's table; and was lame on both his feet.

CHAP. X.

David sends ambassadors to comfort Hanun, the king of Ammon: who insults them. 1-4. David counsels and comforts them, 5. The Ammonites, assisted by the Syrians, are overcome by Joab and Abishai, 6-14. Hadarezer sends another army, which David conquers, slaying Shobach its general, 15-18. The kings of Syria submit to David, 19.

AND it came to pass after this, that the king of the children of Ammon died, and Hanun his son reigned in his stead.

2 Then said David, I will shew kindness unto Hanun the son of Nahash, as his father shewed kindness unto me. And David sent to comfort him, by the hand of his servants, for his father. And David's servants came into the land of the children of Ammon.

3 And the princes of the children of Ammon said unto Hanun thy lord, *Thinkest thou that David doth honour thy father, that he hath sent comforters unto thee? hath not David rather sent his servants unto thee, to search the city, and to spy it out, and to overthrow it?

4 Wherefore Hanun took David's servants, and shaved off the one half of their beards, and cut off their garments in the middle, even to their buttocks, and sent them away.

5 When they told it unto David, he sent to meet them, because the men were greatly ashamed: and the king said, Tarry at Jericho until your beards be grown, and then return.

6 ¶ And when the children of Ammon saw that they stank before David, the children of Ammon sent and hired the Syrians of Beth-rehob, and the Syrians of Zoba, twenty thousand footmen, and of king Maacah a thousand men, and of Ish-tob twelve thousand men.

with the management of Mephibosheth's estate, because of his professed affection for his family: but David seems to have been more generous than prudent in this appointment. Mephibosheth's family must be provided for out of the estate, though he himself lived at David's table.—Some understand the last clause, as the words of Ziba, proposing in a boasting manner to entertain Mephibosheth royally at his own table: but they seem to be those of David.

V. 12. Micha. The posterity of Jonathan and Mephibosheth, by Micha, was very numerous. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Amidst a multiplicity of affairs, we are prone to forget the gratitude we owe, and the engagements we are under, not only to our friends, but to the Lord himself: but persons of real and eminent piety, when they recollect their obligations, will have no rest till they have discharged them: they will be burdened with those possessions, which they but suppose in equity to belong to another; and impatient to express their forgiveness of those, by whom they have been injured, and their gratitude to the persons, or the relations, of those who have been kind them.—They who have much in their power should enquire after opportunities of doing good; for frequently the most deserving objects of our compassion are concealed by their modesty and patient resignation.—Kindness, shewn to the most helpless persons, is sometimes recompensed in a very seasonable manner, by those from whom we had no expectation of obtaining or wanting assistance.—To be trained up in privacy, poverty, and hardship, and afterwards more prospered, is vastly more comfortable, than to be brought up in pride and delicacy, with great expectations, and then to be reduced to poverty and distress. "When riches increase, they are increased that eat them:" and, though the liberality of friends should be thankfully acknowledged, it can contribute little to our real happiness, further than providing us with the necessities of life. But the love of Jesus, who seeks out, provides for, enriches, and entertains us poor ruined, worthless sinners, confers substantial and enduring felicity. May we humbly acknowledge our unworthiness of his mercies, thankfully accept them, and return him our cheerful praises and willing services, and shew our gratitude to him, by kindness to those whom he owns as his "brethren, sisters, and mother."

NOTES.

CHAP. X. V. 2. It is probable, that Nahash was kind to David in the days of Saul, from resentment and dislike to that prince: but it may be questioned, whether David ought to have shewn respect to the memory of so cruel an enemy to his people; especially as the law forbade Israel to seek the peace and prosperity of the Ammonites. 7 And when David heard of it, he sent Joab, and all the host of the mighty men.

8 And the children of Ammon came out, and put the battle in array at the entering in of the gate: and the Syrians of Zoba, and of Rehob, and Ish-tob, and Maacah, were by themselves in the field.

9 When Joab saw that the front of the battle was against him before and behind, he chose of all the choice men of Israel, and put them in array against the Syrians.

10 And the rest of the people he delivered into the hand of Abishai his brother, that he might put them in array against the children of Ammon.

11 And he said, If the Syrians be too strong for me, then thou shalt help me: but if the children of Ammon be too strong for thee, then I will come and help thee.

12 Be of good courage, and let us play the men for our people, and for the cities of our God: and the Lord do that which seemeth him good.

13 And Joab drew nigh, and the people that were with him, unto the battle against the Syrians: and they fled before him.

14 And when the children of Ammon saw that the Syrians were fled, then fled they also before Abishai, and entered into the city. So Joab returned from the children of Ammon, and came to Jerusalem.

15 ¶ And when the Syrians saw that they were smitten before Israel, they gathered themselves together.

16 And Hadarezer sent, and brought out the Syrians that were beyond the river; and they came to Helam: and Shobach the captain of the host of Hadarezer went before them.

17 And when it was told David, he gathered all Israel together, and passed over Jordan, and came to Helam: and the Syrians set themselves in array against David, and fought with him.

18 And the Syrians fled before Israel; and David slew the men of seven hundred chariots of the Syrians, not, however, of the devoted nations; so that, perhaps, it was not wrong for David to express a sense of gratitude to a benefactor, without deciding upon the motives of his conduct; and to render the customary civilities to his son, on his decease.

V. 3, 4. The princes of Hanun, who had great authority with him, seem to have been suspicious of David, from consciousness of the injuries which they had done to Israel, and were still meditating against it. (Note, 1 Sam. xxix. 4-6.) But if they had seen cause to be reserved, they ought not to have abused and insulted David's ambassadors. This was a violation of the most sacred laws of nations; the greatest affront imaginable to the prince whom they represented; and a direct declaration of war against him. According to the sentiments and customs of those days, the Ammonites treated David's ambassadors in the most contemptuous manner which they could possibly devise. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 5. Jericho. This was a village near the spot where Jericho had stood: for that city was not yet rebuilt. (Notes, Josh. vi. 26. 1 Kings. xvi. 34.)—In this place, as soon as the ambassadors had crossed Jordan, they were advised to remain till their beards were grown; (which were considered as necessary to the appearance in public of grave and venerable persons:) that thus the disgrace which they had received, might be obliterated.

V. 6. (Note, Gen. xxiv. 30.) The Ammonites had made themselves so odious to David, that they could not expect but that he would make war on them: and therefore they determined to form alliances, and act offensively.—Little more can be determined with certainty concerning the different tribes of the Syrians, than what may be collected from the texts referred to in the margin. Maacah seems to have been the name of a district, and not of a king. (Notes, 1 Chr. xix. 6, 7.)

V. 8-14. This battle seems to have been fought at the gate of Medeba, a city upon the borders of the Ammonites, and in their possession. (1 Chr. xix. 7.) Joab's forces were opposed by two armies, before and behind: but his arrangement was judicious, and his address spirited. His valour and regard to his country were real and eminent: and the language of faith and piety which he employed, probably under some transient convictions, was honourable to God, and might be useful to the soldiers. Perhaps, the slaughter was not very great, as both the Syrians and Ammonites took shelter in the city.

V. 18. Seven hundred, &c. Probably seven thousand men belonging to seven hundred chariots; and forty thousand men, who fought on foot, or on horseback, as there was occasion or opportunity. Or, some were foot-soldiers and some horsemen. (1 Chron. xix. 18.) and forty thousand *horsemen, and smote *Shobach the captain of their host, who died there.

19 And when all the kings that were *servants to Hadarezer saw that they were smitten before Israel, they made peace with Israel, and served them. So the Syrians feared to help the children of Ammon any more.

CHAP. XI.

Joab besieges Rabbah. 1. David commits adultery with Bath-sheba, the wife of Uriah. 2-4. She informs David that she is pregnant; 5. who sends for Uriah, and in vain tries to induce him to visit his wife, 6-13. He sends by Uriah a letter to Joab; according to which, Uriah, (with others,) is slain by the Ammonites, 14-27. Joab sends word to David, and he answers the messengers, 18-25. David marries Bath-sheba, who bears him a son; but God is displeased, 26, 27.

AND it came to pass, *after the year *as expired, at the time when kings go forth to battle, that David sent Joab and his servants with him, and all Israel; and they destroyed the children of Ammon, and besieged *Rabbah: but David tarried still at Jerusalem.

2 ¶ And it came to pass in an evening-tide, that David arose from off his bed, and walked upon the roof of the king's house: and from the roof he saw a woman washing herself; and the woman was *very beautiful to look upon.

3 And David sent and enquired after the woman. And one said, Is not this Bath-sheba the daughter of *Eliam, the wife of Uriah the Hittite?

4 And David sent messengers, and took her: and

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We ought to sympathize with the afflicted, and shew gratitude to our friends: but nothing, except vexation and disappointment, can be expected by courting the friendship of ungodly men.—Treacherous minds are always suspicious: as they are conscious, that they themselves mean to deceive when they can gain by it, they naturally suppose that others intend the same; and weak and wicked princes generally employ counsellors of this description.—It is the height of folly to awaken the resentment of those, by insult and contempt, whose power of taking vengeance cannot be thus diminished: and the fatal effects of rash affronts, though little feared, are often severely felt.—We should shew respect and kindness to those who have been unjustly disgraced; yet it is needless to lay such affronts to heart: unmerited reproaches or contempt will soon wear away, and a clear conscience should be deemed sufficient to counterbalance the present uneasiness. Yet, by measures of this kind, valuable persons are often driven for a season into obscurity, to the loss of the public rather than of themselves.—They, who are the most ready to commit injustice, are commonly the most averse to reconciliation: and confidence in number, strength, or valour, frequently buoys up men to their destruction; for “though hand join in hand, the wicked shall not be unpunished.” But a good cause, and a single dependence upon the Lord, afford the surest indications of success: and when valiant men are cordial to the interests of their country, and are defending its civil and religious liberties, their animation and presence of mind will often increase in proportion to dangers and difficulties.—It is our duty, in every emergency, to do our utmost, and to encourage others to do the same, helping one another as occasion may require; and thus committing the event to the Lord: “Let him do what seemeth him good.” But, alas, many use good words, and seem, in perilous circumstances, to depend on God, and be submissive to him, whose hearts are not upright in his sight: and many are very serviceable to his church, who have no part in its peculiar blessings.—But especially let sinners recollect, that the Son of David will assuredly resent their contempt of his ambassadors, whom he sends to them with a message of peace and love; and that he will consider the ill-usage of them as a declaration of war against himself. In this warfare numbers and confederacies are utterly unavailing, and destruction is inevitable. They therefore, who have rashly engaged in the desperate contest, should, without delay, separate from his enemies, fearing any longer to help them; and make it their great object to obtain his forgiveness, and to be numbered among his subjects. All his people should be valiant in his cause, and for his truth and righteousness: and ministers should neither fear, nor be ashamed, to exercise their embassy of reconciliation, however despised, insulted, or persecuted; for He will plead their cause, comfort them under their trials, and reward their faithfulness with “a crown of glory which fadeth not away.”

NOTES.

CHAP. XI. V. 1-5. David committed the management of the war against Ammon to Joab, and continued at ease in his palace, when he ought to have been “fighting the battles of the Lord:” and thus, being out of the line of present duty, he slothfully wasted his time. Without doubt, his prosperity had gradually rendered him more negligent in his devotional exercises, and more self-indulgent; and perhaps had occasioned some measure of self-confidence and carnal security. Thus his passions gathered force, in proportion as his holy affections abated: and, having been accustomed, without censure, to marry any single woman, for whom he conceived an affection, his inclinations had not been habituated to a denial. When therefore, after an unseasonable sleep, he was walking on the flat roof of his house, and by some means had a view of a very beautiful woman, who was washing herself from a cereshe came in unto him, and he lay with her, (for she was *purified from her uncleanness,) and she returned unto her house.

5 And the woman conceived, and sent and told David, and said, “I am with child.”

6 ¶ And David sent to Joab, saying, “Send me Uriah the Hittite.” And Joab sent Uriah to David.

7 And when Uriah was come unto him, David demanded of him “how Joab did, and how the people did, and how the war prospered.”

8 And David said to Uriah, “Go down to thy house, and wash thy feet.” And Uriah departed out of the king's house, and there *followed him a mess of meat from the king.

9 But Uriah slept at the door of the king's house with all the servants of his lord, and went not down to his house.

10 And when they had told David, saying, Uriah went not down unto his house, David said unto Uriah, “Camest not thou from thy journey? why then didst thou not go down unto thine house?”

11 And Uriah said unto David, “The ark, and Israel, and Judah, abide in tents; and my lord Joab, and the servants of my lord, are encamped in the open fields: shall I then go into mine house, to eat, and to drink, and to lie with my wife? as thou livest, and as thy soul liveth, I will not do this thing.”

monial uncleanness, he allowed himself to gaze upon her, until he lusted after her in his heart; and, perhaps supposing her not to be a married woman, he sent to enquire after her, in order to add her to the number of his wives. But his sinful passion had acquired such an ascendancy, that he was the more inflamed by being informed, that she was the wife of one of his bravest and most faithful officers. He therefore sent messengers for her, who could not be ignorant of his intentions: and though she was previously a person of virtue and reputation, he obtained her compliance, (probably by means of those hopes which his rank in life was capable of inspiring,) and committed adultery with her.—This crime was attended with manifold aggravations: it was a violation of the seventh commandment: it was likewise punishable by the death of both parties, according to the judicial law. David was chief magistrate, to whom it belonged to carry that law into execution: he was at this time about fifty years of age; and he had already many wives; and many children also, approaching to man's estate, to whom the example would be prejudicial in the extreme. His acquaintance with the divine law, his open profession of true religion, his high reputation for piety and wisdom, and the immense obligations which the Lord had conferred on him; the rank and character of Bath-sheba too, and the service for him and his country, in which Uriah was engaged, were all circumstances which greatly aggravated his offence.—When Bath-sheba found that she was with child by David, she justly dreaded the resentment of her husband, who had been absent from her for a considerable time; and she sent to inform David, that by the iniquitous interposition of his authority, which perhaps he had promised, she might be preserved from being made a public example. (Lev. xx. 10. Note, Matt. i. 18, 19.)—Most of the Jewish writers, on the most frivolous pretences, exculpate both David and Bath-sheba, as to the adultery; and only condemn David, as to the murder! This is a specimen of their morality!

V. 6, 7. It is probable that Uriah was descended from the Hittites; but he was a proselyte, and had the heart of an Israelite.—Under the guilt of his very heinous sin, David was more anxious to conceal his shame, and prevent the temporal consequences, than to obtain forgiveness from God! (Notes, Job, xx. 12-29. Ps. xxxii. 3-5. Prov. xxviii. 13.)—Perhaps he feared lest Uriah, in his deep resentment, should raise rebellion against him; and certainly he dreaded the reproaches which he might expect from every quarter, when his shameful misconduct should be publicly known. In this state of mind, he did not consider the treachery and injustice of drawing in Uriah to consider himself as the father of the child with which Bath-sheba was pregnant: but, having formed his plan, he sent to Uriah, as if he could depend more on him to inform him of the state of the war, than on any other person.

V. 8, 9. Uriah's house was near David's palace, perhaps, because he commanded some of the Cherethites and Pelethites, who were the king's guard: (Note, viii. 15-18:) and David never questioned but he would gladly embrace the opportunity of visiting his wife, and accordingly provided them an entertainment. But whether anything had excited Uriah's suspicions; or whether, through a hardy self-denied disposition, he scorned to fare better than his commander and comrades, he would not go home, but slept with the other soldiers: and thus the Lord defeated David's design of “covering his transgression.”

V. 10, 11. The circumstance of the ark being constantly placed in a tabernacle, and not a temple, could be no reason why Uriah should not go home to his house. It is, therefore, probable, that the ark was on this occasion carried with the army to the war. (Notes, 1 Sam. iv. 4, 5. xiv. 16-23.)—Uriah's answer was so decided, that David's heart, it might have been expected, should have been deeply touched, to think how he had abused so brave a man; and made him reflect, how vilely he indulged himself in sinful pleasure, while 12 And David said to Uriah, "Tarry here to-day also, and to-morrow I will let thee depart. So Uriah abode in Jerusalem that day and the morrow.

13 And when David had called him, he did eat and drink before him; and he "made him drunk: and at even he went out to lie on his bed with the servants of his lord, but went not down to his house.

14 ¶ And it came to pass in the morning, that David "wrote a letter to Joab, and sent it by the hand of Uriah.

15 And he wrote in the letter, saying, "Set ye Uriah in the forefront of the "hottest battle, and retire ye "from him, that he may be smitten, "and die.

16 And it came to pass, when Joab observed the city, that "he assigned Uriah unto a place where he knew that valiant men were.

17 And the men of the city went out and fought with Joab: and "there fell some of the people of the servants of David; and Uriah the Hittite died also.

18 ¶ Then Joab sent, and told David all the things concerning the war;

19 And charged the messenger, saying, When thou hast made an end of telling the matters of the war unto the king;

20 And if so be that the king's wrath arise, and he say unto thee, Wherefore approached ye so nigh unto 22 ¶ So the messenger went, and came and shewed David all that Joab had sent him for.

23 And the messenger said unto David, Surely the men prevailed against us, and came out unto us into the field, and we were upon them even unto the entering of the gate.

25 Then David said unto the messenger, Thus shalt thou say unto Joab, Let not this thing "displease thee; "for the sword devoureth "one as well as another: "make thy battle more strong against the city, and overthrow it; and encourage thou him.

26 ¶ And when the wife of Uriah heard that Uriah her husband was dead, "she mourned for her husband.

27 And when the mourning was past, David sent and " fetched her to his house, and she became his wife, and bare him a son; "but the thing that David had done "displeased the Lord.

this man and the rest gloriously endured all manner of hardships, and refused the most innocent pleasures, for the sake of their country. But he was so corrupted for the present, that he was troubled to find Uriah so true a soldier!—(Bp. Patrick.)

V. 12, 13. David pretended further business with Uriah, and great kindness for him, in order to practise upon him, if possible, to break his resolution. Accordingly he entertained him at his own table; and, in addition to his other injuries, became his tempter to drunkenness; hoping that when his passions were inflamed, he might be induced to go home to his wife: but in this too he found himself disappointed. (Notes, xii. 22—29. Gen. xix. 31—38. Hab. ii. 15—17.)

V. 14—17. Satan having gradually drawn David on in one sinful attempt after another, had prepared his mind for still more atrocious wickedness. (Notes, Matt. xxvi. 14—16. 25. 30—35. 40, 41. 69—75. John, xii. 1—8. xlii. Acts i. 16—18.) He now perceived that, if Uriah lived, he must discover his wife's unfaithfulness; to prevent this was at present his leading object, and all other consequences were forgotten. David, however, would not kill Uriah with his own hands, nor order his servants to assassinate him, nor put him to death under colour of law: for his reputation must have been ruined by such measures; nay, perhaps the direct injustice and murder would have disquieted his conscience, insensible as it was become. But he devised a more plausible and secret method of getting rid of him, which at the moment seemed less atrocious, though in reality it was unspeakably more complicated and heinous. The known valour, fidelity, and zeal for his country, of this gallant officer, suggested the method of despatching him! David had such confidence in this much-injured man, that he hesitated not to entrust him with the letter which decreed his death: and whatever else Uriah suspected, he did not betray his trust. (Note, 1 Sam. xviii. 23—27.—Joab, and those, "who retired from Uriah," were made accomplices in the murder; and the soldiers who were slain with Uriah, were no less murdered by David, than he was. Whatever casuistry David might use with his conscience, this was deliberate murder of many persons with malice prepense, aggravated exceedingly by the circumstance, that these men were slain in the very act of fighting for him and his kingdom. Perhaps Joab imagined that the king had some political reason for thus taking off Uriah: but probably he was rejoiced to see him involved in the guilt of murder as well as himself. (Notes, iii. 26—39.)—And is this David, who repeatedly spared his enemy, and whose heart smote him, when he had cut off Saul's skirt! Alas, how is he changed and fallen!

V. 21. Then say, &c. This was a plain intimation to the messenger, that the death of Uriah would be so agreeable to David, as to reconcile him to the loss which had been sustained. Thus he began already to be despised even by his accomplices!—Amidst all the painful sensations excited by reading this chapter, it is pleasing to find David's soldiers so ready at quoting the Scripture: for probably the book of Judges was then extant as a part of holy writ. (Note, Judg. ix. 50—57.)

V. 25. Provided the brave Uriah were dead, David seems not to have regarded who were slain with him. He spoke on this occasion with an insensibility about the lives of his subjects, which borders on infidelity, and strongly marks the state of his heart at this time. On other occasions he would have considered such an event as a rebuke, which required humiliation, prayer, and sacrifices, and a more entire dependence on God in future: (Notes, Josh. vii. 6—9. 1 Chr. xv. 12—14;) and he would have censured the imprudence of the commanders, and charged them, on pain of his displeasure, to be more careful of the lives of their brethren.

V. 27. David married Bath-sheba as soon as it could be done with decency, and the customary mourning (which was in this case a vile mockery) was ended. But though there remained no injured husband to avenge the adultery, the premature birth of the child would discover it.—All this time, as it appears from the narrative, David continued impenitent, and comparatively unconcerned. Probably, he still attended on the ordinances of religion. By some ingenious self-flattery he endeavoured to palliate his conduct to himself; and no one reproved him for it. Perhaps the general practice of other princes induced him to conclude, that persons in his high station were not, in this respect, bound to the same strictness with their subjects. However, though he had no deep remorse of conscience, we may be sure that he lost all spirituality, and comfort, in religion: for small transgressions, like slight wounds, give much pain to the believer's conscience: but enormous crimes, like a violent blow upon the head, leave him for a season in an unaccountable state of insensibility.

But the thing, &c. Such marriages, as this of David with Bath-sheba, with whom he had previously committed adultery, were not forbidden in the law, as some of the rabbies pretend; for this was needless, as both parties were condemned to die: and David was not afterwards ordered to put her away. Yet as he married her in order to cover his iniquity, and as the desire of possessing her may be supposed to have been an inducement to the murder of Uriah, it formed an additional aggravation of the crime: and the whole transaction, from first to last, was displeasing to the Lord.—But why was this permitted? or why was it recorded? It is certain that thousands through succeeding generations have, by this fall of "the man after God's own heart" been prejudiced against true religion, hardened in infidelity, or emboldened in blasphemy: while others have thence taken occasion to commit habitual wickedness under a religious profession, and with presumptuous confidence, to the still greater discredit of the gospel. It should, however, be considered, that all these have been, previously, either open enemies to true religion, or hypocritical pretenders to it: and it is the righteous purpose of God, that stumblingblocks should be thrown in the way of such men, that they "may stumble, and fall, and be snared, and taken, and perish:" it is his holy will thus to detect the secret malignity of their hearts, and to make way for the display of his justice in their condemnation.—On the other hand, thousands, from age to age, have by this awful example been rendered more suspicious of themselves, more watchful, more afraid of temptation, more dependent on the Lord, and more fervent in prayer; and by means of David's fall, have, themselves, been preserved from falling. Numbers, who have been overcome by temptation, have thus been preserved from despair. Every upright soul will eventually derive benefit from the impartial record of this event; and none will finally be injured by it, except those, who desire an excuse for sin, or an objection to the religion of the Bible. Bees will collect honey, and spiders poison, from the same plants, according to their different natures. No excuse can be made for David; he attempted none for himself: and much self-knowledge is requisite to account for his conduct, or to deem it possible that a man, who had so long enjoyed communion with God, in the highest exercise of devotion, could commit such enormous crimes, and continue so long impenitent. But the Lord's design in leaving him to himself was doubtless wise, righteous, and merciful; and he can and will over-rule it for great good to those who fear and love him. The glory of all the good is his due; the blame of all the evil, original or consequent, belongs to those who commit it. (Notes, Gen. i. 20. 2 Chr. xxxii. 25, 26. 31. Matt. xxvi. 69—75.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—13. A deep conviction, that the human heart, even the heart of every man, is "deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked," is of vast importance to the due exercise of repentance, faith, and every christian grace: and in order to impress this humiliating conviction on the minds of those who attend to the word of God, a few of his most eminent servants have been left to fall, in such a manner, as fully to prove, that every evil dwells in each of us; and that in circumstances of concurring temptations, we are capable of committing any crime; even that which we now most dread and detest! Neither eminent piety, a long and close walk with God, habits of obedience and of the government of the passions, the sobriety of advancing age, peculiar obligations from God, great reputation and usefulness, clear knowledge of the Divine law; nor even the Spirit of prophecy, have been found capable of extirpating the most hateful propensities of the human heart: though restrained, dethroned, and crucified, they have still lived; and have revived, obtained advantages, and for a season seemed to reign with the most dreadful tyranny! Who then are we, that we should deem ourselves secure? We are never in this world out of the reach of temptation; never exempted, in respect of any sin, from the necessity of watchfulness, prayer, and dependence on divine grace. Let us not then be high-minded; but beg of God that he would enable us to pass the time of our sojourning in humble, jealous fear.—The declensions of believers are commonly gradual: exemption from trials, and worldly prosperity, induce habits of negligence in duty, and inexpedient self-indulgence; and thus the soul falls into a careless, and unwatchful frame. (Note, 1 Kings, xi. 1-8.) Then a man is drawn to the verge of prohibited gratification, and far beyond the bounds of expediency and moderation, in things not absolutely unlawful: and when his passions have been accustomed to indulgence, he is the more easily prevailed on to commit evident evil. The eye, the ear, the outward senses, are not turned away from forbidden objects; by these inlets the sinful imagination is excited, and concupiscence is produced. Perhaps he hopes that the desire may be lawfully gratified, and on that vain pretence the mind is allowed to dwell on it. (Notes, Gen. iii. 2-6.) But when lust is conceived, every restraint generally increases its vehemence: the thoughts of future consequences, and the consideration of the presence, purity, and justice of God, are excluded; his law and authority are disregarded; fear and love are out of exercise; and the enhanced imagination of the satisfaction to be found in indulgence, possesses and engrosses the soul. Thus, sin is brought forth: and notwithstanding palliations, and previous hopes of concealment and impunity, the mind soon is tortured with that dread of future consequences, which far exceeds all guilty pleasures. (Notes, Gen. iii. 7. Jam. i. 13-15.) But when the bait is swallowed, Satan hath caught the sinner; and no power except that of God can deliver him, or prevent his being more and more entangled. (Note, 2 Tim. ii. 23-26.)—The fear of contempt, and even of disgracing the cause of religion, leads the believer, who is thus fallen, to devise methods of concealment; and such thoughts for a season exclude others of much greater importance, and afford Satan an opportunity of tempting him to still further iniquities: while the conscience, once corrupted, makes feeble opposition to fraudulent measures of preserving the reputation, or of preventing the consequences of transgression. Every concession hardens the heart, and provokes the departure of the Holy Spirit. The end being considered necessary; means of every kind, which promise success, seem needful also: and when a man's obligations to God are forgotten, no wonder if all the ties of justice, gratitude, and friendship are disregarded; and to impose upon the credulity and confidence of men, to injure them in their property, reputation, and connexions, and to tempt them to commit sin, are obvious, and, alas! common measures.

V. 14-27. When a man has so far given place to the Devil, as not only to commit scandalous sins, but to use disingenuous and base means of concealing them, and sees a prospect of having the whole exposed to public view; what shall prevent his being pushed forward, by the same influence and from the same motives, to treachery, malice, and murder, till crimes are multiplied and magnified beyond computation, and till every nobler consideration is extinguished? If conscience be thus stupefied; it will be easy for the same artful enemy to amuse the deluded offender with some form of godliness, some palliation or cloak of iniquity, which shall quiet the rising scruple: and success in such a course may even be considered as a divine sanction, and induce the language of indifference or of infidelity; while the heart is rendered callous, when the exercise of cruelty is needful for the end proposed. But can a real and eminent believer ever tread this downward path, and then, as it were, fall asleep in the arms of Satan? (Notes, Judg. xvi. & P. O.) Can a person, who hath committed such atrocious crimes, and so long remains impenitent, be indeed child of God, a member of Christ, a temple of the Holy Spirit, and an heir of eternal glory? Can one spark of divine life exist unextinguished in such an ocean? It is plain that these things are possible; but no man in such a case can have warranted evidence to conclude that he is a believer: the higher his confidence who hath sunk thus low in wickedness, the greater proof is there of his presumption and hypocrisy. Though grace be not lost, in such an awful case the assurance and consolation of it must be suspended. Let not then any vile hypocrite, who resembles David in nothing but his transgressions, and who adds the habit of allowed sin to all other aggravations, buoy up his confidence with his example: let him first imitate David's humiliation, repentance, and other eminent graces, before he thinks himself, or requires others to consider him, as a backslider. (Notes, xii. 13-15. xv. 24-29. 1 Chr. xxix. Ps. li.) Neither let any opposer or despiser of the truth say, Are these the fruits of faith and devotion! We answer, No: they are the effects of a corrupt nature, the tendency of which to evil must be inconceivably strong, when it overcomes the contrary tendency of truth and grace in the heart of an eminent servant of God.—And let us all watch against the beginnings of negligence and self-indulgence, and keep at the utmost distance from that precipice, whence David fell; begging God to close our senses, imaginations, and affections to all forbidden objects, thoughts, and desires. Let us study moderation, expediency, and superiority to all animal inclinations, in things lawful; continually attend to our proper work, and pray always that we may not be led into temptation. Then will our lives best shew the tendency of our principles, and confute those who accuse us of encouraging men to sin by the freeness of salvation.—But again: Is it possible that such a backslider from God can be recovered, and admitted afterwards to comfortable communion with him? Doubtless it is: "for with the LORD there is mercy, and with him there is plenteous redemption:" and he will never cast out one humble penitent believer, whatever his former crimes have been; nor suffer Satan to pluck any of his sheep out of his hand. Let then those who are fallen, return to the LORD without delay, and seek forgiveness through the Redeemer's atoning blood.—How poor is every success and gratification, when the LORD is displeased with us! Either in this world or the next, he will surely expose us to shame for our crimes.—It is also grievous to observe how the sins of believers quiet the consciences and rejoice the hearts, of wicked men, who are ready to insult and say, "Art thou also become as one of us!" But while many will thus abuse these humiliating instances, may we be unfeignedly thankful, if we have been restrained from such dreadful falls. May we commit our souls to Him who is able to keep us from falling: may we take warning by David's sins; and imitate the generosity, self-denial, and attachment to the cause of Israel, of the gallant and much injured Uriah.

NOTES.

CHAP. XII. V. 1-6. When God was displeased with his servant David, he did not immediately inflict heavy judgments upon him; but he sent a prophet, to call him to repentance. Nathan did not go, of his own accord and in his own name, to reprove David for his offences: but when sent by the LORD, he plainly delivered his message; without being induced by David's royal authority, his previous eminent character as a saint and psalmist, or his own peculiar affection for him, to conceal or mutilate it. It is probable, that this took place soon after the birth of David's son by Bath-sheba; when the scandalous transactions would begin to be generally noticed. But whatever others whispered and circulated, David seems not to have been in any due measure sensible of his exceeding wickedness, till the LORD thus awakened his conscience.—In order to insinuate the necessary truths, without exciting the resistance of David's partial self-love, and to induce him to give sentence against himself before he was aware, Nathan introduced his message with a parable; (Notes, Judg. ix. 7-15.) There scarcely ever was any thing more calculated, on the one hand to awaken emotions of sympathy, and on the other, those of indignation, than the case here supposed; and the several circumstances, by which the heart must be interested in the poor man's case, and by which the unfeeling oppression of his rich neighbour was aggravated. Several expressions, however, might have excited a suspicion, that more was intended than merely to plead the cause of an injured man against his oppressor: yet David evidently supposed it to be matter of fact, till Nathan made the application.—The rich man, who had many flocks and herds, represented David with his many wives and concubines: the poor man, with his ewe lamb, which was so tenderly brought up by him, was Uriah with his one well-beloved wife; and the traveller may mean David's sensual lust, which nothing could satisfy but the wife of Uriah. Yet this parable, apposite and beautiful as it was, pointed out only a small part of the enormity of David's conduct. Uriah's loyal and gallant services, and David's ingratitude and treachery, with the murder of him and his fellow-soldiers, were not so much as alluded to. His injury to Uriah and Bath-sheba in the crime of adultery, alone were shadowed forth: for perhaps the prophet meant to bring him by degrees to a view of his exceeding sinfulness, and would not make the case too exact in all particulars, lest he should suspect his intentions, and be kept from giving sentence against king over Israel, and ^qI delivered thee out of the hand of Saul :

8 And I gave thee thy master's house, and thy master's wives into thy bosom, and ^rgave thee the house of Israel and of Judah ; and, if that had been too little, ^sI would moreover have given unto thee such and such things.

9 Wherefore hast thou ^tdespised the commandment of the LORD, ^uto do evil in his sight? ^vthou hast killed Uriah the Hittite with the sword, and hast taken his wife ^wto be thy wife, and hast slain him with the sword of the children of Ammon.

10 Now therefore ^xthe sword shall never depart from thine house ; ^ybecause thou hast despised me, and ^zhast taken the wife of Uriah the Hittite to be thy wife.

11 Thus saith the LORD, Behold, ^aI will raise up evil against thee out of thine own house, and ^bI will take thy wives before thine eyes, and give them unto thy neighbour, and he shall lie with thy wives in the sight of this sun ;

12 For thou didst ^cit ^dsecretly : but I will do this thing before all Israel, and before the sun.

13 And ^eDavid said unto Nathan, ^f"I have sinned against the LORD. And Nathan said unto David, ^g"The LORD also hath put away thy sin ; ^h'thou shalt not die.

14 ⁱAnd the LORD said unto Nathan, ^j"I have forgiven thee, as thou hast said ; ^kbut the child that thou hast begotten shall die."

himself.—David, forgetful of his own crimes, was fired with indignation against the imaginary offender ; and with a solemn oath condemned him, not only to make legal restitution, but also to suffer death, or at least declared that he was deserving of death. (Notes, Gen. xxxviii. 24—26.)

V. 7. David failed of making the application of the parable to himself : yet Nathan had gained a great point, in bringing him to pronounce so severe a sentence against a supposed offender, for crimes of far inferior malignity to his own. He therefore, with great firmness and courage, directly applied his parable to the conscience of the offender, and assured David, that he was the very person whose conduct had been delineated, and whose sentence had been denounced out of his own mouth : and he then proceeded in a very plain, convincing, and even severe, discourse, to shew the extent, aggravations, and effects of his guilt. (Notes, 1 Sam. xv. 14—25. 1 Kings xxi. 17—23. Matt. xiv. 3—5.)

V. 8. Wives. Or, Women. We read of no more than one wife of Saul, and Rizpah his concubine ; (xxi. 8. 1 Sam. xiv. 50 ;) and it is not probable that he had any more. The women therefore of his court and family seem to be meant ; which, according to the custom of the East, came into David's possession, when he succeeded to the kingdom. But if Saul had more wives or concubines, it is not probable that David married any of them, as Saul was his father-in-law. The LORD, by giving David these women in his providence, no more sanctioned his polygamy, than his giving Israel a king proved that they did well in desiring and asking one ; or than his giving David's concubines to Absalom, sanctioned his detestable incest. (Notes, 11. 12. xvi. 20—23. 1 Sam. xii. 11—19.) But the multitude of unmarried women, of whom David had it in his power to make choice, aggravated his guilt in seizing upon the wife of another man. Nay, had he thought that any thing conducive to his comfort was yet wanting, he was allowed to ask for it, and the Lord declared that he would not have denied it, if he had seen it good for him. (Note, Ps. lxxxiv. 11, 12.)

V. 9. Wherefore, &c. The clause may be rendered, "Wherefore hast thou despised the word of the LORD?" His promises, as well as his precepts. (Notes, Job, ii. 10. Matt. xvi. 21—23.) David in this instance, had shewn that he thought the general and special promises of God either too scanty, or too precarious, to suffice for, and ensure, his felicity ; or he could have no need to seek satisfaction in another way : and this was a great contempt of them. He had also treated the commandments of God as rigorous and needless restraints ; and as worthy to be neglected, dispensed with, nay, trampled on, when they interfered with his present gratification.

V. 10. Despised me, &c. When David despised the word of God, he despised God himself ; even his power and authority, his justice and purity, his omnipresence and omniscience, his favour and wrath, and all his glorious perfections : else, he would not thus have offended him, for the base gratification of his lusts. This was an aggravation of his crimes, less obvious to man's natural apprehensions, but full of deeper malignity, than all those enumerated in the former chapter. (Notes, xi. 1—17.)—As the parable had particularly represented the evil of David's adultery, the address of Nathan is most pointed against his murder of Uriah.—The word rendered never, in this connexion, only implies perpetuity. So long as David lived, one after another of his family was slain, and Adonijah just after his death. (Notes, xiii. 22—29. xviii. 9—14. 1 Kings, ii. 15—25.)

V. 11, 12. David was not present when Absalom perpetrated his abominable crime ; but it was committed in so shameless a manner, that it was as notorious as if he had seen it with his own eyes.—The Lord raised up this evil out of his own house : yet he did not put the wickedness into the hearts of his sons ; but he left them to their own vile passions, and over-ruled the effects of them for David's chastisement. (Notes, Luke, xxii. 21—23. Acts, ii. 23—28.)

14 Howbeit, because ^kby this deed thou hast given great occasion to the enemies of the LORD to blaspheme, ^lthe child also that is born unto thee shall surely die.

15 ¶ And Nathan departed unto his house : and the LORD ^mstruck the child that Uriah's wife bare unto David, and it was very sick.

16 David therefore ⁿbesought God for the child ; and David ^ofasted, and went in, and ^play all night upon the earth.

17 And ^qthe elders of his house arose, and went to him, to raise him up from the earth : but he would not, neither did he eat bread with them.

18 And it came to pass on the seventh day, that the child died. And the servants of David feared to tell him that the child was dead : for they said, Behold, while the child was yet alive, we spake unto him, and he would not hearken unto our voice : how will he then ^rvex himself, if we tell him that the child is dead?

19 But when David saw that his servants whispered, David perceived that the child was dead : therefore David said unto his servants, ^sIs the child dead? And they said, He is dead.

20 Then David ^tarose from the earth, and washed, and ^uanointed himself, and changed his apparel, and came into ^vthe house of the LORD, and worshipped :

V. 13. The dormant spark of divine grace in David's heart now began to rekindle ; and before this plain and faithful statement of facts, in the name of God, his evasions vanished, and his guilt appeared in all its magnitude. (Notes, 2 Chr. xvi. 7—12. xxiv. 19—22. xxv. 14—16.) He therefore was far from resenting the pointed rebuke of the prophet, or attempting any palliation of his conduct ; but, in deep humiliation of heart, he confessed, "I have sinned against the LORD." The words are few ; but the event proved them to have been the language of genuine repentance, which regards sin as committed against the authority and glory of the Lord, whether or not it have occasioned evil to any fellow-creature. (Note, Ps. li. 4.) And Nathan assured him, (perhaps not at that time, but when the sincerity of his repentance had been proved,) that the "LORD had put away his sin, and he should not die."—Murder and adultery were crimes punishable by death : no Israelite indeed had authority to execute this sentence upon the Lord's anointed ; yet David might justly fear that God himself would cut him off by some sudden judgment : but the prophet informed him, that he should not die in this manner, or be cast out of his kingdom ; and this intimated, that the eternal punishment also would be remitted.

V. 14. Perhaps the Ammonites, and other idolatrous enemies of God and Israel, had received information of these sins of the highly favoured servant and zealous worshipper of JEHOVAH, and blasphemed his name on that account : and the wicked Israelites, especially those of Saul's party, would reflect upon the Divine justice, in that Saul had been rejected for apparently less heinous crimes, and David was spared notwithstanding these enormities. (Notes, Matt. xviii. 7—9. 1 Tim. vi. 1—5. Tit. ii. 3—6.) But the Lord did not punish Saul above his deservings, and therefore did him no injustice in forgiving David : and he judges not merely by the outward action, but by the inward disposition of the heart ; and there he perceived a very important difference, and even contrariety, in the two characters. In the temporal punishment, however, of David in his family, the Lord determined to silence these blasphemies ; and he began by the death of the child which Bath-sheba had born to him. This event, though in fact a mercy to all parties, yet being predicted and publicly declared to be a rebuke for his sin, would be for the time a sharp and painful chastisement.

V. 15. The prophet, having delivered his message, returned home, probably to pray for the king : and David retired, and poured out his soul in godly sorrow and ingenuous confessions ; and perhaps immediately wrote, and soon after published, the fifty-first Psalm ; which forms the most complete specimen and standard of genuine and deep repentance, that is anywhere extant. (Notes, Ps. li.)

V. 16. David might hope, that there was a secret condition in the threatening ; and that upon his humiliation, attended by fasting and prayer, the child might yet be spared. (Marg. Ref.) He considered the infant as an innocent sufferer for his crimes ; (Note, xxv. 17 ;) he had doubtless a very great affection for him ; his spirit was at that time peculiarly tender ; and perhaps Bath-sheba likewise was overwhelmed with a load of guilt and sorrow, (24.) On all these accounts, he thus deeply humbled himself before God, and sought the life of the child, though he would have lived a monument of his sin and shame.—We may conceive of him, as laying aside his royal robes, and appearing as a penitent, in a mean and mournful garment, fasting, lying on the ground, confessing his guilt, mourning over it, and praying with all fervency, and without intermission, during the whole night. (Notes, Joel ii. 11—14. Jon. ii. 5—9.)

V. 18. Some think that the child died on the seventh day from his birth ; and that this was an additional rebuke, as he died uncircumcised. But others then he came to his own house; and when he required, they set bread before him, and he did eat.

21 Then said his servants unto him, 'What thing is this that thou hast done? thou didst fast and weep for the child while it was alive; but when the child was dead, thou didst rise and eat bread.

22 And he said, While the child was yet alive "I fasted and wept: for I said, Who can tell whether God will be gracious to me, that the child may live?

23 But now he is dead, wherefore should I fast? Can I bring him back again? "I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me.

24 ¶ And David comforted Bath-sheba his wife, and went in unto her, and lay with her: and she bare a son, and he called his name Solomon; and the LORD loved him.

25 And he sent by the hand of "Nathan the prophet, and he called his name "Jedidiah, because of the LORD.

26 ¶ And "Joab fought against Rabbah of the children of Ammon, and took the royal city.

suppose that the continuance of the child's sickness, and of David's sorrow and mortification, is meant.

V. 20. By changing his raiment, and going up to the house of God to worship, David publicly expressed his acceptance of the chastisement, his submission to the will of God, and his gratitude to him for sparing his life. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 21—23. While David entertained any hope of the child's life, humble fasting and prayer formed the present duty: but after the event, meek submission was required. He could not profit the child; and he might injure himself, and neglect his duty, by mourning for him; the child, released from sufferings, and gone before to a better world, was no loser; the public sustained no detriment, as in the death of useful persons; and there remained no farther reason for sorrow, except he should repine against the will of God: and this he would not do, but rather prepare to follow his son, and hope to meet him in the world above.

V. 24, 25. David's marriage with Bath-sheba was in many respects very sinful; yet it must not be disannulled. In the mystery of the Divine counsels, it made way for the performance of the promises before given: (Note, vii. 12—16:—) and Bath-sheba has her name inserted in the genealogy of the Redeemer!—As a token of the Lord's reconciliation to David and Bath-sheba, this son by her was named Solomon, or the peaceable; and Jedidiah, or Beloved of the Lord, because of the Lord's peculiar favour to him. (Notes, Gen. xlix. 10. Matt. i. 20—23.) In this he especially typified Him of whom the Father hath said, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."

V. 26—31. The sacred historian, having finished the account of David's fall and repentance, resumes the subject of the war with Ammon.—As the siege of Rabbah seems to have been considerably advanced when Uriah was slain, the event here recorded may be supposed to have occurred not long after. The Lord was very gracious to David, in thus prospering his arms, notwithstanding his aggravated offences: and Joab approved himself very faithful to his prince, and attentive to his reputation. The crown of the king of the Ammonites is said to have weighed a talent; but that, being above a hundred weight, seems enormous: probably it means the value of it with the precious stones.—David seems to have been too much pleased with this crown: whereas his anointing, as the king of God's people, was a far more honourable distinction.—It is not certain what the punishments were, which he inflicted upon the prisoners: whether he put them to death, under saws, axes, and harrows; or whether he condemned them to wear out their lives in severe bondage, by various labours. He meant to punish their cruelty to the men of Jabesh-gilead, and their contempt of his ambassadors: but if there were, as it seems probable, an undistinguishing severity exercised towards them, we must ascribe it to the state of his mind at that time.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—14. Our falls into sin originate from the evil of our depraved hearts, but our recoveries are from the Lord. He commonly employs the ministry of the word in bringing sinners to repentance: and the plain authoritative declaration of the Divine law, and of the evil nature and effects of sin, is the appointed method of awakening the careless conscience, and of bringing men to condemn themselves. In some cases, great prudence and address are necessary in delivering the message of God, especially to those in exalted stations. Apt illustration often forms the most compendious and effectual method of producing conviction: and it is well when such an indirect address will spare the painful necessity of more explicit reproofs. But self-flattery renders us quick-sighted to the faults of others, though of inferior malignity, and blind to our own most atrocious offences; and in proportion as men are tender to their own sins, they are often unreasonably severe in animadverting upon those of their neighbours. Hence arises the necessity of "great plainness of speech" in the public ministry of the gospel; that the conduct and cases of sinners, of every description, may be explicitly declared, and that every one's conscience may say, "Thou art the man." Nor is this personal; provided the general cases of multitudes are described, and the peculiarities of an individual's character are not so marked, as to draw the attention of the auditors from themselves to him. But it is often necessary, in private, to be still more explicit and particular, with such professed Christians as will not understand the plainest public address; and this without any reserve or respect of persons, and with all seriousness, energy, and exhortation. It will never be well with the church of God, till secret lamentations over unrepented scandals and abuses, and private conversations concerning the faults of the absent, be generally changed, by the ministers of Christ, for faithful plain-dealing with men in private: and they who are of reputation, ought to take the lead, and to set the example, in this arduous but salutary business.—The true minister's message will comfort or distress the consciences of those who regard it, according as they are walking with God, or the contrary: nay, the believer himself can expect no consolation from a scriptural statement of the truth, while he lies under the guilt and power of unrepented sin; and if he obtain any, it is either through the minister's error or unfaithfulness, or his own ill-grounded confidence.—Every instance of the Divine goodness to us, increases the heinousness of our transgressions: but the extent of the promises, and the Lord's readiness to hear prayer, and to give every good thing to his people, peculiarly aggravate our guilt, when we desire forbidden gratifications. We need not wonder that men in general despise the promises and commandments of God; yea, and the Lord himself, in his whole character, and in all his relations to them: when even eminent believers, in some instances, are capable of the same folly and ingratitude. From this source all our sins proceed: man's contempt of the infinite excellency and invaluable favour of God; disregard to his authority, aversion to his service, and enmity to his justice and holiness, give being and malignity to every species of disobedience; and are in themselves utterly inexcusable.—But, however iniquity may have prevailed, where true grace exists there is also sensibility, and a ground in which the word of God may take root. (Note, Matt. xiii. 33.) The humbled sinner will not be offended by his faithful reprover, but rather thank him; and God will never refuse forgiveness to true penitents. It is, however, grievous to think what great occasion of blasphemy to the enemies of the Lord, the falls of his professing people afford: yet none except his enemies will make this use of them; and the open confessions of the offenders, their future conduct, the severe corrections which they experience, and their patience under them, will manifest the equity and purity, as well as the mercy of God, in pardoning their offences; and will mark an essential difference, of habitual character and disposition, betwixt them and unhumiliated sinners of every description.

V. 15—31. The Lord often causes his offending people to read their sins in their punishment: he puts them to open shame for their secret offences; and, by the sufferings of those whom they most tenderly love, he fills their hearts with the keenest anguish. Under such rebukes they will be led to deeper humiliation, to chasten themselves with fasting, and to pour out more fervent and incessant prayers; and especially for those who are suffering on their account, and are unable to pray for themselves. Yet, the same principles will teach them to moderate their sorrows for those beloved objects, whom God has taken from them, and to prepare diligently to follow them: and nothing should induce them to neglect their present duty. After the same manner, as long as life lasts, let the discouraged sinner seek the Lord, humble himself, and pour out his prayers before him; if only able to say, "who knoweth if God will be gracious to me?"—They, who are ignorant of the divine life, cannot comprehend the reasons of a believer's conduct in his varied experiences: they mistake deep humility and fervent prayer, for impatience and an inordinate love to created objects; acquiescence in the Lord's will, and cheerful gratitude under sharp trials, will be deemed indifference and apathy; and in a thousand different ways they will shew their incapacity to judge of the consistency, and reasons of his behaviour. (Notes, Acts xvi. 1—4. 1 Cor. ii. 14—16.) But God accepts those services which man censures: an humble submissive spirit prepares the way for divine consolations, notwithstanding former crimes; and we should encourage the desponding hearts of our fellow-sinners, with the comforts which the Lord hath graciously afforded us: and when the heart is thus prepared, the message of the minister will again be peace and joy.—Our prayers for our children are graciously answered, if some of them die in their tender infancy (for they are well taken care of,) and the others live "beloved of the Lord."—Vengeance will in due season overtake the persecutors and abusers of God's people and ministers; and in their severest sufferings He will be Absalom invites his brethren to a feast; where Amnon at his command is murdered, 23—29. David grieves vehemently, supposing that all his sons are slain, but is comforted by Jonadab, and learns the truth, 30—36. Absalom flees to Geshur; but David longs after him, 37—39.

10 And Amnon said unto Tamar, Bring the meat into the chamber, that I may eat of thine hand. And Tamar took the cakes which she had made, and brought ⁿthem into the chamber to Amnon her brother.

11 And when she had brought ⁿthem unto him to eat, he took hold of her, and said unto her, ^p'Come, lie with me, my sister.

12 And she answered him, Nay, my brother, do not ^q'force me; for ^q'no such thing ought to be done in Israel: do not thou this ^q'folly.

13 And I, whither shall I cause my shame to go? and as for thee, thou shalt be as one of the fools in Israel. ^r'Now therefore, I pray thee, speak unto the king; for he will not withhold me from thee.

righteous, though the instruments should be unreasonably severe.—In proportion as we lose sight of the honour that cometh from God, we become ambitious and vain of worldly distinctions: (Note, 2 Kings xx. 12—19.) and we are most compassionate, kind, and forgiving to our fellow-sinners, when we most feel our need, and taste the sweetness, of the Lord's forgiving love to our own souls.—Finally, in whatever service the Lord may please to employ us, may we, (as Joab with David,) execute his will faithfully, and then give him the whole glory without any reserve!

NOTES.

CHAP. XIII. V. 1, 2. Nathan's word began to take effect not very long after it was delivered. (Notes, xii. 10—12.)—David seems to have been too indulgent of his children: probably, their mothers had a great share in their education, and some of these instilled into them bad principles; which are natural effects of polygamy. Yet, they had been restrained from open wickedness by his example, influence, and occasional instructions, until he had committed those crimes which have been considered. Notwithstanding David's repentance, his sons, now grown up, would naturally consider his conduct as a license to their youthful inclinations, and conclude that he could not greatly censure them, after he had set them such an example. Thus he might clearly trace the sins of his children from his own misconduct, and this would increase the anguish of the chastisement.—Tamar was Amnon's sister by the same father, but of another mother. If Amnon had not been secretly habituated to vice, surely he never could, in the first instance, have given way to so unnatural a passion! By gazing upon Tamar's beauty his concupiscence was excited, and, being indulged, it gained an entire ascendancy. (Notes, xi. 1—5. Matt. v. 27, 28.) He was not restrained from his base purpose by the fear of God, by conscience, shame, regard to the peace or favour of his father, or to the reputation, virtue, or comfort of Tamar, or any foresight of evil consequences; but, by reason of her modesty, and the care which was taken of her, he could not find an opportunity of getting her into his power. His passion therefore preyed upon his spirits, and impaired his health. (Notes, Cant. v. 8. 2 Cor. vii. 9—11.)

V. 3, 4. Amnon deemed Jonadab his friend, because he was his flatterer, and the caterer for his lusts. He was "a very subtle man;" (Notes, 32, 33. xvi. 20—23. Gen. iii. 1;) one very wise as to this present world; or rather, a very crafty courtier, who readily discerned the inclinations of his superiors, and was very ingenious in devising means for their gratification. Observing Amnon to look more and more languid one day after another; he suspected the cause, and intimated to him, that a person of his rank might obtain his desires if he went about it: and thus he drew from him the shameful secret.

Had he not interposed, probably Amnon's passion might have been suppressed, and at length supplanted by an affection for some other object. (Notes, 1 Kings xxi. 4—7.) But when Jonadab understood the state of his mind, he speedily put him in a way of obtaining his wishes. Amnon was the heir-apparent of the crown: David was growing old, and, probably, shewed Jonadab but little favour, though he was his nephew; (32;) he therefore paid court to Amnon; and supposed that his rank and authority would bear him out in any crime which he was disposed to commit.

V. 5—14. This plot was laid very artfully. Amnon's sickly looks gave plausibility to his pretended illness: David's tender affection to his children was well known: persons, who have been accustomed to indulgence, are naturally whimsical in their diet when sick: David would be sure to visit Amnon, and be disposed to humour him in every thing, and would not suspect so base a design concealed under his request: and thus he would readily obtain David's consent to Tamar's coming to him—Nor could she have any suspicion of such horrid villany from one, who seemed very ill and in danger of death: but when he commanded all to leave the room, whilst he ate of her cakes, she might very justly have apprehended some bad design.—Tamar's skill and readiness in such ordinary employments, though a king's daughter; her compassionate attention to her half-brother; and all her answers and behaviour are suited to give us a very favourable opinion of her character. She pleaded that he, as her brother, ought to protect, instead of injuring her; that such behaviour was peculiarly vile in an Israelite; that it would for ever disgrace and ruin her, and expose him to scorn and hatred, as one of the most abandoned of men. (Marg. Ref.) Her proposal to him, to ask her of the king, was doubtless solely meant to prevent present violence; for she knew that David would afterwards protect her. (Note, Gen. xix. 6—9.) And it is probable, that she accompanied her complaints and expostulations, with unavailing outcries, which Amnon's domestics doubtless disregarded: for she seems to have been entirely free from blame in the scandalous transaction.

V. 15—18. The determined conduct and language of Tamar, probably joined with sharp reproaches, so irritated Amnon, that his licentious love was changed into the most vehement hatred: and without regarding her remonstrances, he ordered her to be turned out of doors, with every circumstance of aversion and abhorrence. This was doubtless an additional injury, and tended to publish her disgrace, which might otherwise have been concealed: but we must attribute it to the confusion and distress of her mind, that she stated this to be the greater injury; unless she supposed that, in so singular a case, he might and ought to have married her.

V. 19, 20. Tamar went home in the manner, and with all the gestures, of 20 And Absalom her brother said unto her, Hath Amnon thy brother been with thee? ¹but hold now thy peace, my sister: he is thy brother, regard not this thing. So Tamar remained ²desolate in her brother Absalom's house.

21 ¶ But when king David heard of all these things, ³he was very wroth.

22 And Absalom ⁴spake unto his brother Amnon neither good nor bad: for Absalom ⁵hated Amnon, because he had forced his sister Tamar.

23 ¶ And it came to pass after two full years, that Absalom had ⁶sheep-shearers in Baal-hazor, which is beside Ephraim: and Absalom ⁷invited all the king's sons.

24 And Absalom came to the king, and said, Behold now, thy servant hath sheep-shearers; ⁸let the king, I beseech thee, and his servants, go with thy servant.

25 And the king said to Absalom, Nay, my son, let us not all now go, lest we be chargeable unto thee. And he ⁹pressed him: howbeit he would not go, but ¹⁰blessed him.

26 Then said Absalom, If not, I pray thee, ¹¹let my brother Amnon go with us. And the king said unto him, Why should he go with thee?

27 But Absalom pressed him, that he let Amnon and all the king's sons go with him.

28 ¶ Now Absalom had ¹²commanded his servants, saying, Mark ye now when Amnon's ¹³heart is merry with wine, and when I say unto you, Smite Amnon; then kill him, ¹⁴fear not: ¹⁵have not I commanded you? be courageous, and be ¹⁶valiant.

29 And the ¹⁷servants of Absalom did unto Amnon as Absalom had commanded: then all the king's sons arose, and every man ¹⁸gat him up upon his mule, and fled.

30 ¶ And it came to pass, while they were in the way, that tidings came to David, saying, Absalom hath slain all the king's sons, and there is not one of them left.

31 Then the king ¹arose, and tare his garments, and lay on the earth; and ²all his servants stood by with their clothes rent.

32 And ³Jonadab the son of ⁴Shimeah, David's brother, answered and said, Let not my lord suppose that they have slain all the young men the king's sons; for Amnon only is dead: for by the ⁵appointment of Absalom this hath been ⁶determined, from the day that he forced his sister Tamar.

33 Now therefore ⁷let not my lord the king take the thing to his heart, to think that all the king's sons are dead: for Amnon only is dead.

34 But ⁸Absalom fled. And the young man that kept the watch lifted up his eyes, and looked, and, behold, there came much people by the way of the hill-side behind him.

35 And Jonadab said unto the king, Behold, the king's sons come: ⁹as thy servant said, so it is.

36 And it came to pass, as soon as he had made an end of speaking, that, behold, the king's sons came, and lifted up their voice, and wept; and the king also and all his servants wept ¹⁰very sore.

37 ¶ But Absalom fled, and went to ¹¹Talmai, the son of ¹²Ammihud, king of Geshur. And David mourned for his son every day.

38 So Absalom fled, and went to ¹³Geshur, and was there three years.

39 And ¹⁴the soul of king David ¹⁵longed to go forth unto Absalom: for he was ¹⁶comforted concerning Amnon, seeing he was dead.

an inconsolable mourner: (Marg. Ref.) doubtless her mind was filled with extreme anguish; but perhaps she meant also thus to protest, that though unfortunate she was not criminal. Absalom dissembled his resentment, and persuaded her to compose her mind, and not further to expose the shame of her family.—It seems that Tamar lived all her days a single and retired life. (Note, Gen. xxxiv. 31.)

V. 21. Amnon's incest was an express violation of the divine law; and to one prohibition it is added, "he shall be cut off; he shall bear his iniquity." (Lev. xviii. 9. xx. 17. Deut. xxii. 22-30.) Yet the magistrate was not explicitly commanded to put the offender to death. Neither was it enjoined, that he who forced a woman should be put to death, unless she was betrothed; because otherwise he would have been obliged to marry her. (Marg. Ref.) Perhaps these circumstances united with David's paternal tenderness, especially to his eldest son, and with his consciousness of his own guilt, to satisfy his mind in leaving Amnon to the judgment of God, without inflicting any punishment upon him. But certainly he ought to have manifested his displeasure in some very decided manner; and this complication of crimes would have justified the severest punishment: but as he neglected his duty, the Lord afterwards took vengeance on Amnon, in a way which added still more to David's domestic trials. (Note, 22-33.)

V. 22-29. Absalom harboured the deepest resentment of the gross affront put upon himself, and the irreparable injury done to his sister; yet for two years he concealed his hatred under the appearance of indifference! (Notes, Gen. xxvii. 41, 42. Prov. xxvi. 24-27. Eph. iv. 26, 27.) This imposed on Amnon, who on that very account ought to have been more afraid of him: at length, however, he deemed matters ripe for the execution of his determined revenge. According to the custom of those times, having flocks of sheep, and making a feast when they were shorn, he formed his plot upon that circumstance. To cover his design, he invited his father to come to his feast, sensible that from prudential reasons he would decline the invitation: but he thus obtained his approbation to Amnon's going with the rest of his brethren; and David perhaps hoped that the reconciliation between them would be thus cemented. Probably Absalom was urged on the more resolutely to the murder of his brother, because he was the next heir to the crown; if Chileab were dead, as it is generally supposed. His crime was most aggravated, by being a breach of hospitality, and committed under the mask of affection, in the presence of his brethren; and by his father being drawn in unintentionally to be accessory to it. He involved his servants also in the guilt of murder, as if his command could warrant their transgression of God's law! and he took the opportunity of killing Amnon when he was drunk, or nearly so, as if he meant to murder body and soul at once!

V. 32, 33. It cannot be supposed, that Absalom would make Jonadab his confidant; but being a sagacious man, he had penetrated his malicious intentions. (Marg. Ref.) It would, however, have been more profitable sagacity, to have foreseen these consequences, and to have forewarned Amnon, before he had perpetrated the crime which provoked this fatal revenge. (Note, 1, 2.—Jer. iv. 22. Note, viii. 8, 9.)

V. 37-39. (Notes, Gen. iv. 9-12.) Absalom fled for refuge to the court of his mother's father: (Marg. Ref.) and there he continued for three years: and David, so far from requiring him to be delivered up, that he might be punished according to the law of God, after a time impatiently desired to recall him, and to be reconciled to him. In this he too closely copied Eli's example, and honoured his sons more than God; (Note, 1 Sam. ii. 29;) who therefore made them his scourges, and then punished them himself. David's sons, however, were not priests, and so did not disgrace the sanctuary: he could not have proceeded against Absalom, without condemning him to die, as Eli might have done by his sons: and David's own blood-guiltiness, too much resembling Absalom's, (in that he murdered Uriah, under the guise of friendship, by the hand of others, after having previously tempted him to drunkenness,) might tend to enervate his resolution, and dispose him to lenity: but these considerations by no means excuse his conduct. (Notes, xi. 12-17.)—Absalom's servants fled with him, and thus escaped the doom which they merited, and were reserved for further mischief. (xiv. 30. xv. 10.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-14. The judgments of God upon those who are finally saved, may be so terrible, varied, and continued, as effectually to proclaim his abhorrence of their crimes: and no reflecting person, with these records before his eyes, would venture to commit iniquity, even if he could be sure to escape eternal misery; any more than a man would, for a trifling advantage, throw himself from a precipice and break his bones, if he could be assured that his life would be preserved: for he would be sensible, that he must suffer immense pain, and probably be a cripple all his days.—The Lord over-rules the wickedness of men, (whilst they are hurried on by their own lusts and Satan's temptations,) to accomplish his holy and righteous purposes.—External accomplishments are generally a detriment to the possessors, and a temptation to others: none therefore ought to be vain of them, or to regret the want of them.—So depraved is the human heart, that even natural affection may degenerate into licentiousness; and the intercourse betwixt near relations should be conducted with caution and prudence, that no opportunity may be given to those who are disposed to commit iniquity.—What men dignify with the name of love, is often a base sensual inclination, entire selfishness, which triumphs over conscience and the fear of God, and without pity consigns its object to irreparable disgrace and misery, for the sake of a momentary gratification! How different from, yea, how contrary to, that love, which the law of God commands!—Men's domineering lusts, when restrained by external hinderances, become their tormentors, drink up their spirits, and disorder their bodies; and probably the fury of sinful passions, without any possibility of gratification, will form one dreadful part of the misery of the damned: let the thought lead every reader to seek the mortification of them, that by the grace of God they may be extirpated from his heart.—What would be the state of this world, if every sinner's powers were equal to his inclination for the commission of wickedness!—If indulged melancholy be improper for those, who possess eminent stations and great affluence in this world, how inconsistent is it with the profession, privileges, and prospects of the children of God! and if they are "lean from day to day" in their souls, it is commonly the effect of yielding to sloth and worldly affections.—When iniquity is conceived in the heart, all the powers of the understanding will be employed in devising how to effect it; and even sickness will not always be sufficient to take men off from licentious pursuits.—When debauched persons occupy exalted stations, they will be attended by "very subtle men," nearly resembling Satan; sagacious prompters, and crafty advisers in iniquity! These will assist them in overcoming the opposition of shame and conscience; and encourage them to gratify themselves, without regarding truth or justice, or the interests or happiness of others. Such are deemed and treated as friends, but the event will prove them to have been, merely for their own advantage, the most destructive enemies.—Many violent, but concealed evil desires would be extinguished, did not such prompters discern and draw forth the confession of them, and contrive the method of gratification. Such plausible villains know how to take advantage of the affection, candour, modesty, and unsuspecting confidence of pious persons, for the accomplishment of their own infamous designs: and when iniquity is resolved on, a perfect infatuation takes place, and all probable or certain consequences are forgotten.—But silent abhorrence is the proper censure of these abominable deeds of darkness, which are especially horrible under the light of revelation: even ungodly persons will execrate those, who perpetrate such outrages against common decency; and they will appear as fools and reprobates to their neighbours in general.

V. 15-39. Sensual love soon changes into hatred, and concupiscence into loathing: nor can it reasonably be expected, that they, who make no scruple of debauching the persons for whom they pretend affection, will feel any remorse at deserting them with cruelty and disdain, at exposing them to shame and contempt, or at leaving them to all the horrors of penury or prostitution. Let no one ever expect better treatment from those, who are capable of attempting to seduce them.—But whatever anguish and distress may result from injuries received, nothing will eventually harm us, except our own iniquity: and it is better to suffer the greatest wrong, than to commit the least sin, though apparently with impunity and without rebuke. It is every one's duty to comfort those who are in distress: and generally it is most advisable for injured persons to be quiet, and leave their cause with God.—When less atrocious crimes escape punishment from man, more and greater will be committed: and the magistrate's anger against heinous offences should stimulate him to enforce the laws without respect to persons: but all others must learn to bear every injury without seeking to revenge themselves; and if mild expostulations and prayers will not prevail, they must quietly leave the event to God.—Hatred and revenge, however, possess the hearts of ungodly men: and some are so artful and malicious, that they defer their vengeance, and cover it with the appearance of affection, till they have an opportunity of executing it with more determined malignity.—Often have festive interviews, and seasons of sensual indulgence, been the chosen scenes for assassinations and massacres; and men have been sent into the eternal world from the midst of riot and excess! Such is human nature, left to itself, armed with power, and emboldened by prosperity: what need then have we to pray for converting grace!—No crime is so great or evident, that men will not be found daring enough to commit, in order to please their superiors: but, alas! their command will not bear out the guilty at the day of judgment, for violating the law of God.—Evil tidings are generally enhanced: yet the imaginary calamity proves a real affliction for the time, and may serve the purpose of an humiliating chastisement.—Children are always uncertain comforts: but indulged children will surely prove trials to pious parents, whose foolish fondness induces them to neglect their duty to God: yet parental affection can scarcely be extinguished by any degree of misconduct. But the case of parents is very deplorable, when the children copy their conduct in the crimes which they perpetrate; and when it is nevertheless their duty to punish them with great severity for those very imitations! Let this be a warning to us, to watch and pray against temptation, lest by the misconduct of one unguarded hour, we should occasion such fatal consequences to our offspring, and such misery to ourselves throughout our future lives. And let us not covet that worldly wisdom, which, with all its boasted sagacity, cannot prevent the destruction of those who are counselled by it: but let us seek that heavenly wisdom, which safely leads the possessor through all the dangerous paths of this life, to the perfect felicity of the eternal world.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIV. V. 1-3. Joab perceived that David desired to recall Absalom, but did not know how to do it, without disgracing his character and government: he therefore framed a plausible story, and employed an ingenious woman, in the character of a disconsolate widow, to relate it to him. He doubtless intended to obtain a concession from David, that in some possible cases the punishment of a murderer might be dispensed with; and then to apply it to the case of Absalom. Thus he hoped to ingratiate himself with both parties: and doubtless he would also be glad to increase the number of precedents for the impunity of murderers, as he lay under the guilt of that crime himself.

V. 6, 7. (Notes, xlii. 22-29. Gen. iv. 8.) This feigned case was widely different from that which it was intended to represent. It was indeed stated that one brother had been slain by the other, and that the survivor, "the only son of his mother, who was a widow," lay exposed to the sentence of the law: but David had many other sons; and the death of Absalom would not have "quenched his coal that was left," or deprived him of the comfort of children to succeed him in his inheritance. Absalom had not slain Amnon in sudden anger and hasty striving, when they were alone; but in deliberate malice and revenge, in the presence of his brethren. There was no malicious prosecution carrying on against Absalom by those who coveted his inheritance: but the law of God demanded his death, as a satisfaction to justice, and for a salutary example to all others. Had the case been drawn more similar, it would have betrayed the design, and defeated Joab's purpose: and the state of David's heart rendered it unnecessary to be very exact; for he did not require a good reason, but a plausible excuse for following his inclinations, as Joab well knew.

V. 8-11. It would not have answered the intent, had David merely engaged to examine into the case; a present absolute decision in favour of the supposed criminal was the object. The woman therefore having excited David's compassion, urged her plea with great earnestness; and assured him that she was so satisfied of the goodness of the cause, that she was willing all the guilt, if there were any, should rest on her and her father's house, and not upon David or his kingdom. Thus she engaged for what was out of her power; for the neglect of punishing murder would, notwithstanding, bring guilt upon both king and people. (Note, 1 Sam. xxviii. 9, 10.) She, however, requested him to "remember the Lord his God:" that is, to give her the security of an oath, that he would spare and protect her son; and he was prevailed upon to grant her unreasonable demand. In this, David acted more according to his feelings than his judgment, and was very precipitate. If the party concerned in the supposed case did not deserve to die, the city of refuge would have afforded him a safe retreat, and a fair trial; and if he merited death, David had no right to dispense with the Divine law by protecting him: and moreover, he had examined no other witness than one interested party!

V. 13-17. The woman, having thus far carried her point, proceeded, gradually and ambiguously, to apply David's concession to the case of Absalom; and her speech was most artfully devised, so that she might retract, or be more 15 Now therefore that I am come to speak of this thing unto my lord the king, it is because the people have made me afraid: and thy handmaid said, I will now speak unto the king; it may be that the king will perform the request of his handmaid.

16 For the king will hear, to deliver his handmaid out of the hand of the man that would destroy me and my son together out of the inheritance of God.

17 Then thine handmaid said, The word of my lord the king shall now be ^{comfortable}: for ^{as} an angel of God, so is my lord the king ^{to} ^{discern} good and bad; therefore the LORD thy God will be with thee.

18 Then the king answered and said unto the woman, ^{Hide} not from me, I pray thee, the thing that I shall ask thee. And the woman said, Let my lord the king now speak.

19 And the king said, Is not the hand ^{of} Joab with thee in all this? And the woman answered and said, ^{As} thy soul liveth, my lord the king, none can ^{turn} to the right hand or to the left from ought that my lord the king hath spoken: for thy servant Joab, he bade me, and ^{he} put all these words in the mouth of thine handmaid:

21 ¶ And the king said unto Joab, Behold now, ^I have done this thing: go therefore, bring the young man Absalom again.

grace in thy sight, my lord, O king, in that the king hath fulfilled the request of ^{his} servant.

23 So Joab arose and went to ^{Geshur}, and brought Absalom to Jerusalem.

24 And the king said, Let him turn to his own house, and let him not see my face. So Absalom returned to his own house, and saw not the king's face.

25 ¶ But in all Israel there was none to be so much praised as Absalom for his beauty: ^{from} the sole of his foot even to the crown of his head, there was no blemish in him.

26 And ^{when} he polled his head, (for it was at every year's end that he polled it: because the hair was heavy on him, therefore he polled it:) he weighed the hair of his head at ^{two} hundred shekels after the king's weight.

27 ¶ And unto Absalom there were ^{born} three sons, and one daughter, whose name was ^{Tamar}: she was a woman of a fair countenance.

28 ¶ So Absalom dwelt two full years in Jerusalem, and saw not the king's face.

29 Therefore Absalom sent for Joab, to have sent him to the king; ^{but} he would not come to him: and when he sent again the second time, he would not come.

30 Therefore he said unto his servants, See, Joab's field is near ^{mine}, and he hath barley there; ^{go} and set it on fire. ^{And} Absalom's servants set the field on fire.

31 Then Joab arose, and came to Absalom unto his house, and said unto him, Wherefore have thy servants set my field on fire?

32 And Absalom answered Joab, Behold, I sent unto thee, saying, Come hither, that I may send thee to the king, to say, Wherefore am I come from Geshur? ^{it had been} good for me to have been there still: now therefore let me see the king's face; and ^{if} there be any iniquity in me, let him kill me.

33 So Joab came to the king, and told him: and when he had called for Absalom, he came to the king, and bowed himself on his face to the ground before the king: and the king ^{kissed} Absalom.

explicit, according as he took it. She intimated that the king's severity to his son was injurious to the people of God; and that he was wanting in his duty to the kingdom, in delaying to recall him: as if Absalom had been so excellent a young man, that all the hopes of Israel centred in him! She represented his flight to Geshur as a banishment, which had already been too severe a punishment of his offence. She pleaded the certainty of death, and the impossibility of recalling the dead to life again; by which she would either insinuate that Amnon would have died in some other way, if Absalom had not slain him; or that the punishment of Absalom would not bring him to life again; or that, as David himself must at length die, it was proper that Absalom should be recalled, to succeed him. But whatever she meant, it was nothing to the purpose: for God hath commanded the death of the murderer, which exceedingly tends to the preservation of the life of man, though it cannot raise the dead; and if such an argument were of any force, no malefactor must be put to death!—She also pleaded the mercy of God, in sparing, and re-admitting sinful men into his presence and favour, though justly banished from it; and yet he is no respecter of persons: in which she seems to have referred to the return of the manslayer to his inheritance, at the death of the high priest.—The marginal reading, “because God hath not taken away,” &c. seems to be the proper translation; and it is intimated, that as God had spared Absalom, David ought to pardon him.—But God pardons none, to the dishonour of his law and justice; nor any who are impenitent, or, to the encouragement of crimes, and the injury of others. Perhaps she meant to hint, that the people expressed their dissatisfaction with Absalom's banishment so openly, that they made her afraid of an insurrection: but she purposely so confounded the fabled cause of her son, with that of Absalom, that part of her address is obscure. Whilst, however, she ventured to censure David for not gratifying himself; she took care repeatedly to give him flattering commendations for his wisdom and goodness, which in such a cause abundantly compensated for the ambiguity of her discourse, and the weakness of her arguments: (Notes, Prov. xxvii. 29. xxix. 5:) and, to do her justice, her ingenuity in pleading so bad a cause was admirable.

V. 18—20. (Notes, iii. 26—39. xi. 14—17.) Even when David perceived, and the woman acknowledged, the drift of her discourse; she seems to have aimed to keep up the idea, that the case stated was real, though she had turned the discourse to Absalom; and that she could not hope the king would spare her son, if he would not recall his own.—Her flattery in the conclusion was very great; even though she meant only the land of Israel, and not the whole earth: but, in fact, David was not at this time giving much proof of his wisdom!

V. 21, 22. David was willing to suppose that his oath, to spare the woman's son, obliged him to recall Absalom, who was the person really intended; though he could not but perceive the insufficiency of her arguments, and the disparity of the cases. As a favour, therefore, he gave Joab permission to fetch home Absalom: and Joab appeared as thankful to the king for allotting him this service, as if the most expensive kindness had been done him. There was much of the courtier in this; but it was far distant from godly sincerity!—If, however, Joab thought, that this conduct of David secured him, as a murderer, from punishment, he was deceived: for he was at length put to death for his crimes. (Notes, 1 Kings ii. 5, 6. 28—34.)

V. 24. David perhaps meant to quiet his own conscience, and to silence the censures of others, or to shew his abhorrence of murder, by laying Absalom under some tokens of disgrace, and by denying himself the pleasure of seeing him. This might also be intended to humble him: but it entirely failed of producing that effect.

V. 25—27. Absalom was not praised for wisdom, justice, or piety; but merely for his beauty, and effeminacy; for such, doubtless, was his attention to his hair: and yet he was the admiration and the favourite of Israel! (Note, 1 Kings, i. 5, 6. Marg. Ref.) His atrocious guilt was forgotten, and his accomplishments universally celebrated; which increased his arrogance, and ended in his ruin.—His sons seem to have died before him.

V. 28, 29. Perhaps Absalom was not only forbidden to visit his father, but was confined to his own house, and not allowed to go abroad. (Note, 1 Kings ii. 36—46.) Thus he would be greatly embarrassed in his ambitious projects; and this might be one reason of his impatient desire of being reconciled to David, and enjoying his full liberty; and also of being freed from the disgrace of his present situation, which would hinder many from attaching themselves to him. He seems, however, to have been secretly active in forming a party, even at this time: and either he had not properly requited Joab for his former services, or Absalom's popularity and ambition made that sagacious politician regard him as a dangerous person, with whom he did not wish to form any further connexions; and therefore he declined coming to him.

V. 30—33. Absalom's injurious and hectoring treatment of so considerable

CHAP. XV.

Absalom, by fair speeches and affected courtesy, steals the hearts of the people, 1—6. Under pretence of a vow, he obtains leave to go to Hebron, where he raises rebellion, 7—12. David hearing it, retires from Jerusalem, 13—18. Ittai the Gittite faithfully adheres to him, and the people weep over him, 19—23. Zadok and Abiathar are sent back with the ark, 24—29. David and his company ascend mount Olivet weeping, 30. He prays, that Abiathar's counsel may be turned into foolishness, 31. Hushai is sent back with instructions, 32—37.

AND it came to pass after this, that ^aAbsalom prepared him chariots and horses, and fifty men to run before him.

2 And Absalom ^brose up early, and stood beside the way of the gate: and it was so, that when any man that had a controversy ^ccame to the king for judgment, then Absalom called unto him, and said, Of what city art thou? And he said, Thy servant is of one of the tribes of Israel.

3 And Absalom said unto him, See, ^dthy matters are good and right; but ^ethere is no man deputed of the king to hear thee.

4 Absalom said moreover, ^fOh, that I were made judge in the land, that every man which hath any suit or cause might come unto me, and ^gI would do him justice!

a person as Joab; and his arrogant message to David, almost vindicating his conduct, and demanding justice, plainly shewed his character and intentions, and his confidence in the favour of the people, and the ill-judged lenity of his father; which aggravated David's sin and folly in receiving him into favour.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—20. It behoves princes and magistrates to be accessible, and to protect the destitute and oppressed; yet the most amiable dispositions must be regulated by discretion, or they will lead us to improper concessions.—Whilst the urgent wants of the poor are unheeded by most men; the secret wishes of those, who possess authority and affluence, are discovered, and anticipated, by crafty courtiers and dependents, who seek their own interest by forwarding their indulgence: so that conscientious self-denial is in such a situation doubly difficult.—If scruples and fears deter great men from complying with their inclinations; some feigned precedent, some plausible arguments, or some partial illustration, will be devised and speciously suggested, to remove the hindrance. In such a case, the discerning favourite will personally, or by some well-chosen instrument, venture to find fault with his prince or his patron; and to represent to him, that the safety of the state, or some other important interest, demands those measures which he scruples to adopt: and by such addresses to the passions as are suited to his character and disposition, mixed with flattering commendations and expostulations, he will cover the fallacy of his reasonings, and the unlawfulness and impolicy of that conduct which he recommends. Thus many a one has imposed on his own judgment and conscience, and concluded that he could not resist such urgent importunities, and such cogent arguments; that his consent was almost extorted; and that to oblige such kind friends he had passed his word, and could not in honour retract it: while in reality he was overcome by his own inclinations, and only wanted a specious excuse for indulging them. If the required concessions are evidently contrary to the duty of a man's station, and the interests of society; it will readily be argued, that some exceptions must be admitted; that this was a singular case; and that here exactness would be harsh, injurious, and of bad consequence: by such sophistry many even wise and good men deceive themselves, where their affections are previously engaged.—Let us hence learn, what need we have to keep close to our rule of duty, to pray earnestly for the teaching of the Holy Spirit, to watch against the deceitfulness of our own hearts, the bribery of our passions, and the agreeable poison of adulation.—Sin hath so filled the world with misery, that real cases of distress may be found, more pitiable than any which the imagination can feign; and we should readily endeavour to relieve those, who are in trouble: but even compassion, amiable as it is, will not justify our violations of the Divine law, or neglect of the important duties of our station. With this single exception, alleviating misery is the noblest privilege and employment of the great; who should in this especially “remember the Lord their God:” not only his authority and their accountableness to him; but his compassion and mercy to others and to themselves; and his justice and holiness, who in his love to sinners manifests most conspicuously his abhorrence of their crimes.—As all must die, and there is no recall from the tomb by human power, we should not spend our time in immoderate unavailing lamentations for the dead; but should be employed in preparing for our own dissolution, and in seizing the fleeting opportunity of serving our generation.—When we are most commended for our discernment, we generally act the most foolishly; for those very praises cloud the understanding and pervert the judgment. We deem it unnecessary for persons, of such acknowledged wisdom, to waste time in nice distinctions; we can scarcely refuse to speak comfortably to them, who speak so agreeably to us: and hence the effect of extravagant commendations, on those who receive, and on those who bestow them, is often mutual deception!

V. 21—33. In our treatment of children, or others who have greatly offended, every method should be used, which has a tendency to mortify pride, and to bring them to repentance; and in aiming at this important object, the feelings of our hearts must be repressed. But when high rank, early indulgence, impunity in crimes, flattering commendations, personal accomplishments, and popular favour, concur to increase the natural haughtiness of the human heart, and when the Lord leaves a man to himself, it is inconceivable to what a pith of arrogance and insolence he will arrive. Such a person will vindicate the basest villainies, treat all superiors with contempt, and all benefactors with ingratitude; and overbear and terrify all around him into compliance with his unreasonable demands.—But all this is the forerunner of destruction: and when parents, or rulers, countenance such imperious characters, they will soon experience the most fatal effects.—The Lord grant unto us the inward beauty of holiness, and the adorning of a meek and quiet spirit: for “favour is deceitful, and beauty is vain:” and they only, who fear the Lord, are truly excellent and happy.

NOTES.

CHAP. XV. V. 1—6. The last clause in these verses aptly marks the way, in which Absalom ingratiated himself with the people. (Note, Rom. xvi. 18—20.) He did not gain their hearts by eminent services, or by a wise and virtuous conduct. But he affected to look great, as heir to the crown, and yet to be very condescending, and affable to his inferiors: he pretended a great regard to their interests, and threw out artful insinuations against David's administration: he flattered every one who had a cause to be tried, with the assurance that he had right on his side; that, if it went against him, he might be led to accuse David and the magistrates of injustice. Though Absalom knew not how to obey, and deserved to die for his atrocious crime; yet he expressed a vehement desire to be judge over all the land; and suggested, that suits should not then be so tedious, expensive, and partially decided as they were. This he confirmed by rising early and by apparent application; though it was to other people's business, and not his own duty: and by such sinister arts, united with his personal attractions and address, he imposed upon multitudes all over the land, to prefer so worthless a character to the wise, righteous, and pious David!—Others of the king's sons were employed in public business, but Absalom seems not to have had any place. (Note, viii. 15—18.) This might offend him; and his artifices tended to alienate the people from his brethren, as well as from his father.—The chariots and horsemen of Absalom, being a deviation from the Divine law, should not have been allowed: (Notes, viii. 4. Deut. xvii. 16. 1 Kings i. 5, 6:) and indeed David might easily have foreseen the consequences of Absalom's ostentation, and should at once have restrained it.

V. 7—9. The era, from which the “forty years” here mentioned should be computed, cannot easily be assigned: nor are any of the conjectures of learned men on the subject fully satisfactory. The most approved seems to be, that they must be reckoned from the time of David's anointing by Samuel to the kingdom: yet that, being a private transaction, would scarcely have been referred to in a public computation; no other events are dated from that era; the subsequent history has no apparent connexion with it; and indeed it would fix Absalom's rebellion more early in David's reign, than it seems to have occurred.—It is evident that Josephus read four years, which he dates from Absalom's reconciliation, (a very proper time for his artful schemes to produce their effects;) and this seems to be the true reading; from which a trivial error, easily made, was fallen into by some very ancient transcriber.—Absalom was born at Hebron; and that gave him the pretext for asking to go thither to pay the vow, which he feigned to have made at Geshur: yet as David was made king at Hebron; it was obvious to conclude from Absalom's whole character, that he was influenced by ambition rather than devotion. But he knew his father would be pleased to suppose that he paid any regard to religion; and therefore he cloaked his intended treason and parricide with hypocrisy. (Note, Gen. xxvii. 21—23.)

V. 10. Spies having been previously sent into all parts of the land, to sound the inclinations of the people, and to prepare the way; when the design was ripe for execution, trumpeters were sent after them, that, when the signal was given, the spies might, through all the tribes of Israel, proclaim Absalom king, without expressly avowing the treason, or saying whether David was dead, or had resigned, or had admitted Absalom to share the authority. Thus, while David's loyal subjects would hesitate in uncertainty, Absalom's party became formidable.

V. 11. Absalom went to Hebron with David's approbation, and under the pretence of religion; and these persons, (who doubtless were of chief rank at Jerusalem,) being invited to a sacred feast, accompanied him, and thus of Jerusalem, that were called; and they went in their simplicity, and they knew not any thing.

12 And Absalom sent for "Ahiathophel the Gilonite, "David's counsellor, from his city, even from "Giloh, "while he offered sacrifices. And the conspiracy was strong; for "the people increased continually with Absalom.

13 ¶ And there came a messenger to David, saying, "The hearts of the men of Israel are after Absalom.

14 And David said unto all his servants that were with him at Jerusalem, "Arise, and let us flee; for we shall not else escape from Absalom: make speed to depart, lest he overtake us suddenly, and "bring evil upon us, "and smite the city with the edge of the sword.

15 And the king's servants said unto the king, "Behold, thy servants are ready to do whatsoever my lord the king shall appoint.

16 And the king went forth, and all his household "after him: and the king left "ten women, which were concubines, to keep the house.

17 And the king "went forth, and all the people after him, and tarried in a place that was far off.

18 And all his servants passed on beside him; and all the "Cherethites, and all the Pelethites, and all the "Gittites, six hundred men, which came after him from Gath, passed on before the king.

19 ¶ Then said the king to "Ittai, the Gittite, Wherefore goest thou also with us? return to thy place, and abide with the king: for thou art a stranger, and also an exile.

20 Whereas thou camest but yesterday, should I this day make thee "go up and down with us? "seeing I go whither I may, return thou, and take back thy brethren: "mercy and truth be with thee.

21 And Ittai answered the king, and said, "As the LORD liveth, and as my lord the king liveth, "surely in what place my lord the king shall be, whether in death or life, even there also will thy servant be.

22 And David said to Ittai, Go, and pass over. And Ittai the Gittite passed over, and all his men, and all the little ones that were with him.

23 And all the country wept with a loud voice, and all the people passed over: the king also himself passed over the brook "Kidron, and all the people passed over toward the way of the "wilderness.

24 ¶ And, lo, "Zadok also and all the Levites were with him, "bearing the ark of the covenant of God: and they set down the ark of God; and Abiathar went up until all the people had done passing out of the city.

25 And the king said unto Zadok, "Carry back the ark of God into the city: if I shall find favour in the eyes of the LORD, he will bring me again, and shew me both it and his "habitation.

26 But if he thus say, I "have no delight in thee; behold, here am I, "let him do to me as seemeth good unto him.

27 The king said also unto Zadok the priest, Art not thou "a seer? "return into the city in peace, and your two sons with you, Ahimaaz thy son, and Jonathan the son of Abiathar.

28 See, "I will tarry in the plain of the wilderness, until there come word from you to certify me.

29 Zadok therefore and Abiathar carried the ark of God again to Jerusalem: and they tarried there.

30 And David went up by "the ascent of mount Olivet, "and wept as he went up, and had "his head covered; and he went "barefoot: and all the people that was with him covered every man his head, and they went up, "weeping as they went up.

31 ¶ And one told David, saying, "Ahiathophel is undesignedly countenanced his rebellion. By involving them in the suspicion of treason, he doubtless intended either to fix them in his interests, or to prevent David from placing confidence in them.

V. 12. Ahiathophel possessed great abilities; and he had professed much religion, and been David's counsellor and bosom-friend: but he was now retired from court, perhaps in some disgust. Bath-sheba was daughter to Eliam, and Eliam was son to Ahiathophel; (xi. 3. xlii. 34.) it has therefore been thought that he was her grandfather, and resented the dishonour done to his family. He, however, readily joined Absalom's conspiracy, and would have been the chief stay of it, had not God "turned his counsel into foolishness." In many things he resembled Judas the traitor, and may even be said to have typified him. (Notes, Ps. xli. 9. lv. 12—15. 21, 22. cix. 2—20. John xiii. 18—30. Acts i. 16—18.)

V. 13—15. It is most probable, that some of the two hundred men, who "went in their simplicity," sent David word concerning the conspiracy; and also represented it as extremely formidable. It must have been expected, that the conspirators would act in the most decided manner: and though Jerusalem was a well-fortified city, yet it might not be stored with provisions for a siege. The small force which David had with him, might be insufficient to defend it against Absalom; and perhaps he had no confidence in the inhabitants, or he was unwilling to expose that populous, and sacred city, to the effects of a siege. He might also deem it prudent to give the furious blaze of popular frenzy time to spend itself, hoping that numbers would soon be sensible of their folly and ingratitude.—It is, probably, however, that conscious guilt, the hand of God evidently lifted up against him as it had been predicted; the treason of his much beloved Absalom; and the fickleness of the people after all his past services, damped his wonted courage, and rendered him less prompt for battle, especially in so horrid and unnatural a war. But it does not appear that his measures were impolitic, or that his friends thought them so.

V. 16. David, it is probable, took his wives and children with him: but supposing that these concubines would be an additional encumbrance, and not apprehending that Absalom would injure them, he left them to take care of his house; by which inadvertency the Lord fulfilled his denunciation. (Notes, xii. 11, 12. xvi. 20—23.)

V. 17. It appears, from the original, that David and all his company went on foot, upon this distressing occasion.

V. 18—22. The six hundred Gittites seem to have been a distinct body from the Cherethites and Pelethites: they had accompanied, or followed, David from Gath, and probably were proselyted Philistines, commanded by Ittai of the same nation. The Cherethites and Pelethites seem likewise to have been collected from among the several districts of the Philistines, or adjacent and allied tribes. (Marg. Ref.) They were, however, numbered among David's most faithful attendants, being attached to him by esteem for his character, and love to his religion; and we may infer, that his sojourning in the land of the Philistines was over-ruled for very important good to numbers of that nation.—David was unwilling to expose Ittai and his men, who were strangers and exiles in Israel, (having been driven with their families from Gath, for their affection to David, and his religion and people,) to so much hardship and peril, as were now before him; and he would have dismissed them with thanks and prayers for them: but their attachment to his person and cause was more strong, than that of most of the native Israelites; and they were determined to cleave to him, and serve him at all events. (Notes, 1 Chr. xii. 17, 18.)—David called Absalom king, as he had usurped the throne, and was at present in possession of regal authority.

V. 23. Kidron. Christ passed this same brook, in his way to the garden, at or near the mount of Olives, the evening before his crucifixion. (Note, John, xviii. 1—3.)—Though the multitude favoured Absalom, yet many sympathized with David. Thus while the general cry against Jesus was, "Crucify him, crucify him," there were those who wept, and bewailed him.

V. 24—29. Abiathar was the high priest: yet Zadok, of the family of Eleazar, was more noticed than he, as more favoured by David; for Eli's family was gradually declining.—The priests and Levites were generally attached to David, which was honourable to them, and shewed that religion was in a flourishing state. The presence of the ark and the high priest would have been a comfort, and an apparent advantage: but the ark had been placed, and the ordinances of God established, in Zion. David was under the Divine rebuke, and would express his humiliation and submission to it; and not assume, by the presence of the ark, that God was on his side, while he was suffering for his sins; (Note, 1 Sam. iv. 3—11.) but he would refer his cause to the Lord, either to bring him back to Zion in peace, or to let his unnatural and ungrateful foes prevail against him; being conscious that he deserved the worst at the hands of God, though not from them. (Marg. Ref.)—David's frame of spirit was excellent on this trying occasion.—It is not certain whether Zadok was endued with the Spirit of prophecy, or whether he sometimes enquired of the Lord in the place of the high priest; or whether David only meant to say, that he was a person of remarkable discernment and penetration, who could furnish him with important and authentic information by his observance of Absalom's conduct, and in whose faithfulness he could entirely depend. He would not therefore go to any great distance, till he heard from Zadok.

V. 30. These were expressions of David's self-abasement, and sorrow for his sins, and for the miseries which he had brought upon himself, his family, and people. He thus "humbled himself under the mighty hand of God," among the conspirators with Absalom. And David said, "O LORD, I pray thee, 'turn the counsel of Ahithophel into foolishness."

32 And it came to pass, that when David was come to 'the top of the mount, where 'he worshipped God, behold 'Hushai the 'Archite came to meet him with his 'coat rent, and earth upon his head:

33 Unto whom David said, If thou passest on with me, 'then thou shalt be a burden unto me:

34 But if thou 'return to the city, and say unto Absalom, I will be thy servant, O king; 'as I have been thy father's servant hitherto, so will I now also be thy servant; 'then mayest thou for me defeat the counsel of Ahithophel.

35 And hast thou not there with thee Zadok and Abiathar the priests? therefore it shall be, that what thing soever thou shalt hear out of the king's house, 'thou shalt tell it to Zadok and Abiathar the priests.

CHAP. XVI.

36 Behold, they have there with them 'their two sons, Ahimaaz Zadok's son, and Jonathan Abiathar's son; and by them ye shall send unto me every thing that ye can hear.

37 So Hushai David's 'friend came into the city, and 'Absalom came into Jerusalem.

Ziba imposes on David, and obtains a grant of Mephibosheth's estate, 1-4. Shimei curses David, who bears it patiently, 5-14. Hushai intimates himself into Absalom's councils, 15-19. By Ahithophel's advice, Absalom openly goes in to his father's concubines, 20-23.

AND when David was a 'little past the top of the hill, behold, 'Ziba the servant of Mephibosheth met him 'with a couple of asses saddled, and upon them two hundred loaves of bread, and an hundred bunches of raisins, and an hundred of 'summer-fruits, and 'a bottle of wine.

2 And the king said unto Ziba, 'What meanest thou by these? And Ziba said, 'The asses he for the king's household to ride on; and the bread and sum-which he saw lifted up against him: and the people joined him with the same tokens of godly sorrow and repentance. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 31. David apprehended more danger from Ahithophel's capacity, than from the courage and numbers of Absalom's followers: immediately therefore, upon hearing that he had joined the conspirators, he addressed the Lord in one short ejaculation; and it proved effectual. He did not pray against Ahithophel's person, put, "that his counsel might be turned into foolishness;" either that he might be left to give foolish counsel, or that his prudent advice might be despised as folly: and all who heard this petition, could not but be much impressed with the answer which it shortly received. (Note, xvii. 1-14. 23.) He afterwards worshipped God in a more solemn manner with his whole company. (32.)

V. 32-37. It seems, that David entirely confided in the fidelity and prudence of Hushai: but, either he was not able to endure the fatigues of war, or he was no soldier. David therefore stated, that in his present destitute condition, Hushai would only burden him and his friends, by attending him; and he pointed out how he might better serve his cause by remaining in Jerusalem.—Stratagems of war are lawful; for an enemy may as well be outwitted as overpowered: but the instructions given to Hushai imply a falsehood, which cannot be wholly vindicated. (Note, Josh. viii. 1, 2.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-12. The ostentation of emulating or exceeding superiors in external pomp, is an evidence of a narrow mind, a weak judgment, and a depraved heart. It is, however, the common folly, and ruin of indulged children, and frequently prepares the way for the most atrocious crimes. The very first appearance, therefore, of this affection should be repressed by parents with decision, and even with severity, if they would prevent the ruin of their families.—They who least understand the duties, and could least endure the burdens of authority, are commonly most desirous of it. But when ambition prompts, the most self-indulgent assume the appearance of diligence; and the most haughty, that of affability and condescension: and while men aspire to the pinnacle of earthly grandeur, they, for the time, pay the most abject court to the meanest of the mob! Such fawning sons of ambition are peculiar to no age or nation: but let every wise and honest man shun them as a pestilence. They make their way by, openly or obliquely, traducing the characters, or censuring the measures, of their rulers; and the wisdom and perfection of an angel would be no security against their malignant insinuations. As self-love cannot but murmur at impartiality, and men are generally discontented and fond of change, these demagogues always have proper persons on whom to practise. By joining in their groundless complaints, they feed their discontent; by flattering their persons and approving their cause, they humour their pride; and by lavish promises, (which cost and mean nothing,) of what they would do if they were in power, they excite their sanguine hopes of greater felicity; and by a voluble tongue, and insinuating address, personal accomplishments, and consummate impudence, they steal the hearts of the people, and prepare the way for popular tumults, insurrections, and rebellion. For such is human nature, that these arts and attainments go much further in gaining the favour of the multitude, than wisdom and justice, truth and piety, or the most important and long-continued services! This is the old hackneyed way for men, destitute of conscience or honour, to wind themselves into important stations; and yet it is as much practised, and as little suspected, as if it were quite a new discovery!—No wise and good man, therefore, should on any account promise himself the continuance of popular favour, or be cast down if he meet with treachery and ingratitude: yet, in general, we may perceive the righteousness of God, in the basest treatment which we can receive from man; and may thence be reminded to humble ourselves before him, and to expect all our happiness from him alone.—No villany can be termed complete, which is not disguised under the mask of religion; especially at those times, when the profession of godliness is treated with general respect. Pious persons are glad to see others, and particularly those whom they most love, appear to be religious, and are not apt to suspect them of hypocrisy: and this gives occasion to the most scandalous and pernicious deceptions.—The policy of wicked men and the subtlety of Satan are exerted to the utmost, in drawing in respectable persons to give an unintended and unsuspected countenance to the basest designs; by which those sentiments and practices acquire a degree of regard, to which otherwise they were not at all entitled: but none so much strengthen the hands of profligates or infidels, as apostates from a religious profession.

V. 13-37. Little dependence can be placed on earthly prosperity; and as little can be judged of causes or characters by success, until the final event of things shall arrive.—Our severest trials often come from those, in whom we most confided; and our firmest friends are sometimes raised up among persons, from whom we had the least expectations. But a truly pious man will never be entirely excluded from usefulness; some, wherever he abides, will have to bless God for his example, converse, and prayers.—In our most critical and important concerns, we should not require any thing unreasonable from our friends; or "bind heavy burdens" on new converts, lest they should be discouraged: we should be thankful for fidelity and kindness from those, who are not likely to be further serviceable to us, and should recompense them with our earnest prayers: and if the mercy and truth of God be with them, and with us and ours, we shall be safe and eventually happy, however at present afflicted or separated. But that love of the brethren, which is the fruit of the Spirit of Christ, when it is vigorous, will not be restrained by the fear of hardship, danger, or even death, from rendering assistance to those in affliction.—We often in despondency think our enemies to be more, and our friends less numerous, than they are found upon trial: for our severest crosses are mingled with comforts, which afford us causes for thankfulness.—The ministers of God should always set an example of submission to "the powers that be," in all things lawful; and of cordial attachment and faithful adherence to those rulers, who protect and countenance them in their pious labours; and especially in those seasons, when others oppose and revile them.—It behoves us to humble ourselves before God under the tokens of his displeasure; and godly sorrow, confession of sin, repentance, self-denial, and self-abasement, are the proper methods of seeking deliverance out of those troubles, which are evidently chastisements for sins. (Note, Is. xxii. 8-14.) At such a time, therefore, it is improper to buoy up our confidence, by the externals of religion, which do not always imply the gracious presence of the Lord. If he pardon our sins, and then again employ us, his house and ordinances will be our comfort: and he will do us no wrong, though he throw us by, or cut us off by death, as though he had no delight in us. Nothing, however, must prevent our worshipping the Lord, though we have not access to his more solemn ordinances: and as afflictions abound, the fervency of our prayers should also increase.—Vain is all worldly wisdom and power against "the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man," as, in answer to a single emphatical ejaculation, "the counsel of the prudent is carried headlong," and the force of the potent is turned into perfect weakness.—Some are useful in one way, and some in another, to one common cause, when they are cordially united: yet, alas! where shall we find wisdom and simplicity so united in any mere man, that we can perceive nothing which merits censure, and needs forgiveness? But when the Son of David was treated with all possible treachery, indignity, cruelty, and ingratitude; his wisdom, meekness, candour, and patience were unalloyed perfection. His inexpressible sufferings are now over: his humiliation is exchanged for the throne of glory, where unseen he serves our cause in the world above. Let us follow, cleave to, and serve him, in tribulation, life, and death. And let us not forget, that we are left behind among his enemies, to promote his cause; and his instruction is, that we be "wise as serpents, and harmless as doves." (Note, Matt. x. 16-18.)

NOTES.

CHAP. XVI. V. 1-4. (Notes, ix.) Ziba took advantage of existing circumstances, artfully to form a plan for obtaining a grant from David of Mephibosheth's estate. By his seasonable, and apparently generous, present, and in his insinuating behaviour, he prepossessed David's mind in his favour: (Notes, Prov. xvii. 8. xviii. 16.) and then by false accusation he prejudiced him against Mephibosheth. It was indeed improbable, that Mephibosheth should prove so ungrateful, or form expectations of obtaining the kingdom: but what villany could excite wonder, when Absalom was in arms against his own too indulgent father? And Ziba might hope that some event would secure him from detection, or that David would be ashamed to retract his grant, when he had once made it. (Note, xix. 24-30.)—It is evident, however, that David acted precipitately, did great injustice to Mephibosheth, and even forgot his covenant with Jonathan, in passing sentence without hearing Mephibosheth's defence. (Note, 1 Sam. xx. 14-16.)

12 It may be that ^athe LORD will look on mine affliction, and that the LORD will ^brequite me good for his cursing this day.

13 And as David and his men went by the way, Shimei went along on the hill's side over against him, and ^ccursed as he went, and threw stones at him, and ^dcast dust.

14 And the king, and all the people that ^ewere with him, came weary, and refreshed themselves ^fthere.

15 ¶ And ^gAbsalom, and all the people the men of Israel, came to Jerusalem, and Ahiathophel with him.

16 And it came to pass, when Hushai the Archite, David's friend, was come unto Absalom, that Hushai said unto Absalom, ^hGod save the king, God save the king.

17 And Absalom said to Hushai, ⁱIs this thy kindness to thy friend? ^jWhy wentest thou not with thy friend?

18 And Hushai said unto Absalom, Nay, but ^kwhom the LORD, and this people, and all the men of Israel choose, his will I be, and with him will I abide.

19 And again, Whom should I serve? ^lShould I not serve in the presence of his son? As I have served in thy father's presence, so will I be in thy presence.

20 ¶ Then said Absalom to Ahiathophel, ^mGive counsel among you what we shall do.

21 And Ahiathophel said unto Absalom, ⁿGo in ^ounto thy father's concubines, which he hath left to keep the house; and all Israel shall hear that thou art ^pabhorred of ^qthy father; ^rthen shall ^sthe hands of all that ^tare with thee be strong.

22 So they spread Absalom a tent upon ^uthe top of the house: and Absalom went in unto his father's concubines ^vin the sight of all Israel.

23 And the counsel of Ahiathophel, which he counselled in those days, ^wwas ^xas if a man had enquired at the ^yoracle of God: so ^zwas ^aall the counsel of Ahiathophel ^bboth with David and with Absalom.

V. 5—14. Bahurim was a city of Benjamin; and Shimei was a relation of Saul; so that the translation of the kingdom to David marred all his prospects of preferment. He disregarded the express appointment of God, and his heart was full of implacable enmity to David, as an usurper of the throne. Contrary to the fullest evidence, he accused him of murdering Saul's family, and interpreted his affliction into a proof of his guilt; and he took this opportunity to vent all kinds of imprecations and reproaches, and to express all the rage of impotent contempt and malice. But if David had been a bloody man, and disposed to slay the family of Saul, Shimei would soon have suffered the just punishment of his audacity; for David was so well guarded, that Shimei could only shew his malice at a distance: and David's prohibition alone prevented Abishai from putting him to death. This, Shimei merited: but David was now under the Divine rebuke for his sins. Though free from the guilt charged upon him, he was consciously guilty of murdering Uriah: he therefore submitted to the justice of God, in this injurious treatment from Shimei; and he could not wonder that his enemies were stirred up against him, when his own son sought his life. The sin both of Shimei and of Absalom was from themselves and Satan: but David's affliction was from the Lord; and they were but instruments, which he employed, beside their purpose, of correcting David for good. (Notes, Gen. i. 20. Is. x. 7, 15. Ez. xiv. 9—11. Acts ii. 22—24.) The curse causeless could only injure him who used it: and David hoped that his humble submission, to such base usage from man, would prepare the way for the return of peace and comfort from a merciful God; and therefore he would not permit Shimei to be molested. (Marg. Ref. Notes, xix. 19—23. 1 Kings ii. 8, 9. 36—46.)

V. 15—19. Though Absalom interpreted Hushai's words as a promise of fidelity, and a tender of his services, they did not necessarily imply this. He said, "Let the king live," not Let king Absalom live. And when Absalom expressed his surprise, that he thus forsook his friend; he declared his resolution to accompany, and devote himself to him whom the Lord and whom Israel chose; but the event soon proved that this was not Absalom, however it appeared for a time. "He would also serve in the presence of the son, as in the presence of the father." But whom would he serve? He would serve David in Absalom's presence, as faithfully as he had hitherto done. (Note, Gen. iii. 4, 5.)—If Absalom had not been blinded with pride and popularity, he would have suspected such ambiguous words, when used by the known friend of his father; and not have admitted him at once among his confidential counsellors.—It is very hard to conduct stratagems without such equivocations, if not direct falsehoods: and therefore it is best to keep at a distance from them if it be possible.—When Absalom said, "Is this," &c. Hushai might have answered, "Is this thy duty to thy father and king?"

V. 20—23. (Note, xv. 12.) Ahiathophel's counsel was considered as "the oracle of God," because of his great sagacity: and at one time his professions of piety seem to have been equally depended on. He did not, however, shew his wisdom in joining himself to a vile faction, headed by a rash young man of consummate villany, which foreboded nothing but ruin. But his confidence in his own wisdom made him presume that he could render Absalom successful; and his mind seems to have been much embittered against David. His first counsel to Absalom, after his peaceable entrance into Jerusalem, was like an oracle of Satan, both for subtlety, and atrocity. For his own security, and that of the whole party, he intended to preclude all hope of reconciliation with David, that Absalom might determine to conquer, or to perish: and he put him on an act of shameless wickedness, which indeed was well suited effectually to ensure the purpose. By Ahiathophel's advice, Absalom, without expressing the least reluctance, and in defiance of the law of God, and even of common decency, in the most public manner, lay with his father's concubines; thus inflicting on him the correction that had been denounced. (Note, xii. 11, 12.) It may be supposed that he meant to act as king, having dethroned and succeeded David: but had he been the rightful king, it would not in the least have excused his incest.—It is surprising, that this atrocious crime did not set the people against him.—So many concubines besides his wives, were by no means honourable to David: and probably none of them expressed a proper degree of abhorrence of so gross an enormity. (Note, xv. 16. xx. 3.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—14. Selfish men often appear very generous in giving away the property of others for their own advantage, and are great adepts in address and insinuation. Flatterers are generally backbiters; for it is as easy to them to forge slanders of the absent, as to pretend affection and respect for the present: and those servants, who purloin their masters' substance, commonly blacken their reputations.—Both adulation and calumny are injurious to a great degree but the former is the most hurtful; for to be tempted to sin is more injurious than to be robbed of our riches, or even of our characters: and smooth speeches and well-timed presents often seduce even the wise and righteous into improper measures.—When much treachery and ingratitude have been experienced, men are apt to become too suspicious, and to listen to every plausible tale of calumny: the mind being greatly agitated, views every thing through a false medium, and we are naturally most precipitate when least capable of judging 12 So shall we come upon him ^{ao}in some place where he shall be found, and ^{ap}we will light upon him as the dew falleth on the ground: and of him, and of all the men that ^{aq}are with him, there shall not be left so much as one.

aright. But while the dissimulation of false friends occasions sin; the rage, malice, and contumely of cruel enemies call forth the exercises of the believer's graces, and often prove advantageous to him.—Wicked men judge of right or wrong by self-interest: and count themselves robbed of every expected advantage which goes besides them. It gratifies malevolence to insult the afflicted, and to vent imprecations and reproaches: and they, who think nothing of the authority, providence, or word of God in other respects, are often very ready to interpret the afflictions of their neighbours as divine judgments, in opposition to the clearest evidence. But it is good to see the hand of God directing, though not dictating the injuries of men. Their calamities may recall to memory some evil, or appearance of evil, which requires humiliation, watchfulness, and prayer: we deserve worse from the Lord than their most cruel and contemptuous treatment, and should consider it as his correction: and if we bear it humbly, patiently, and meekly, for his sake, he will graciously requite us with inward peace and consolation.—Seasons of peculiar humiliation before God, require peculiar low-suffering towards men: private revenge must never be indulged; and on such occasions it behoves us to be very reluctant in seeking the execution of public justice on those offenders who have injured us alone: for even the Judge of the world, in his humiliation for our sins, bore with, and prayed for, those who reviled and crucified him: yet he will at length execute vengeance on all the impenitent and unbelieving.—A deep sense of personal guilt will soften the spirit towards others, and dispose a man to be indignant and severe against himself; and the most zealous friends must be disregarded, when they counsel what is evidently wrong.

V. 15—23. Men, who admire themselves, will be easily deceived by those who profess an attachment to them: yet they readily discern those faults in others, of which themselves are far more notoriously guilty; and are apt to express astonishment at them.—If a zealous disciple of Christ commit evident wickedness, even profligates will exclaim, “Is this thy kindness to thy friend?” But, alas, how often might the Saviour himself address each of us in these words, to our shame and confusion! And how often should we thus check ourselves, and remember our ingratitude, to our deeper humiliation!—Destruction is before those, who hearken to deceitful and wicked counsellors: yet many young people, especially in high life, will not regard any other.—How desperately wicked is the human heart, that can conceive, execute, and glory in those deeds of darkness, which it is shocking to think of, and shameful to mention! yet all this might be seduced from our hearts by successive temptations, if Satan and his agents were permitted to practise upon us!—When great abilities and daring wickedness unite in one character, they form the express image of the devil; and, like that arch-apostate and rebel, men of this description will spare no pains to push others forward into such kinds and degrees of guilt, as may drive them desperate, and extinguish all thoughts of reconciliation unto God.

But this wisdom will shortly appear the most wretched and contemptible folly, which perverts the noble powers of an angel, to increase and propagate guilt, condemnation, and eternal misery.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVII. V. 1—4. Ahithophel was fully aware, that delay must ruin the cause; and he therefore proposed to assault David, while he and his men were weary and dispirited, and unprepared for battle. Thus he thought that he might easily be smitten alone; and that this would effectually answer Absalom's purpose, and bring over the people to a quiet submission to his authority. The desperate wickedness of the proposal excited no opposition, either from Absalom or from the people; and doubtless it was the most politic measure, which could possibly have been adopted in such circumstances.

V. 7—14. It is evident, that Hushai aimed to gain time for David to remove to a greater distance, and to increase and encourage his army: and if he had put Absalom off from executing Ahithophel's counsel only for one night, it might have proved of essential service, especially as he would be able to give David intelligence of his danger. In pursuing this object, he opposed Ahithophel's proposal with consummate address: and with some specious arguments, taken from David's character for valour and military skill; from the courage and indignation of his followers; and from the probability that David would, by some stratagem of war, in which he was well versed, surprise and overcome his assailants, if they were not very numerous, and so discourage the whole party; he argued that Ahithophel's counsel was not good at that time. But the measures, which he proposed in lieu of it, were addressed to the vain glory, the ambition, and perhaps the revenge of Absalom and of his followers. (Note, xv. 1—6.) To raise a vast army, which Absalom, being the universal favourite, might easily accomplish; to command it himself, that the honour might be all his own; to carry matters with a high hand, to make sure work, and to destroy David and all his party: this was a more pompous scheme, and more suited to a man of Absalom's capacity and disposition, and to an unreflecting multitude, than the sagacious counsel of Ahithophel. Hushai doubtless framed his speech, not to meet the approbation of the wise, but to please the humour of the many: and it pleased God so to infatuate Absalom and all his party, that it met with general approbation.—Ahithophel's former counsel was followed, for God intended to correct David; but his latter was not, for he did not mean to destroy him, but Absalom. Thus God answered David's prayer, and turned the good, that is, the politic, counsel of Ahithophel into foolishness. (Notes, xv. 31, xvi. 5—14.)

V. 15, 16. Hushai feared lest Absalom should be persuaded by Ahithophel to change his mind; and he was satisfied that he was determined to murder David, if possible, and without delay: he therefore sent him intelligence, and counselled him to provide immediately for his safety.

19 And the woman took and 'spread a covering over the well's mouth, and spread ground corn thereon; and the thing was not known.

20 And when Absalom's servants came to the woman to the house, they said, Where is Ahimaaz and Jonathan? And the woman said unto them, 'They be gone over the brook of water. And 'when they had sought, and could not find them, they returned to Jerusalem.

21 And it came to pass after they were departed, that they came up out of the well, and went and told king David, and said unto David, 'Arise, and pass quickly over the water; for 'thus hath Ahithophel counselled against you.

22 Then David arose, and all the people that were with him, 'and they passed over Jordan: by the morning light 'there lacked not one of them that was not gone over Jordan.

23 ¶ And when Ahithophel 'saw that his counsel was not 'followed, he saddled his ass, and arose, and gat him home to his house, to 'his city, and 'put his household in order, 'and hanged himself, and died, and was buried in the sepulchre of his father.

24 Then David came to 'Mahanaim: and Absalom passed over Jordan, he and all the men of Israel with him.

25 ¶ And Absalom made 'Amasa captain of the host instead of Joab: which Amasa was a man's son whose name was 'Ithra, an Israelite, that went in to 'Abigail, the daughter of 'Nahash, sister to Zeruiah, Joab's mother.

26 So Israel and Absalom pitched in the 'land of Gilead.

27 ¶ And it came to pass, when David was come to Mahanaim, that Shobi 'the son of Nahash, of Rabbah of the children of Ammon, and 'Machir the son of

6 ¶ So the people went out into the field against Israel: and the battle was in the wood of Ephraim;

7 Where the people of Israel were slain before the servants of David; and there was there a great slaughter that day of twenty thousand men.

8 For the battle was there scattered over the face of all the country: and the wood devoured more people that day than the sword devoured.

9 ¶ And Absalom met the servants of David: and Absalom rode upon a mule, and the mule went under the thick boughs of a great oak, and his head caught hold of the oak, and he was taken up between the heaven and the earth; and the mule that was under him went away.

10 And a certain man saw it, and told Joab, and said, Behold, I saw Absalom hanged in an oak.

11 And Joab said unto the man that told him, And, behold, thou sawest him; and why didst thou not smite him there to the ground, and I would have given thee ten shekels of silver, and a girdle?

12 And the man said unto Joab, Though I should receive a thousand shekels of silver in mine hand, yet would I not put forth mine hand against the king's son: for in our hearing the king charged thee, and Abishai, and Ittai, saying, Beware that none touch the young man Absalom.

13 Otherwise I should have wrought falsehood against mine own life: for there is no matter hid from the king, and thou thyself wouldest have set thyself against me.

14 Then said Joab, I may not tarry thus with thee. And he took three darts in his hand, and thrust them through the heart of Absalom, while he was yet alive in the midst of the oak.

15 And ten young men that bare Joab's armour compassed about, and smote Absalom, and slew him.

16 And Joab blew the trumpet, and the people returned from pursuing after Israel: for Joab held back the people.

17 And they took Absalom, and cast him into a great pit in the wood, and laid a very great heap of stones upon him: and all Israel fled every one to his tent.

18 ¶ Now Absalom in his life-time had taken and reared up for himself a pillar, which is in the king's dale: for he said, I have no son to keep my name in remembrance; and he called the pillar after his own name: and it is called unto this day Absalom's place.

19 ¶ Then said Ahimaaz the son of Zadok, Let me now run and bear the king tidings, how that the LORD hath avenged him of his enemies.

20 And Joab said unto him, Thou shalt not bear tidings this day, but thou shalt bear tidings another day; but this day thou shalt bear no tidings, because the king's son is dead.

21 Then said Joab to Cushi, Go tell the king what thou hast seen. And Cushi bowed himself unto Joab, and ran.

22 Then said Ahimaaz the son of Zadok yet again to Joab, But howsoever, let me, I pray thee, also run after Cushi. And Joab said, Wherefore wilt thou run, my son, seeing that thou hast no tidings ready?

23 But howsoever, said he, let me run. And he said unto him, Run. Then Ahimaaz ran by the way of the plain, and overran Cushi.

24 And David sat between the two gates: and the watchman went up to the roof over the gate unto the wall, and lifted up his eyes, and looked, and behold a man running alone.

25 And the watchman cried, and told the king. And the king said, If he be alone, there is tidings in his mouth. And he came apace, and drew near.

26 And the watchman saw another man running, and the watchman called unto the porter, and said, Behold, another man running alone. And the king said, He also bringeth tidings.

27 And the watchman said, Methinketh the running of the foremost is like the running of Ahimaaz the son of Zadok. And the king, said, He is a good man, and cometh with good tidings.

28 And Ahimaaz called, and said unto the king, All is well. And he fell down to the earth upon his face before the king, and said, Blessed be the LORD thy God, which hath delivered up the men that lifted up their hand against my lord the king.

29 And the king said, Is the young man Absalom safe? And Ahimaaz answered, When Joab sent the king's servant, and me thy servant, I saw a great tumult, but I knew not what it was.

30 And the king said unto him, Turn aside, and stand here. And he turned aside, and stood still.

31 And, behold, Cushi came: and Cushi said, Tidings, my lord the king: for the LORD hath avenged thee this day of all them that rose up against thee.

32 And the king said unto Cushi, Is the young man Absalom safe? And Cushi answered, The enemies of my lord the king, and all that rise against thee to do thee hurt, be as that young man is.

live to repent, and so escape future vengeance. But if he had been spared, he would probably have occasioned David further trouble and sin: and it pleased God to preserve his servant from the guilt of pardoning, and from the anguish of punishing, him.—David seems not to have doubted of the victory, after his prayer against Abithophel had been so remarkably answered.

V. 6. The wood of Ephraim was beyond Jordan, and it is supposed to be the place where the Ephraimites had been slain in the days of Jephthah. (Judg. xii. 4-6.)

V. 8. The wood, &c. More were slain in the pursuit through the wood, than in the battle. It is, also, probable, that numbers perished by pressing on one another in the thickets, or were devoured by wild beasts. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 9. Either Absalom's hair, which he had effeminately tended, was so entangled in the boughs of the oak that he could not extricate himself, (Note, xiv. 25-27;) or his head itself was confined betwixt two arms of the tree, through the rapidity and inattention with which he rode. In this dreadful situation he remained for a considerable time, doubtless with unspeakable horror, expecting his doom without being able in the least to help himself. His fate was as extraordinary as his crimes; and being providentially hanged on a tree, he was as it were pronounced accursed by God himself. (Note, xvii. 23. Marg. Ref.)

V. 13. Wrought, &c. The man meant, that he should have cheated himself, and by seeking a reward have forfeited his life. His words were replete with truth, good sense, and sound argument; and Joab was conscious that they did not admit of an answer.

V. 14. Joab doubtless intended the interest of both David and his kingdom in despatching Absalom; and his death was of salutary tendency, and even necessary: yet Joab cannot be excused in acting against the express command of his sovereign. He had no warrant from God or man to execute vengeance on Absalom: and, having deserved death himself, he was the last person who should have complained of the obstruction of public justice.

V. 17, 18. It seems that Absalom's sons died young, (as a just judgment upon him for seeking the life of his father, (xiv. 27;) and that, after their death, he erected some magnificent building, in or near which he meant to be interred; and by which he hoped to perpetuate his memory, with honour, to future generations. (Notes, Gen. xi. 3, 4. Ps. xlix. 11. Dan. iv. 28-33.) But, on the contrary, he was buried with ignominy as a malefactor: (Notes, Josh. vii. 25, 26. viii. 29.—ix. 26, 27. Prov. x. 7;) and his pillar proved a monument of his folly and wicked ambition.

V. 22. No tidings ready. That is, no convenient tidings. Joab was sensible that David would bitterly lament the death of Absalom, and was not willing to send so respectable a person as Ahimaaz with unwelcome tidings; (27;) but appointed for that service a man, whose name intimates that he was an Ethiopian, and perhaps a slave: he was, however cordially attached to the interests of David.

V. 28-32. Perhaps one motive which induced Ahimaaz to desire to carry David the first news of the victory, was, that he might gradually prepare his mind for the intelligence of Absalom's death: for, though he rejoiced in David's deliverance, he sympathized with him in his grief; and for this purpose 33 ¶ And the king was much moved, and went up to the chamber over the gate, and wept: and as he went, thus he said, 'O my son Absalom! my son, my son Absalom! 'Would God I had died for thee, O Absalom, my son, my son!

CHAP. XIX.

Joab, by rude expostulations, induces David to restrain his grief, 1—8. The men of Israel dispute about bringing back David; who sends to the priests to incite the men of Judah, and they readily comply, 9—15. Shimei submitting is pardoned, 16—23. Mephibosheth meets David; complains that Ziba had deceived and slandered him; and has half his land restored, 24—30. Barzillai attends David over Jordan, and his son is taken into the king's family, 31—40. The Israelites expostulate with the men of Judah, for bringing back the king without them, 41—45.

AND 'it was told Joab, Behold, the king weepeth and mourneth for Absalom.

2 And the *victory that day was ^bturned into mourning unto all the people: for the people heard say that day, how the king was grieved for his son.

3 And the people gat them by stealth that day 'into the city, as people being ashamed ^dsteal away when they flee in battle.

4 But the king ^ccovered his face, and the king cried with a loud voice, 'O my son Absalom! O Absalom, my son, my son!

5 And Joab came into the house to the king, and said, Thou hast shamed this day the faces of all thy servants, which this day have ^esaved thy life, and the lives of thy sons, and of thy daughters, and the lives of thy wives, and the lives of thy concubines;

6 'In that thou lovest thine enemies, and hatest thy friends: for thou hast declared this day, that ^fthou regardest neither princes nor servants: for this day

I perceive, that if Absalom had lived, and all we had died this day, ^hthen it had pleased thee well.

7 Now therefore arise, go forth, and speak ⁱcomfortably unto thy servants: for I swear by the LORD, if thou go not forth, ⁱthere will not tarry one with thee this night; and that will be worse unto thee than ^jall the evil that befell thee from thy youth until now.

8 Then the king arose, and ^ksat in the gate. And they told unto all the people, saying, Behold, the king doth sit in the gate. And all the people came before the king; ^lfor Israel had fled every man to his tent.

9 ¶ And all the people were at ^mstrife throughout all the tribes of Israel, saying, "The king saved us out of the hand of our enemies, and he delivered us out of the hand of the Philistines, and now ⁿhe is fled out of the land for Absalom.

10 And Absalom, ^owhom we anointed over us, ^ois dead in battle: now therefore why ^pspeak ye not a word of bringing the king back?

11 ¶ And king David ^qsent to Zadok and to Abiathar the priests, saying, "Speak unto the elders of Judah, saying, 'Why are ye the last to bring the king back to his house? seeing the speech of all Israel is come to the king, ^reven to his house.

12 Ye ^sare my brethren, ye ^sare ^smy bones and my flesh; wherefore then are ye the last to bring back the king?

13 And say ye to ^tAmasa, Art thou not of my bone, and of my flesh? ^tGod do so to me, and more also, if thou be not captain of the host before me continually in the ^uroom of Joab.

he evaded the king's question, which Cushi soon after indirectly, but more plainly, replied to.—The piety of the language both of Ahimaaz and Cushi on this occasion are worthy of notice and imitation.

V. 33. David's grief was doubtless extravagant, and very faulty. He ought to have been thankful for his own deliverance and for that of Israel; and to have submitted with silent patience to the righteous judgment of God upon his son. (Notes, Lev. x. 3. 1 Sam. iii. 16—18. Ps. xxxix. 9, 10.) But he was a man of warm passions: he had inordinately loved a very unworthy object, who was cut off in the midst of his crimes: he could not but think of the state of his immortal soul; he was conscious that, when his own forfeited life was spared, after his adultery and murder, this burden had been laid upon his family; he considered himself, by his transgression, example, and the chastisement of God, as accessory to the dire catastrophe; and in the vehemency of his grief he wished, that he had died himself rather than his son, probably, as being better prepared for the eternal world; while the agitation of his mind prevented him from advertent to the fatal effects of such an event to his kingdom, and to that cause which in his calmer hours was nearest to his heart.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—18. The peculiar exercises of religion ought to precede, but not to exclude, the use of every prudent means of securing success in lawful undertakings: and they who would engage others in arduous and perilous attempts, must be willing to take a full share of the hardship and danger. But in some cases the life of an individual is of such importance to the public welfare, that thousands are authorized to require it of him, as a duty, to take the utmost care of himself. It is well when such affection and fidelity subsist betwixt princes and their subjects; and when they are mutually willing to venture, or to suffer, for each other's benefit. Thus Jesus loved his people, and laid down his life for them: and thus they consider his cause as dearer to them than every personal interest, and are prepared to lay down their lives for his sake.—True courage and firmness of mind are very different from rashness and obstinacy; and wise men are always most ready to listen to prudent counsel, even from their inferiors.—The extremes of our most amiable propensities are often of fatal consequence: and it is merciful for God to deny us those things which we greatly desire, when he sees they would prove our temptation or affliction.—Multitudes suffer through the wickedness of one, but for their own crimes: and rebellion against good and lawful governors is generally and justly punished with the ruin of those concerned in it. Yet the seducers into the ways of sin must be answerable to God for the consequences; and who can number the murders, for which many ambitious usurpers will stand indicted before his righteous tribunal!—At all times "evil pursueth sinners;" and when in the appointed hour it overtaketh them, they cannot possibly escape; but those things on which they have most depended, and of which they have been most proud, often prove the occasion or instruments of their destruction.—Let young people look on Absalom, suspended upon the tree, accursed and forsaken of heaven and earth; and there read the Lord's abhorrence of rebellion against parents: let them consider the agony of his death and the ignominy of his burial, and learn how empty are all external embellishments; and how vain the flattery of man, and all that care, which is employed in rendering themselves admired and renowned. After all, "the memory of the wicked shall rot;" and nothing can preserve us from misery and contempt, but heavenly grace and wisdom.—They who are greedy of gain, often work falsehood against their own lives or souls; and many will rejoice in the effects of wickedness, who will be the first to inform against those who have committed it, in order to exculpate themselves; but our safety lies in obeying the Lord and the lawful commands of our rulers.—The removal of one ringleader in daring crimes proves a public benefit, and makes way for the exercise of clemency to numbers: but that will not authorize every individual to take away the life of the most notorious offender; for it is not enough that the thing ought to be done, but we are to consider whether it be a service allotted to us by our great Master.

V. 19—33. Every deliverance should be received with praise and thanksgiving: and good men delight in bearing glad tidings to those whom they love. May all, who proclaim the glad tidings of salvation to sinners, be men of holy lives, and unblemished reputation! and may numbers more be sent forth with this joyful message.—All other good tidings have so much alloy, that our joy on account of them must be mingled with weeping, or with trembling: and, alas! we are more disposed to complain of the trouble which allays our mercies, than to be thankful for the mercies themselves. But whilst we learn from the example before us, to watch and pray against partial and excessive attachments, the indulgence or neglect of our children, and the unadvised language and passionate wishes of excessive grief; whilst we learn to bow down to the righteous appointments of God in our sharpest trials; to adore his unmerited mercy in our comforts and deliverances; and to prefer the public welfare to any personal or private affections: may we not in David perceive a shadow of the Saviour's love, who wept, prayed, and suffered death in all its bitterness, for us vile rebels and enemies, without even excepting those who persecuted and crucified him; and hence learn "not to be overcome of evil, but to overcome evil with good?"

NOTES.

CHAP. XIX. V. 1—8. (Note, xviii. 33.) David's conduct on this occasion was exceedingly impolitic, and tended to weaken the attachment and damp the zeal of his adherents; who would interpret his excessive grief, so passionately expressed, into an indifference about their interests, and dissatisfaction with their services. For instead of being led to celebrate their important success with joyful exultations, and meeting the animating hearty commendations of their prince, whom they had bravely and faithfully served, they were sent away grieved and ashamed. Joab had therefore good reason to interpose, and would have been justifiable in a very plain remonstrance with David on the impropriety of his conduct: but the asperity, the reproaches, and the threat of a general defection, which his language plainly implied, must be ascribed to his pride and insolence; for he gloried in disobeying and being rude to his prince. (Note, iii. 24, 25. xviii. 14. xx. 8—13.) David, however, being conscious that Joab had truth and reason on his side, smothered his resentment, and very prudently obviated the disgust of the people.

V. 9—15. David would not appear to reign by force of arms: and therefore he waited till he was publicly invited to resume the reins of government. From the time that he began to reign in Hebron over the tribe of Judah only, the distinction between Judah and Israel began to be observed. (Notes, ii. 4. v. 1—3.) The men of Israel were first disposed to return to their allegiance, 14 And he bowed the heart of all the men of Judah, even as the heart of one man; so that they sent this word unto the king, Return thou, and all thy servants.

15 So the king returned, and came to Jordan. And Judah came to ^bGilgal to go to meet the king, to conduct the king over Jordan.

16 ¶ And ^cShimei the son of Gera, a Benjamite, which was of Bahurim, ^dhasted and came down with the men of Judah to meet king David.

17 And there were a thousand men of Benjamin with him, and ^eZiba the servant of the house of Saul, and his fifteen sons and his twenty servants with him; and they went over Jordan before the king.

18 And there went over a ferry-boat to carry over the king's household, and to do what he thought good. And Shimei the son of Gera ^ffell down before the king, as he was come over Jordan;

19 And ^ghe said unto the king, ^hLet not my lord impute iniquity unto me, neither do thou remember that which thy servant ⁱdid perversely, the day that my lord the king went out of Jerusalem, that the king should ^jtake it to his heart.

20 For thy servant doth know that I have sinned; therefore, behold, ^k"I am come the first this day of all the house of ^lJoseph, to go down to meet my lord the king.

21 But Abishai the son of Zeruiah answered and said, ^m"Shall not Shimei be put to death for this, because he ⁿcursed the LORD's anointed?

22 And David said, ^o"What have I to do with you, ye sons of Zeruiah, that ye should this day be adversaries unto me? ^p"Shall there any man be put to death this day in Israel? for do not I know that I am this day king over Israel?

23 Therefore the king said unto Shimei, ^q"Thou shalt not die: and the king ^rswore unto him.

24 ¶ And ^sMephibosheth the son of Saul came down to meet the king; and had neither ^tdressed his feet, nor trimmed his beard, nor washed his clothes, from the day the king departed until the day he came again in peace.

25 And it came to pass, when he was come to Jerusalem to meet the king, that the king said unto him, ^u"Wherefore wentest not thou with me, Mephibosheth?

26 And he answered, My lord, O king, my servant

31 ¶ And ^lBarzillai the Gileadite came down from Rogelim, and went over Jordan with the king, to conduct him over Jordan.

32 Now Barzillai was a very aged man, even ^mfour-score years old: and he had ⁿprovided the king of sustenance while he lay at Mahanaim; ^ofor he was a very great man.

33 And the king said unto Barzillai, ^p"Come thou over with me, and I will feed thee with me in Jerusalem.

and they spoke honourably of David's former services, but either fear, or shame, or want of unanimity, deterred them from publicly inviting him to return: and they seem also to have disputed to whom the blame of the late rebellion belonged; each endeavouring to excuse himself.—When therefore the report of these things reached the king, he probably thought it would be dishonourable to his own tribe, if they were the last in this service; or perhaps they were so deeply involved in Absalom's rebellion, that they feared David's resentment, if reinstated in his authority. He therefore employed Zadok and Abiathar, to assure the principal persons of his affection, and to excite them to appear in this business; by which means they took the lead in such a manner, as induced the men of Israel to conclude, that they meant to engross the credit of recalling David, and exclusively to secure his favour. (Note, 40—43.) But it would have been better, if they had consulted with their brethren, and thus acted in concert, as this would have prevented many bad consequences.—David also was very uneasy under Joab's haughtiness, and was exceedingly displeased with him for slaying Absalom, and for his subsequent rudeness; and he wished to lay him aside. (Note, 1—8.) He supposed likewise, that if Amasa were assured of pardon and preferment, he would draw over all that party into his interests. But Amasa, having headed so daring a rebellion, was not a proper person to supplant Joab, whose influence with the army, and with David's best friends, was too great to be thus shaken; and he was sure not to submit quietly to such a disgrace. David therefore does not seem to have acted with prudence on this emergency.

V. 18. Ferry-boat. This is the only place, in which a boat for passing over a river is mentioned. Bridges are not once mentioned in Scripture. Rivers were generally fording at this time.

V. 19—23. Next to the tribe of Judah, the descendants of Joseph had the pre-eminence; and Israel, as distinguished from Judah, was named from them. Shimei therefore, though a Benjamite, ranked himself among the sons of Joseph, or the Israelites; and intimated, that none except the men of Judah had come to David so soon as he had. Perhaps he meant, that he had come before any of the house of Joseph.—Shimei confessed his crime, and seemed penitent: and David granted him a pardon, and swore to him that he should not die, at that time, or for that offence. (Notes, xvi. 5—15. 1 Kings ii. 8, 9. 36—46.) Abishai, however, would have had him made an example of, as indeed he well deserved: but David intimated, that he and Joab were always instigating him to acts of severity; it would be injurious to his interests, as well as contrary to his inclinations, to sully his restoration with the execution of a single criminal; and there was no occasion, for all were disposed peaceably to submit to him.

V. 24—30. Mephibosheth did not come to David till his return to Jerusalem, probably because he could not procure an ass to ride on. From the time of the king's departure, he had utterly neglected the care of his person, and shewn every token of excessive sorrow. To David's enquiry, Why he had not accompanied him? he answered by a simple narration of facts, united with the most respectful, affectionate, thankful, and submissive language. He owed all he possessed to David's clemency and bounty; he did not complain of the grant made to Ziba; and he was confident that the king would do nothing but what was consistent with wisdom and justice.—But whether David did not fully credit him, or whether he was ashamed of his credulity, and wished not to have it further noticed; he suffered Ziba to escape merited punishment, and to enjoy part of the fruits of his slander: or at least he contented himself restoring matters to their former settlement. (Marg. Ref.) Mephibosheth, however, so greatly rejoiced in David's safety and success, that he generously treated the affair concerning his own estate as a matter of indifference. (Notes, Phil. i. 15—20.)

V. 31—39. The narrative of the conversation which passed between David and Barzillai, and their affectionate parting, is exceedingly pleasing and instructive: but it requires little comment. Barzillai had merely done his duty; he required no recompense; and he was too old either to enjoy the pleasures 38 And the king answered, Chimham shall go over with me, and I will do to him that which shall seem good unto thee: and whatsoever thou shalt require of me, that will I do for thee.

39 And all the people went over Jordan. And when the king was come over, the king kissed Barzillai, and blessed him; and he returned unto his own place.

40 Then the king went on to Gilgal, and Chimham went on with him: and all the people of Judah conducted the king, and also half the people of Israel.

41 ¶ And, behold, all the men of Israel came to the king, and said unto the king, "Why have our brethren the men of Judah stolen thee away, and have brought the king, and his household, and all David's men with him, over Jordan?"

42 And all the men of Judah answered the men of Israel, "Because the king is near of kin to us: wherefore then be ye angry for this matter? have we eaten at all of the king's cost? or hath he given us any gift?"

of the court, or to be of any further use to his king. (Note, Ex. xii. 2—7.) He only desired to go home to prepare for death; but the case might be different in respect of his son.—It is probable that David settled part of his patrimony at Bethlehem on Chimham. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 40—43. By the time that David had passed over Jordan, part of the elders of Israel came to bring him back, and were disgusted at finding that they came too late; and that the business was settled, though their advice had not been asked. They thought themselves despised, and that the men of Judah took too much upon them: while the plea of relationship to David, urged by the men of Judah, tended only to increase suspicion and envy; and the fiercer words which they returned to the angry remonstrance of their brethren, produced very bad effects. (Notes, Judg. viii. 1—3. xii. 1—7. Prov. xiii. 10. xvii. 14. xviii. 19. 1 Cor. xiii. 4—7. Gal. v. 12—13. Phil. ii. 1—4. Jam. iii. 13—18.) Whatever value or respect the men of Israel at this time professed for their king, they would not have quarrelled so furiously about their own credit and interest in recalling him, if they had been truly sorry for their former rebellion. David freely forgave them all their gross injuries against him; but they could not endure the least affront from each other. (Note, xx. 1, 2.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—15. The excessive indulgence or any passion, (grief by no means excepted,) not only offends God, but betrays men into great imprudences in their temporal concerns.—They who have faithfully served us expect that we should appear pleased with them, and thankful for their services: and many will do more for a smile and a kind word from their superiors, than for a more substantial recompense; and be much grieved and disheartened if they think themselves frowned on.—Upon important emergencies, plain truths may properly be spoken to the greatest and best of men, and they may be closely reasoned and expostulated with; but indecent roughness, and an assuming demeanour in an inferior, will render the most prudent, reasonable, and honest counsel unacceptable, and perhaps ineffectual. (Notes, 1 Sam. xxv. 31—34. Prov. xxv. 11, 12. xxvii. 9.) A wise man, however, will endeavour to overlook the impropriety, and benefit by the sound reason, of well-intended remonstrances; and timely concessions will commonly prevent the ill effects of mistaken measures.—Men are often betrayed, by their discontents and fickleness, into such actions as their sober judgment disapproves, and of which experience will constrain them to be weary; but they do not so readily constrain themselves for the most evident treachery and ingratitude. Many allow that such and such things should be done, and wonder that others do not set about them: and yet they themselves are equally dilatory, through indolence, pride, or covetousness.—Ministers should at all times be examples of fidelity to magistrates and rulers; and may very properly exhort others to do their plain and evident duty, in that as well as in other respects: but, this case excepted, it is generally best for them not to intermeddle in public affairs.—Convincing arguments, urged in mildness and love, are very forcible, and produce great effects upon the minds of men in all temporal concerns: but the grace of God alone can bow our hearts into submission to his humbling truth and holy will.—In acts of clemency to those who have been open offenders, care should be taken not to disgust such as have deserved better of us, though in some respects they have failed of their duty: and that which exposed a man to envy or rivalry, however splendid and valuable, will probably be injurious to him. (Notes, 1 Sam. xviii. 6—11. Prov. xxvii. 4.) Self-preference and contempt of others should always be guarded against, and every thing avoided which may be thought to spring from these evils; while equity, mutual respect, and harmony should be studied, and many interests and punctilios receded from, that strife and contention may be excluded.

V. 16—30. Many seem to be sorry for those crimes, which expose them to present punishment; and the language and semblance of repentance are easily imitated: but it is safest for us to judge favourably of others; if we do err, to err on the side of candour and clemency; and to leave it to the heart-searching God, to determine between the upright and the hypocritical.—Peculiar mercies from God should dispose us to be the more merciful to others: and our best friends must be considered as adversaries, when they would persuade us to

CHAP. XX.

Sheba draws the men of Israel into a revolt, 1, 2. David shuts up his ten concubines, 3. Amasai, being sent to call together the men of Judah, is murdered by Joab, who resumes the command, and pursues Sheba, 4—13. He besieges Abel, whither Sheba had fled, 14, 15. Through the interposition of a wise woman, Sheba's head is thrown over the wall, and the revolt is terminated, 16—22. David's officers, 23—26.

AND there happened to be there a man of Belial, whose name was Sheba, the son of Bichri, a Benjamite: and he blew a trumpet, and said, "We have no part in David, neither have we inheritance in the son of Jesse: every man to his tents, O Israel."

2 So every man of Israel went up from after David, and followed Sheba the son of Bichri: but the men of Judah clave unto their king, from Jordan even to Jerusalem.

act contrary to our conscience and our duty. (Note, Matt. xvi. 21—23.—Perseverance in well-doing will at length refute slanderous accusations; true affection for our friends, and sympathy with them in their afflictions, will create an indifference to the pleasures of sense and external decorations: and when they are beloved for the Lord's sake, as well as for personal obligations, the effect will be much greater, and more permanent. But this sorrow shall be turned into joy on account of their present, or in the prospect of their future prosperity, and our own in fellowship with them: and these hopes and comforts tend to wean the soul more and more from the trifling interests of this world.—Credulity in believing slanders often leads pious persons into difficulties, and covers them with shame: and no offenders are so seldom treated with proper severity as backbiters.

V. 31—43. When God gives largeness of heart, as well as great wealth, he qualifies a man to be a public blessing: and doing good liberally is the proper pleasure and advantage of wealth. For, the little pleasure of outward enjoyments quickly grows insipid; old age destroys the relish for them; and death must soon separate a man from his riches, and then he must give an account to God of his stewardship.—It becomes us, therefore, as we advance in life, to relinquish worldly pursuits before we be torn from them: and leaving to our juniors those scenes of business, or of pleasure, where reflection is too often dissipated, and the voice of conscience stunned, to prefer retirement and privacy, where we may best prepare for the closing hour. Even the cities where the truths of God are most professed, and his ordinances are best administered; and those courts, where the prince encourages and sets an example of true piety, are ensnaring places, through the multitudes of another character which frequent them. And, though allowances should be made to youth, in matters inexpedient to old age; yet the sooner, and the more entirely, young people devote themselves to God, the safer and happier they will be.—It is our duty to recompense to the children, the kindness shewn us by their parents, and to pray for them that they may have grace properly to use their temporal good things.—Envy and anger often interrupt the most promising appearances, and in quarrels generally both parties are culpable. A supposed neglect excites displeasure; an angry expression provokes a retort; words grow warmer, and fiercer. Thus the best designs are disconcerted, and much evil is committed; when it might be otherwise, if men would watch against their own pride, and be careful not to affront that of others; remembering, that a "soft answer turneth away wrath." (Notes, Prov. xv. 1. xxvi. 4, 5.)—But here again, some glimpses may be discerned of the glorious character and kingdom of David's Son and David's Lord. Being anointed by the Father to be his King upon his holy hill of Zion, he reigns over a willing people, who deem it their privilege to be his subjects. Once indeed they were rebels, (and numbers of their associates perish in rebellion;) but when they became sensible of their danger, they were fearful or reluctant to submit unto him; till his ministers, by representing his tender love, and his promises of pardon and preferment, through the concurring influences of his Spirit, bowed their hearts to an humble willingness that he should reign over them: then he readily pardoned and accepted them, and upon no accusation will he cast out, or cut off, the greatest offender who cries for his mercy. His friends sincerely mourn when his cause is run down, and rejoice when it prospers, whether they prosper in the world or not. He will recompense those, who from love to him feed his servants; he will assign them a place in his holy city, the new Jerusalem; he will feast them upon the provisions of his house, and will bless their children after them. Alas! that it must be added, that while the King himself is so plenteous in mercy; many of his professed subjects are envious and contentious with each other, and quarrel about the most trivial concerns; which prevents much good, does immense mischief, and occasions lamentable scandals. May he at length teach all who are called by his name, to follow the example of his humility and meekness; and to rejoice in seeing the common cause promoted, let who will have the credit of being the instrument: and may all "endeavour to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace!" (Note, Eph. iv. 1—6.)

NOTES.

CHAP. XX. V. 1, 2. The disputants at first pretended to vie with each other in loyal affection for their prince; (Note, xix. 41—43;) yet they were

3 ¶ And David came to his house at Jerusalem: and the king took the ^{ten} women his concubines, whom he had left to keep the house, and put them in ^{ward}, and fed them, but went not in unto them. So they were ^{shut} up unto the day of their death, ^{living} in widowhood.

4 ¶ Then said the king to ^{Amasa}, ^{Assemble} me the men of Judah within three days, and be thou here present.

5 So Amasa went to assemble the men of Judah: but he ^{tarried} longer than the set time which he had appointed him.

6 And David said to ^{Abishai}, Now shall Sheba the son of Bichri ^{do} us more harm than did Absalom: take thou ^{thy} lord's servants, and pursue after him, lest he get him fenced cities, and ^{escape} us.

7 And there went out after him ^{Joab's} men, and the Cherethites, and the Pelethites, and all the mighty men: and they went out of Jerusalem, to pursue after Sheba the son of Bichri.

8 When they were at the great stone which is ⁱⁿ Gibeon, ^{Amasa} went before them. And Joab's garment that he had put on was girded unto him, and upon it a girdle with a sword fastened upon his loins in the sheath thereof; and as he went forth it fell out.

9 And Joab said to Amasa, ^{Art} thou in health, my brother? And Joab took Amasa by the beard with the right hand ^{to} kiss him.

10 But Amasa took no heed to the sword that was ⁱⁿ Joab's hand: so ^{he} smote him therewith in the fifth ^{rib}, and shed out his bowels to the ground, and ^{struck} him not again; and he died. So Joab and Abishai his brother pursued after Sheba the son of Bichri.

11 And one of Joab's men stood by him, and said, ^{He} that favoureth Joab, and he that is ^{for} David, ^{let} him go after Joab.

12 And ^{Amasa} wallowed in blood in the midst of the highway. And when the man saw that all the people stood still, he removed Amasa out of the highway into the field, and cast a cloth upon him, when he saw that every one that came by him stood still.

13 When he was removed out of the highway, all the people went on after Joab, to pursue after Sheba the son of Bichri.

14 ¶ And he went through all the tribes of Israel unto ^{Abel}, and to Beth-maachah, and all the ^{Berites}: and they were gathered together, and went also after him.

15 And they came and besieged him in Abel of Beth-maachah, and they ^{cast} up a bank against the city, and it ^{stood} in the trench: and all the people that were with Joab ^{battered} the wall to throw it down.

16 ¶ Then cried ^a wise woman out of the city, Hear, hear; say, I pray you, unto Joab, Come near hither, that I may speak with thee.

17 And when he was come near unto her, the woman said, ^{Art} thou Joab? And he answered, I am he. Then she said unto him, ^{Hear} the words of thine handmaid. And he answered, I do hear.

18 Then she spake, saying, ^{They} were wont to speak in old time, saying, They shall surely ask counsel at Abel: and so they ended the matter.

19 I am one of them that are ^{peaceable} and faithful in Israel: thou seekest to destroy a city and ^a mother in Israel: why wilt thou ^{swallow} up ^{the} inheritance of the LORD?

20 And Joab answered and said, ^{Far} be it, far be it from me, ^{that} I should swallow up or destroy.

21 The matter is not so: but ^a man of mount Ephraim, Sheba the son of Bichri ^{by} name, hath ^{lifted} up his hand against the king, even against David. Deliver him only, and I will depart from the city. And the woman said unto Joab, Behold, ^{this} head shall be thrown to thee over the wall.

really actuated by ambition of pre-eminence: one party confiding in nearness of relation to David, the other in numbers. At length therefore the men of Israel, who had boasted that they had ten parts in David, were so irritated, that they would have no part in him, but preferred a man of Belial before him: intimating, that they had no share in his regard, which was engrossed by the men of Judah; and therefore they would have nothing more to do with him. (Note, 1 Kings xii. 16.)—Sheba, it is probable, had been a commander under Amasa in Absalom's revolt, and possessed great influence among the men of Israel; so that, instead of returning home, they generally followed him as the leader of another rebellion.

V. 3. The confinement and retired maintenance of these women was the only measure, which could be adopted, in justice or prudence; unless they had been found deserving of severer punishment. The less they were seen or heard of, the better; and perhaps their seclusion might be a benefit to their souls.

V. 4, 5. Amasa's appointment to be commander of the army, in the place of Joab, must have been very unpopular, with all those who had fought and conquered under that commander: and as Amasa had not been successful for Absalom, perhaps his own party did not greatly confide in him. This might occasion some unexpected delay in raising an army: but the men of Judah seem to have been more eager to dispute about their king, than to engage in battle for him.

V. 6, 7. Thy lord's, &c. That is, Joab's soldiers, or a body of men more immediately commanded by him. (Marg. Ref.) David would not employ Joab upon this occasion, because he intended to remove him from his service.

V. 8—10. Amasa, at length arriving with the troops which he had collected, took upon him the command of the army; and Joab seemed very cheerfully to submit; following the army as a private person, and professing zeal for the cause of David, whilst he was meditating revenge and murder! He had contrived, that his sword should fall from its scabbard, as if by chance, when he approached Amasa, that without suspicion he might have it drawn in his hand, when he saluted him: and thus, pretending brotherly love, (for he was a near relation,) and in the very expression of endeared friendship, he basely murdered him at one blow. Amasa could not but know Joab's daring and revengeful character; and his vexation, at being superseded by the commander of that very rebellion which he had crushed: yet he did not suspect his intention, or attempt to avoid the fatal blow! perhaps not apprehending danger from the sword, because Joab held it in his left hand. But it was the Lord's righteous will, that Amasa should thus suffer the punishment due to his former treason. (Notes, iii. 26, 27. xiv. 21—29. xviii. 14. Judg. ix. 50—57.)—Joab, confiding in the favour of the army, by his conduct set both the king and public justice at defiance, and declared his resolution to keep his place in contempt of all opposition. (Notes, iii. 38, 39. 1 Kings ii. 5, 6. 28—34.) Having, therefore, given Amasa a mortal wound, he left him in the agonies of death, resumed the command of the troops, and marched against the common enemy, without concern or delay.

V. 11—13. By the artifice of representing the cause of Joab as united with that of David, the people in general were left in suspense, whether Joab acted by the king's orders, or against them: but when Amasa was removed and covered, they followed their old commander without further hesitation.

V. 14, 15. Sheba endeavoured to raise forces, through the several tribes of Israel: but it is probable, that the elders who at first had followed him, upon recollection, and from dread of another civil war, had generally withdrawn from him; and therefore he had little success. So that, with only a few followers, chiefly from Beeroth, a city of Benjamin, he at length shut himself up in Abel-beth-maachah, in the tribe of Naphtali, as some of the citizens seem at first to have been favourable to his cause: but when Moab had so far pushed the siege, as to fill up the trench, and to fix his engines close to the wall to batter it; it may be supposed, that they began to dread the consequences.

V. 16—19. Joab seems to have taken it for granted, that the citizens in general were firmly attached to Sheba; and so did not propose terms of peace, or require them to deliver him up; and they appear to have concluded, that there was no safety but in resistance. But the fatal effects of this misunderstanding were prevented by the timely interposition of a woman of noted wisdom and prudence. In her argument with Joab, she seems to have referred to the law which required, that before siege was laid even to a foreign city, peace should be offered if the citizens would submit; and much more to a city, which had hitherto been "peaceful and faithful,—a mother in Israel," as protecting the adjacent villages. (Note, Deut. xx. 10—18.) And she tacitly intimated that Joab, by neglecting this previous measure, was about to destroy the city, to the public injury of the nation, and so to "swallow up the inheritance of the LORD." This seems the proper interpretation of her expostulation: and it accords with the marginal reading; though she expressed herself rather obscurely, perhaps for fear of giving offence. 'As if she had said, When the people saw thee lay siege to the city, they said, Surely they will ask us, if we will have peace, and then we shall soon come to an agreement, and have an end.' (Bp. Patrick.) Some, adhering to the translation in the text, suppose that this city had long been noted, as the residence of wise men, who had settled differences by prudent and equitable accommodation; so that it was become proverbial, 'that the way to terminate matters in litigation, was to ask counsel at Abel: and therefore that city ought not rashly to be destroyed.'

V. 20—22. Joab, though guilty of private revenge, was attentive to the public interest, and very willing to settle the dispute: if the citizens therefore 22 Then the woman went unto all the people ⁱⁿ her wisdom. And they cut off the head of Sheba the son of Bichri, and cast it out to Joab : and he blew a trumpet, and they ^{retired} from the city, every man to his tent. And Joab returned to Jerusalem unto the king.

23 ¶ Now Joab was over all the host of Israel : and Benaiah the son of Jehoiada was over the Cherethites, and over the Pelethites :

24 And Adoram was over the tribute : and Jehoshaphat the son of Ahilud ^{was} recorder :

25 And Sheva was scribe : and Zadok and Abiathar were the priests :

26 And Ira also the Jairite was a chief ruler about David.

CHAP. XXI.

A famine prevails for three years : as a judgment on the land, for Saul's cruelty to the Gibeonites, who being asked, require seven of his descendants, and hang them, 1-9. Rizpah watches their bodies : David buries their bones, with those of Saul and Jonathan, in the sepulchre of Kish : and the famine ceases, 10-14. In several battles with the Philistines, four of David's mighty men slay four giants, 15-22.

THEN there was a famine in the days of David, three years, year after year : and David ^{enquired} of the LORD. And the LORD answered, It is for Saul, and for his bloody house, because he slew the Gibeonites.

2 And the king called the Gibeonites, and said unto would deliver up the traitor, he would not injure them. Thus Sheba's head purchased the safety of the city, and terminated the rebellion : (Notes, Prov. xvii. 11. Ec. ix. 13-18.) and Joab without fear or shame, (apparently glorying as much in revenging himself, as in serving the public,) returned to David as though nothing had happened, and he was now become too powerful to be removed, or punished, without endangering another rebellion.

V. 24. Tribute. This office is not before mentioned. (Note, viii. 15-18.) Perhaps, at first, the contributions of the nation had been but small ; in a measure voluntary ; and placed under the management of the other officers : but now regular taxes were paid ; and the tribute from the conquered nations tended to render this new office requisite. (Notes, 1 Kings iv. 4-6. xii. 18.)

V. 25, 26. Abiathar was the high priest : Ahimelech his son is not mentioned. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-13. We must expect one trial after another, for our salutary chastisement, till we reach the place where sin and sorrow are for ever excluded.—Angry disputants commonly misunderstand, or misinterpret, one another's words : proud men will either manage every thing their own way, or entirely refuse their concurrence ; and when greatly enraged, they are apt to avenge themselves on the innocent, and on persons whom they profess to love, instead of those who have affronted them.—The favour of the many is no more to be depended on, than that of the great : and what indeed have men a right to expect when "Hosanna to the Son of David," by the multitude, was so soon changed into "Crucify him, crucify him?" All appearance, however, of partiality, in our conduct towards those who are equally related to us, or have an equal claim upon us, ought to be avoided : for it often excites discord in families, churches, and kingdoms.—Many a vehement quarrel would spend its fury in angry words, and then die away ; if some "man of Belial" were not present, to sound the trumpet of public contention. Satan, if permitted, will be sure to excite such ringleaders of dissension ; and God, in wise and holy sovereignty, is pleased often to permit it, that he may execute vengeance, or inflict correction, according to his righteous purposes. Hence nations are visited with war and bloodshed, and the church with pestilential divisions, and virulent controversies.—When immoderate and inexpedient provision is made for sensual gratification, it will surely terminate in grief and shame : and obscure retirement best suits those who are become infamous by sin.—The most powerful cannot effect all that they wish, or all that they see to be right ; nay, they cannot attempt it without danger : for at last they can only do, what the many can be prevailed with to concur in.—Consequences should be well weighed before important measures are adopted ; for resentment and disgust are dangerous counsellors.—Our inbred lusts, like able wicked men, cannot be brought under, without great difficulties, when they have acquired a habit of domineering : the beginning of evil should, therefore, in every thing be decisively resisted.—By degrees men grow more and more bold and unfeeling in the commission of crimes, until they vindicate and glory in their villainies : and when such daring offenders are actuated by ambition or revenge, they will not be restrained by the ties of relationship, or friendship ; nay, they will employ the guise and language of love, to obtain the opportunity of perpetrating the most horrid crimes : but the more of contrivance, or of dissimulation, is connected with malice, the deeper is its malignity.—The murderer may conceal his crimes, or prosper in his ways for a season, and elude or outbrave the justice of man : but let him not expect to escape the vengeance of God.—Vain are earthly distinctions and preferments, which excite so much envy and enmity, without affording any additional security to man's uncertain life : may we then be ambitious "of that honour which cometh from God only?"—Great abilities, strong attachment to the interests of the public, and eminent services, performed with firmness, prudence, and clemency, constitute a great, but not always a good, man ; and a person thus peculiarly distinguished, being the slave of one imperious lust, may violate every moral obligation in order to its indulgence ; though such treachery, cruelty, and injustice "be far from him," in other parts of his conduct.

V. 14-26. Wisdom is not restricted to rank or sex ; and it does not consist in extensive knowledge or ingenious speculations, but in understanding how to act as circumstances arise, in order that calamities may be averted, and benefits secured, personal, relative, and public.—Contending parties would often be reconciled if they properly understood each other : hence the benefit of a prudent and impartial mediation ; and the just punishment of one atrocious criminal is frequently mercy to great numbers.—Thus the sinner persists in his rebellion, till, through the Saviour's mediation, he perceives that his offended Lord does not seek his destruction, but that of his sins ; then he becomes willing that they should be crucified, especially the strongest and most domineering of them ; and receiving pardon and grace from God, he becomes peaceable, faithful, and useful in Israel.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXI. V. 1-3. It is not certain, whether this famine occurred in the order of time, in which it is related, or earlier in the reign of David.—It does not seem to have been very grievous, and the scarcity of the first and second year occasioned no great alarm : but when it continued the third year also, David understood that it was a national judgment, and enquired of God, for what particular sin he thus contended with them ; perhaps thinking of his own crimes in the matter of Uriah.—The history of Saul gives no account of the transaction which was declared to be the cause of this calamity : but it seems that Saul, in order to increase the possessions of Israel, attempted to extirpate the Gibeonites, who were of the ancient inhabitants of Canaan ; though they had submitted to Israel, and had quietly served them for ages ; and were protected by the public faith, and a solemn oath ratifying a covenant of peace with them. (Notes, Josh. ix.) Yet he did not attempt to extirpate the Amalekites, Philistines, and other hostile nations, whom God commanded him to destroy ! These were able and determined to resist, and could not be subdued without apparent danger and difficulty ; while the inoffensive Gibeonites might be oppressed with ease, and apparent safety. Perhaps he disliked them the more, for being peculiarly devoted to the service of the priests and the sanctuary ; and attempted to destroy them when he slew the priests. (Note, 1 Sam. xxii. 17-19.) It seems that Saul's relations also were disposed to cruelty, and concurred in this bloodshed ; and that many Israelites had willingly assisted in the persecution.—The violation of the oath of God, the treachery of Israel towards the Gibeonites, and the murder of them, formed an enormous load of national guilt, which had never been expiated by the punishment of the guilty : and it pleased God in this manner, and so long after, to proceed against the nation for it ; to shew them his abhorrence of such crimes ; to teach rulers to keep at a distance from similar offences themselves, and to punish them in others ; and to intimate that the chief punishment of sin is after the death of the offender. And God informed David of the cause of the visitation ; that he might take proper measures for expiating the national guilt. (Notes, Num. xxxv. 31-34. Deut. xxi. 1-9.)

V. 4-7. As God accepted of the expiation here demanded, we must suppose, that both the enquiry of David, and the answer of the Gibeonites, were directed by some open or secret intimation from him. They did not demand their own liberty, or any accession of wealth, or the death of any other Israelite ; but that, in the character of the avengers of the blood of their brethren, they might be permitted to put to death seven of Saul's descendants ; whom they would "hang up unto the LORD," as a sacrifice to his justice, and an example to others not to injure or oppress them. They were willing to undertake the trouble, and to bear the odium, of the execution ; and would do it in Saul's own

8 But the king took the two sons of ^pRizpah the daughter of Aiah, whom she bare unto Saul, Armoni and Mephibosheth: and the five sons of ^qMichal the daughter of Saul, whom she ^rbrought up for Adriel the son of Barzillai the Meholahite:

9 And he delivered them into the hands of the Gibeonites, and they hanged them in the hill ^sbefore the LORD: and they fell ^tall seven together, and were put to death in the days of harvest, in the first ^udays, in the beginning of barley-harvest.

10 ¶ And ^vRizpah the daughter of Aiah ^wtook sackcloth, and spread it for her upon the rock, ^xfrom the beginning of harvest ^yuntil water dropped upon them out of heaven, and suffered neither ^zthe birds of the air to rest on them by day, nor the beasts of the field by night.

11 And it was ^atold David what Rizpah the daughter of Aiah, the concubine of Saul, had done.

12 And David went and took ^bthe bones of Saul, and the bones of Jonathan his son from the men of Jabesh-gilead, which had stolen them from the street of ^cBeth-shan, where the Philistines had hanged them, when the Philistines had slain Saul ^din Gilboa.

13 And he brought up from thence the bones of Saul and the bones of Jonathan his son; and they gathered the bones of them that were hanged.

14 And the bones of Saul and Jonathan his son ^eburied they in the country of Benjamin in ^fZelah, in the sepulchre of Kish his father: and they performed all that the king commanded. And after that, ^gGod was intreated for the land.

15 ¶ Moreover, ^athe Philistines had yet war again with Israel; and David went down, and his servants with him, and fought against the Philistines: ^band David waxed faint.

16 And Ishbi-benob, which ^cwas ^d'of the sons of ^e'the giant, (the weight of ^f'whose spear ^gweighed three hundred ^hshekels of brass in weight,) he being girded with a new sword, ⁱthought to have slain David.

17 But ^j'Abishai the son of Zeruiah ^ksuccoured him, and smote the Philistine, and killed him. Then the men of David swore unto him, saying, ^l'Thou shalt go no more out with us to battle, that thou ^m'quench not the ⁿ'light of Israel.

18 And it came to pass after this, that there was again a battle with the Philistines at Gob: then ^o'Sibbechai the Hushathite slew ^p'Saph, which ^qwas of the sons of ^r'the giant.

19 And there was again a battle in Gob with the Philistines, where ^s'Elhanan the son of ^t'Jaare-oregim, a Beth-lehemite, slew ^uthe brother of ^v'Goliath the Gittite, the staff of whose spear ^wwas like a weaver's beam.

20 And there was ^x'yet a battle in Gath, where was a man of ^ygreat stature, that had on every hand six fingers, and on every foot six toes, four-and-twenty in number; and he also was born to ^z'the giant.

21 And when he ^a'defied Israel, ^b'Jonathan the son of ^c'Shimeah the brother of David slew him.

22 These ^d'four were born to the giant in Gath, and ^e'fell by the hand of David, and by the hand of his servants.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Every affliction arises from sin, and should excite us to repentance: but some troubles loudly proclaim that they were sent to "bring sin to remembrance." In this case, we prolong our sufferings by neglecting self-examination, and prayer to the Lord to shew us in what we have offended, if the cause be not already plain to our consciences: and, however reluctant, we must submit to this, before we can expect relief from his mercy.—While the grand outlines of the Lord's government are evidently righteous, some of his judgments are far too deep for us: but faith believes those appointments to be just, which assume a different appearance, and waits for the more complete display of the glory of God in them.—By the punishment of children for the sins of their parents, and of subjects for those of their princes, even after their death, he marks his abhorrence of destructive crimes, gives a check to enormous wickedness, and teaches us to pray for our rulers, and to deny our passions out of love to our offspring: and he will take care that no individual shall in the event have cause to complain of injustice.—That our guilty land should experience successive years of plenty, calls for admiring gratitude; and we need not wonder, if our misused abundance should be punished with as great a scarcity. Yet when a scarce season occurs, how few are disposed to enquire of the Lord, concerning the sinful cause; while the ingenuity of numbers is employed in discovering the second causes, by which he is pleased to work; and while the impatience and malignity of multitudes are expressed by outrages against those who are, often without cause, charged with being the authors of the calamity!—The Lord will plead for those who cannot or will not avenge themselves; and the prayers of the poor, either for or against us, are of vast efficacy. The blood of nobles is but a poor atonement to expiate the guilt of the murder of the meanest person, in order that the wrath of God may be averted from the land; and violated oaths and covenants will be severely punished, either in this world or the next, let the criminal be ever so highly exalted among his fellow-creatures.—Our zeal, either for the public good or the supposed cause of religion, is naturally exercised in a perverse manner, and as if in contempt of God's commandments: but an apparently easy and safe exertion, which consists with our self-indulgence, and flatters our pride and lusts, is the temptation which prevails against us, unless the grace of God teach us a better way.—Little do we know what may befall our children, or what anguish they may occasion us: but if we educate them in the fear of God, and commit them to his keeping, he will either exempt us from heavy trials about them, or else support us under them. In every case resignation to the will of God is our duty and interest; and whatever cherishes inordinate grief, is sinful and tormenting, however specious its appearance.—All personal respects must yield to the command of God: yet, in subordination to it, a tribute of gratitude is due to the memory of our friends, and of respect to our civil governors.—While we are able, we ought to venture and labour for the public welfare; but we cannot exceed our appointed measure of service: and when bodily vigour fails, some are so useful by their counsels, prayers, and examples, that their lives should be taken care of, as a public blessing.—Strength and courage often increase men's pride; but far more frequently hasten, than retard the stroke of death; the unexpected approach of which, miserably causes all their vain thoughts to perish.—The valour and affection city, for a warning to those who had witnessed or assisted in the oppression.—As David consented to this measure in obedience to God, and for the public welfare, and not out of private resentment; he did not violate his oath to Saul: (Notes, 1 Sam. xxiv. 16—22:) but as he could spare one at least of Saul's descendants, his covenant, and his oath of sacred friendship with Jonathan, required the preservation of his son in preference to all the rest. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 8. "The five sons of Michal," here mentioned, seem to have been the children of her sister Merab, whom Michal had adopted, and brought up as her own. (1 Sam. xviii. 19.)—This Barzillai is called "the Meholahite," to distinguish him from Barzillai the Gileadite, before spoken of. (xix. 31. Judg. vii. 22. 1 Kings xix. 16.)

V. 9—14. As these persons were hung up by the express appointment of God, for an anathema, an accursed thing, a national atonement to divine justice; they were left on the tree or gibbet, till some tokens of the Lord's reconciliation were afforded by seasonable rains. (Note, Deut. xxi. 22, 23.) They were not considered to be within the meaning of the law, against the bodies of malefactors being left on a tree all night; for that statute meant, that they, who were put to death for breaking human laws, should not be treated as accursed of God." Indeed he may command that, in a particular case, which he prohibits in general; provided it be not intrinsically unjust. He ordered the children to be put to death for the parents' crimes, though magistrates in general were forbidden to do it: and in like manner he might require this treatment of these dead bodies, though, in some respects, contrary to the general rule.—Rizpah improperly fed and indulged her grief by an useless attention to the dead bodies; yet her case was truly pitiable. David doubtless sympathized with the bereaved and aged parent; and gladly embraced the opportunity, as soon as it was proper, of relieving her from her melancholy charge, by decently interring them, together with the bones of Saul and his other sons: and by this he avowed that he had not acted out of disrespect to Saul or his family. (Notes, ii. 5—7. 1 Sam. xxxi. 11—13.)—The first rain was a token of reconciliation: but after the expiation was finished, the scarcity was removed in answer to prayer; and doubtless the Gibeonites joined, in seeking "this blessing for the inheritance of the Lorn." (3.)

V. 15—22. All these events seem to have occurred, in the order here related, and towards the latter end of David's reign. The Philistines, though frequently vanquished, were not totally subjugated: and the remains of the Anakims, of enormous size and strength, gave David and his servants, not only an opportunity of signaling their courage, but repeated proofs of the Lord's truth and goodness.—David himself was on one occasion, in imminent danger of death, by the hands of Ishbi-benob, who seems to have been Goliath's son, (as indeed do the others here mentioned,) and probably aimed to revenge his father's death; and David's life was deemed too valuable to Israel to be any more exposed, now that his strength and activity began to fail him. For, as king, prophet, and psalmist, he was the, "light of Israel," and a type of "the Light of the world." (Note, xviii. 3.)

Six, &c. (20.) Other instances of this peculiarity are recorded by historians; and the author has been informed, by most indisputable testimony, of one such who is now living.

The introduction to David's psalm of thanksgiving, 1. He professes his confidence and joy in God, 2, 3. He states his trials and dangers, and celebrates the praises of God for surprising deliverances, 4-20. He avows his integrity, and shews the method of the Lord's dealings with men, 21-28. He ascribes to God all the glory of his victories, 29-36. He exalts, with grateful praises, in the destruction of his enemies, 37-44. He anticipates the submission of the nations, and glories in the salvation of God, and his mercies to him and to his seed for ever, 45-51.

AND David spake unto the LORD the words of this song, "in the day that the LORD had delivered him out of the hand of all his enemies, and out of the hand of Saul.

datations of heaven moved and shook, because he was wroth.

9 There went up a smoke out of his nostrils, and fire out of his mouth devoured: coals were kindled by it.

10 He bowed the heavens also, and came down; and darkness was under his feet.

11 And he rode upon a cherub, and did fly: and he was seen upon the wings of the wind.

12 And he made darkness pavilions round about him, dark waters, and thick clouds of the skies.

13 Through the brightness before him were coals of fire kindled.

14 The LORD thundered from heaven, and the most High uttered his voice.

15 And he sent out arrows, and scattered them; lightning, and discomfited them.

16 And the channels of the sea appeared, the foundations of the world were discovered, at the rebuking of the LORD, at the blast of the breath of his nostrils.

17 He sent from above, he took me; he drew me out of many waters;

18 He delivered me from my strong enemy, and from them that hated me: for they were too strong for me.

V. 4. 'The armour of a soldier does him no service, except he put it on;—so, no protection, from God is to be expected—unless we apply ourselves to him by prayer.' (Strigelius.) (Note, Ps. xviii. 30. cxvii. 2.)

V. 5, 6. These verses contain a figurative and poetical description of the violence of David's enemies, and the imminent danger to which he was exposed. Death seemed ready to swallow him up, as the waves of the sea overwhelm those who are cast into them. (Notes, Jcn. ii. 1-7.) Multitudes of wicked men pressed upon him with incumbent force, like the rising floods from which there appears no deliverance; nay, the temptations of Satan, and the consciousness of his sins, filled him with fears of wrath, and dreadful apprehensions of future consequences: and he felt like a malefactor bound for execution, whose fetters prevent him from attempting an escape, for whose body the grave hath certainly opened her mouth, and who is horribly alarmed lest the pit of hell should swallow up his soul. In short, he was like the helpless bird caught in the fowler's snare, and doomed to inevitable death. (Marg. Ref.)—In this he was a type of Christ our King, when agonizing in the garden; when he endured the severest tortures, the pangs of death, the temptations of Satan, yea, the wrath of God against our sins; and was at the same time surrounded by the insulting scribes, priests, and people. (Note, Ps. xviii. 4, 5. xl. 1-5.)

V. 7-16. When every other hope failed, the psalmist simply and earnestly sought help from God; whose manifested presence, in the sanctuary above the mercy-seat, representing his tabernacled in human nature, as "God our Saviour;" and our access to him on a throne of grace; (Note, Ex. xxv. 10-21;) as well as his exalted display of his glorious presence in his holy temple in heaven. Thither the prayers of David ascended, and thence they were answered in a most effectual manner.—As we are not informed, that the Lord delivered David with the external display of his power here mentioned; it is supposed that he adorned his sacred poem with sublime images, taken from the history of Israel in Egypt, at the Red sea, at mount Sinai, in the wilderness, and in the conquest of Canaan; and thus intimated, that the deliverances vouchsafed to him were as honourable to God, as those which of old he had wrought for his people, though effected in a different manner. The earthquake, and the shaking of the foundations of the heavens, the smoke, the fire, and the darkness, into which the Lord came down, and in which he majestically dwelt, with several other expressions, lead our thoughts to mount Sinai. (Notes, Ex. xix. 16-20. xx. 18-25.) His "riding upon a cherub," and his "flying on the wings of the wind," denote the ministration of angels, and the speed with which he effected the deliverance of his servant. (Notes, Gen. iii. 22-24. Ps. civ. 4. Ez. i. 3-25. x. 1-22. xi. 22-25.) "The coals of fire kindled" at his presence, may indicate, that the wrath of God arms all creatures against his enemies, or that it will consume them as fuel is consumed by the fire. Other circumstances recall to our remembrance the dividing of the Red sea, and of the river Jordan; the destruction of the Canaanites, when the hailstones destroyed more than the sword of Israel; and that of the Philistines, when the Lord thundered upon them, and discomfited them. And the whole declared, that the indignation of the Lord, against the enemies of his servant, equalled his displeasure against those adversaries of his people; and that their consternation and destruction were no less, than that of the others had been.—Here David was eminently the type of Christ; and the figurative language, used by him, was in many respects exactly accomplished in the preternatural convulsions attending our Lord's death and resurrection. (Notes, Ps. xviii. 6-15. Matt. xxvii. 51-53. xxviii. 1-8.)

V. 17, 18. The providential interposition of God, in delivering David from his of friends should be acknowledged, and the strongest need the assistance of the more feeble: but the glory of every thing belongs to God.—Through the atonement of Jesus, who performed all that was commanded, and through his intercession, the Lord is willingly intreated for sinners: and the believer, having peace with God, needs not fear the stoutest foe who defies Israel; for though sometimes he be in apparent danger, he will at length be made "more than conqueror, through him who loved," and died for, sinners.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXII. V. 1. It is probable, that this song of praise was composed early in the reign of David, and soon after he was finally delivered from the persecuting rage of Saul. Perhaps it stands in this place, as it was found among those compositions, which David used in his private devotions: and in the book of Psalms, as it was corrected and delivered to the chief singer, to be sung in the public service of the sanctuary, from time to time, on occasions of recent deliverances, as well as in remembrance of former mercies. (Ps. xviii. title.) The variations are immaterial; though the Jewish writers enumerate no less than seventy-four. Few of them, however, need be here particularly noted.—The first verse, of this chapter, forms the title of the eighteenth psalm, with some alterations; the most remarkable of which is, the insertion of the words, "the servant of the Lord," in which it seems, the psalmist deemed himself more honoured, than in being a renowned conqueror, and a very prosperous king.—He had many enemies, both among his own people and the surrounding nations; but Saul especially is mentioned, as having been more formidable, malicious, and unwearied than any of them.—In the whole of this sacred hymn, David seems immediately to celebrate providential deliverances: yet he uses language, which may fairly be accommodated to spiritual blessings. He appears also primarily to speak of the Lord's dealings with himself: yet he was led by the prophetic Spirit to utter many things, which may with great propriety be applied to the Redeemer's sufferings and victories, of whom David was an evident and remarkable type. (Notes, Ps. ii. xxii. i. xl. 1-5. lxxix. 1-3. lxxxviii. 1, 2.)

V. 2, 3. The eighteenth psalm abruptly begins, "I will love thee, O Lord my strength;" perhaps these words were added, when it was made public, as an expression of David's exulting gratitude, in order to kindle the devotions of the people. (Note, Ps. xviii. 1.)—The accumulation of metaphors here used, as descriptive of David's expectations from God, which had been fully answered, denotes, that those energetic figures of speech, which commonly exceed the bounds of exact truth, are too feeble to express what God is to his believing people, and what he does for them. (Note, 2 Cor. iv. 13-18.) He is a rock, on which securely to build their confidence; a refuge, in which to shelter themselves from every foe, and in every trouble: a fortress and a strong tower, which are formed by human art and labour, to supply the want of the natural fortifications of rocks and mountains, or to increase the security which they afford: a shield, to ward off every hostile assault; and a horn, with which to push and prostrate every assailant. (Notes, Ex. xvii. 5, 6. Deut. xxxii. 4, 31. 1 Sam. ii. 1, 2.) For the Lord is a deliverer, a saviour, and salvation, from every evil and danger, to which the believer is exposed, who cannot but be safe and comfortable, when exercising faith in him.—Several expressions, as "the God of my rock," and "the horn of my salvation," seem to refer to the person of the Redeemer, "God manifested in the flesh," become the salvation of his people, and in human nature displaying divine power and authority in the redemption of believers, and the destruction of their enemies. (Notes, Ps. xxvii. 1-3. Is. xii. 2. xlv. 15-17. Matt. i. 20, 21. Luke ii. 25-32. Tit. ii. 13. iii. 4-7.)

them to have been the last words that he spoke by inspiration, and, as it were, an appendix to the Psalms which he composed: but perhaps he repeated them in his dying moments, as the expression of his faith and hope, and the source of his consolations. (Note, Ps. lxxii. 20.)—The last words of eminent persons have often been much attended to, and long remembered: and these of David were peculiarly worthy of consideration, as they shewed that this venerable servant of God, when dying, was more than ever assured of the reality and excellency of true religion; decided in his judgment concerning it, and his choice of its blessings; and animated with humble gratitude, and joyful expectation of his approaching felicity.—In the introduction, he mentioned his humble birth, and unexpected exaltation, with thankfulness. God had raised him to a throne, and made him very successful and prosperous: but the most valuable circumstance of his advancement was, that he was anointed by God, to rule over his own people Jacob, and to be the type of the Messiah. Nor was he less thankful for being made "the sweet psalmist of Israel;" for being employed and enabled to compose hymns of praise and sacred poems, for the use of his people, and of the church of God, in all future ages; and to set them to music, and provide for the public performance of this delightful part of God's worship. And no wonder that the work was done in so complete a manner; "for the Spirit of the Lord spake by him, and his word was in his tongue." This, he declared with his dying lips, that Israel, and that we through successive generations, might learn how to estimate that part of holy Scripture; not so much as the words of David, but of the holy Spirit which spake by him. (Note, Mark xii. 35—37. Marg. Ref.)

V. 3, 4. "The Spirit of the Lord spake," by David, and "the Lord spake to him;" and he recorded his words, with his own meditations on them.—These verses, explained of David, taught the duties incumbent on him, as king of Israel; how he ought to instruct his son and successor Solomon; and the general character of good magistrates, who are blessings to the people.—"He that ruleth over men" should treat them as reasonable creatures, of the same nature with himself; and therefore he "must be just," oppressing and injuring none, and by an equal administration of justice, restraining them from defrauding or doing wrong to one another; and by his example and influence promoting general equity: "ruling in the fear of God," as accountable to him for the authority deputed to him, and the use which he makes of it, and teaching others to fear God. Such rulers may reasonably expect that the Lord will prosper them, and afford them blessings and comforts, like the exhilarating light of the unclouded morning-sun: while their salutary regulations, discountenancing every species of evil, and protecting and advancing every good thing, diffuse the most important advantages, temporal and spiritual, around them; as the rising sun dispels the fogs and damps, and brightens and cheers the face of nature; or as his clear shining, after refreshing showers, rapidly promotes vegetation, and renders the earth luxuriantly fruitful. (Marg. Ref.)—Some expositors, however, interpret the words, almost exclusively, of Christ; the anointed King of Israel, and the Ruler over the sons of Adam in general. He is indeed just and righteous: he is the righteousness and sanctification of his subjects; and requires them to fear God, and work righteousness. His light, and grace, and consolations render them fruitful and happy; and the blessings of his kingdom are inexhaustible, and shall be eternal. (Notes, Ps. xlv. 6, 7. lxxii. 1—14. Is. xi. 1—9. xxxii. 1—8. Jer. xxiii. 5, 6. Zech. ix. 9, 10. Heb. vii. 1—3. Rev. xix. 11—16.)

V. 5. David seems here to have turned his reflections on himself and his family; (though this verse is supposed to be peculiarly difficult, and is variously interpreted; and he could not but regret, that "his house was not so with God," as the preceding statement implied. By his own misconduct, his family was much less religious and prosperous, than it might have been expected; and both he and Israel had suffered many things in consequence. Several grievous and scandalous events had occurred: matters were not yet as he could wish; and he seems to have had his fears concerning his descendants who should succeed him in the kingdom. Perhaps by prophetic monition, he foresaw, that they would neither be happy themselves, nor blessings to Israel, nor instruments of God's glory, in that measure which he desired. He however comforted himself, that "the Lord had made with him an everlasting covenant." God had indeed covenanted to David that his family should succeed him in the kingdom. (Notes, vii. 8—16. Ps. lxxxix. 19—37.) yet this was not "all his salvation and all his desire;" and could give him comparatively but little consolation in his dying moments, except as it referred to the promised seed, who was to descend from him. By "the everlasting covenant" therefore, David no doubt principally intended the covenant of mercy and peace, which the Lord had made with him, as one who believed in the promised Saviour, and had yielded up himself to be his redeemed servant, and had been made partaker of his sanctifying grace as the seal and pledge of it. (Notes, Is. lv. 1—3. Jer. xxxii. 39—41. 1. 4—6. Ez. xxxvii. 25—27. Heb. xiii. 20, 21.) This covenant was "from everlasting" in the purposes of God, and shall be "to

5 Although "my house be not so with God; yet "he hath made with me an everlasting covenant, ordered in all things, "and sure: for this is "all my salvation, and all my "desire, although he make it not to "grow.

6 But "the sons of Belial shall be all of them as "thorns thrust away, because they cannot be taken with hands:

7 But the man that shall touch them must be "fenced with iron and the staff of a spear; and "they shall be utterly burned with fire in the same place.

everlasting" in the blessed effects of it. From age to age sinners are admitted to share its benefits, which believers shall for ever enjoy; and God, the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, shall for ever be glorified through it, in their salvation. It is made with the surety, in behalf of those for whom he engaged; all the blessings of it were purchased with his atoning blood, and are freely bestowed upon all who believe in his name; and it secures to them pardon, righteousness, grace, and "eternal life, as the gift of God through Jesus Christ." It is "ordered in all things, and sure:" for in the person, undertaking, and mediation of the Saviour, effectual provision is made for the manifestation of the holiness, the satisfaction of the justice, and the honour of the law of God, and the discovery of the evil and desert of sin. While his mercy abounds in the forgiveness and salvation of the chief of sinners; there is an infinite fulness of grace, and of all blessings, treasured up in Christ, for the supply of those who seek for this salvation; a way opened to the mercy-seat of God, in which they may come in humble confidence; ordinances appointed, through which these blessings are communicated; invitations to draw near, and "exceedingly great and precious promises" to plead with God. All those things, which in one respect are commanded, in another are promised; and while we pray for the performance of the promise, we are enabled to obey the command, to repent, to forsake sin, to turn unto God, and to walk in newness of life.—Provision likewise is in this covenant made for the recovery of those, who have walked inconsistently with it, in the most disgraceful manner: and yet not the least encouragement is given to commit sin, but the most effectual methods are used to deter men from it, and constrain them to all holy obedience; (Note, 1 John ii. 1—3.) So that it is "ordered in all things," in such a manner, that no believer can want wisdom, grace, or strength sufficient for him, whatever his conflicts, temptations, or difficulties may be: and he shall either persevere in a uniform course of holy obedience, or be brought to deep and evident repentance of his misconduct, and shall infallibly at length inherit eternal life.—This covenant was "all David's salvation;" for he was so well acquainted with the holy character and law of God, the evil of sin, and his own sinfulness in every thing, that he knew he could not escape condemnation, according to the covenant of works: and he perceived that all things suited to his case, and sufficient for his salvation, were engaged for by it to every believer; and that it was framed to honour God, to humble and encourage the sinner, to inspire love and gratitude, to bring him to a holy and happy disposition of mind, and to prepare him for that state of complete felicity, in which all the powers of the human soul shall be eternally satisfied. It was also "all his desire," or delight, (as the word is generally rendered;) in comparison with it, all earthly objects lost their attractions; he was willing to renounce them, as far as required, for the sake of the blessings of the covenant; his comfort while he possessed them, was derived from it, not from them; and he was willing to die and leave all else, that he might enjoy its full felicity. This he was conscious of: and yet he complained, that matters were not with his soul, any more than with his house, as he could wish; for this seems the meaning of the words, "although he make it not to grow." The grace of the covenant he had received, but it had not been made to increase and flourish, in that measure which he desired. Still the prevalence of sinful propensities, and the weakness of his faith, hope, and love, were his grief and burden.—The Lord had not "made them to grow." David did not mean to impeach the wisdom, justice, and goodness of God, who had good reasons for what he withheld, as well as for what he gave; and doubtless David would have allowed that his own inattention and negligence were the criminal cause, that his grace had not more been made to grow. But the hope, that it would ere long be perfected in glory, animated and encouraged him in his dying moments.—Referring this also to the Redeemer, it may be observed, that the kingdom of David's family was not so with God in any other period, as under him: and foreseen by faith, he, as the surety of the everlasting covenant, was all David's salvation and desire; though his coming was distant, and though his cause of truth and righteousness did not prosper in Israel, nor even in the prophet's own heart, as he most earnestly desired that it might. (Note, Deut. xxxiv. 4. 1 Cor. iii. 4—9.)

V. 6, 7. They who opposed the authority of David and his descendants, were worthless and troublesome characters, and would be certainly rejected and destroyed, as useless thorns are cast into the fire. And those sons of Belial who will not bear Christ's yoke, or have him to reign over them, are injurious to his people; but they bring upon themselves certain destruction. They cannot indeed be "taken with hands," or dealt with by those who are unarmed and unprotected. But in every government, there must be persons, who possess power to apprehend, confine, and punish the disobedient and rebellious; in the same manner, as a man fenced, or completely armed, "with iron, and the staff of a spear," can thrust the thorns into the fire: and so Christ is able to destroy out of his kingdom all his enemies, and will "make them as a fiery oven in the day of his wrath:" for he can deal with those who, to all others, are utterly unmanageable. (Notes, Ps. xxi. 8—12. Nah. i. 9, 10.) As the 8 ¶ These be the names of the mighty men whom David had: *The Tachmonite that sat in the seat chief among the captains; the same was Adino the Eznite; he lift up his spear against eight hundred, *whom he slew at one time.

9 And after him was *Eleazar the son of Dodo the Ahohite, one of the three mighty men with David, when they *defied the Philistines that were there gathered together to battle, and *the men of Israel were gone away.

10 He arose and smote the Philistines until his hand was weary, and his hand clave unto the sword: and *the LORD wrought a great victory that day; and *the people returned after him only to spoil.

11 And after him was *Shammah the son of Agee *the Hararite. And the Philistines were gathered together *into a troop, where was a piece of ground full of lentiles; and the people fled from the Philistines.

12 But he stood in the midst of the ground, and defended it, and slew the Philistines: and *the LORD wrought a great victory.

13 And *three of the thirty chief went down, and came to David in the harvest-time, unto *the cave of Adullam: and the troop of the Philistines pitched in *the valley of Rephaim.

14 And David was then in *an hold, and the *garrison of the Philistines was then in Beth-lehem.

15 And David *longed, and said, Oh that one would give me drink of the water of the well of Beth-lehem, which is by the gate!

16 And *the three mighty men brake through the host of the Philistines, and drew water out of the well of Beth-lehem, that was by the gate, and took it, and brought it to David: nevertheless he would not drink thereof, but *poured it out unto the LORD.

17 And he said, *Be it far from me, O LORD, that I should do this: is not this *the blood of the men that went in *jeopardy of their lives? therefore he would not drink it. These things did these three mighty men.

willing subjects of David prospered, but his opposers were crushed; so shall it be with those who submit to the authority of the Redeemer, and those who reject him. (Notes, Matt. iii. 11, 12. xiii. 36—43. 2 Thes. i. 5—10.)

V. 8. Under Joab, the chief captain, the persons mentioned in this chapter, were the chief officers in David's army: and as only thirty-six are named, Joab must be added, to complete the number thirty-seven, (39.) There were two triumvirates; under them thirty officers, who commanded subdivisions of the troops. Of several of them, and of their exploits, we read nothing elsewhere; so that David's reign and actions were far more splendid than they appear in the history.—Adino the Tachmonite, is called elsewhere Jashobeam the Hachmonite. It is supposed that he had his title from his wisdom, and that he ordinarily presided in councils of war.—It is here said that he slew eight hundred men; in Chronicles only three hundred are mentioned: perhaps three hundred were left dead on the spot, and the rest died afterwards; or two different actions are meant. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 9, 10. When most of David's army had fled, for fear of the Philistines, he and three of his officers defied them, as Goliath had done the army of Saul: and Eleazar greatly distinguished himself on the occasion; fighting till his hand was weary, and gave to his sword. Thus "the LORD wrought a great victory that day," principally by him: and when the people that had fled, saw what was done, they rallied again, and shared the spoil of their vanquished enemies.—The Divine interposition seems to have been miraculous, in answer to the expectation of faith; as in the case of Jonathan and his armour-bearer. (Notes, Josh. x. 9, 10. 1 Sam. xiv. 6—10. 45, 46.)

V. 11, 12. In Chronicles this victory seems ascribed to Eleazar, who perhaps was the chief commander, though Shammah most distinguished himself.—The field also is said to have been "full of barley:" perhaps part of it was sown with lentiles, and part with barley. (1 Chr. xi. 12—14.)—The annexed titles seem to have been generally derived from the place of the birth, or abode, of the persons spoken of. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 13—17. It is probable, that during the harvest, the Philistines invaded the land of Israel; in order to carry off or destroy the crop, and that David and his men opposed them; and the three captains, of the thirty afterwards mentioned, having come to him in the cave of Adullam, (probably when persecuted by Saul,) assisted him. A garrison also, at the same time, of Philistines, occupied the outer gate of Beth-lehem, the city of David.—Some expositors think that David, by wishing for the water of the well of Beth-lehem, meant to stir up his whole band to attempt dispossessing the garrison; but not that his officers alone should attack them. It is more probable, however, that being very thirsty in hot weather, he eagerly desired, and inconsiderately wished, to quench his thirst at that well, the water being remarkably good: and that these brave men, to express their peculiar attachment to him, broke, sword in hand, through the Philistines, and returned to him with some of the water. David however was, on recollection, ashamed of his inordinate desire and rash wish; and, being unwilling to encourage such desperate attempts, he refused to drink of it, but poured it out as a drink-offering unto the LORD. For as it was procured at the hazard of the lives of these brave officers, he would no more drink of it, than he would drink their blood: "Far be it from me," said he, or "My God forbid it me." (Notes, Ps. lxxii. 14. cxvi. 15.)—"Beth-lehem" signifies the house of bread; and the place was likewise noted for excellent water. There Christ was born, who is the bread of life, and who also gives us the water of life. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 18—24. We are not told on what occasions these extraordinary exploits were performed: but they were done in faith, by the LORD's extraordinary assistance, and for the public good. (Marg. Ref.) Asahel seems to have been the third captain in the second triumvirate, though mentioned as one of the thirty, over whom perhaps he presided as captain: for there are thirty names besides his; and only two of the three are named, if he was not the third. (Note, ii. 18—23. Marg. Ref.)

V. 25—39. The names of the captains are not exactly the same in Chronicles, but the same persons must be meant. In some instances a trivial variation is made in the spelling; in others, they were known by more names than one.—The list closes with Uriah, who met with a base reward of his services! Others are added in Chronicles: but they were not so renowned as these. (Note, 1 Chr. xi. 10—47. Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—7. It has been observed by those who intimately converse with persons of genuine piety, that they are uniformly most sensible of the reality and importance of heavenly things, when they consider themselves as

34 Eliphelet the son of Ahasbai, the son of the Maachathite, 'Eliam the son of Ahithophel the Gilonite,

35 'Hzeirai the Carmelite, Paarai the Arbite,

36 'Igal the son of Nathan of Zobah, Bani the Gadite,

37 'Zelek the Ammonite, 'Naharai the Beerothite, armour-bearer to Joab the son of Zeruiah,

38 'Ira an Ithrite, Gareb an Ithrite,

39 'Uriah the Hittite: thirty and seven in all.

CHAP. XXIV.

David requires Joab to number the people, who very reluctantly complies, 1-8. The captains deliver in the number to the king, 9. He repents; and being warned by Gad the prophet, and obliged to choose one plague, out of three proposed to him, he fixes on three days' pestilence, 10-14. After seventy thousand had died in Israel, the angel is stayed from destroying Jerusalem, in answer to David's prayer, 15-17. David, directed by Gad, purchases Araunah's threshing floor, builds an altar, and sacrifices; and the plague is stayed, 18-25.

AND again the anger of the LORD was kindled against Israel, and *he moved David against them to say, 'Go, number Israel and Judah.

2 For the king said to 'Joab the captain of the host, which was with him, 'Go now through all the tribes of Israel, 'from Dan even to Beer-sheba, and number ye the people, 'that I may know the number of the people.

3 And Joab said unto the king, 'Now the LORD thy God add unto the people, how many soever they be, an hundredfold, and that the eyes of my lord the king may see it: but why doth my lord the king delight in this thing?

4 Notwithstanding, ^b the king's word prevailed against Joab, and against the captains of the host. And Joab and the captains of the host went out from the presence of the king, to number the people of Israel.

5 ¶ And they passed over Jordan, and pitched in 'Aroer, on the right side of the city that lieth in the midst of the 'river of Gad, and toward 'Jazer:

approaching the eternal world. If discouraged respecting their own interest in the invisible blessings, their assured belief excites the most earnest and distressing anxiety, lest they should come short of them: but when their hope abounds, they exult and triumph, though parting with all below, though oppressed with pain and sickness, and in the very agonies of death! So that many have gone from their dying beds more convinced of the truth and excellency of the gospel by their last words and behaviour, than by all the arguments which have conclusively been adduced in proof of it.—When we approach this closing scene, it will be useful and pleasant to consider what we originally were, and to enquire what the Lord hath done for us, in his providence, and by his grace: and the more we have been conformed to the Saviour, and the more we have been treated by the world as he was; the more clearly it will appear that we belong to him. When our endowments have been employed in the service of the church; and our words and works have been such as evince that we were "led by the Spirit," and brought forth "the fruits of the Spirit," the review will be comfortable to us, and we shall give the glory to God.—They who stir up and assist their brethren in the exercises of devotion, are peculiarly useful: and the sweet work of praise and thanksgiving, when conducted with solemnity, as springing from lively affections, is an anticipation of heavenly joy, a solace of earthly sorrows, a preparation for every service, most honourable to God, and calculated to give religion an attractive aspect. When by us the Lord excites others to their duty, he speaks to us likewise concerning our own; that we may exemplify by our conduct, in our proper station of life, the rules that we propose to others.—"They who rule over men," must remember that they are the subjects of God: and must therefore imitate his equity, maintain his cause, and seek his glory, in the exercise of their delegated authority. Then will they be happy themselves, and blessings unto multitudes, who will praise God for them. The sons of Belial indeed will be the more enraged against their equitable administration; and will create disturbance and vexation: but they should endeavour, and will in some measure be able, to crush and keep them under; though they cannot quite extirpate them.—The best of men, reviewing their past conduct, and comparing it impartially with the rule of duty, will see great cause to be humbled, and to mourn over their sins. Neither their hearts nor houses will be found what they ought to be: but it will be their earnest desire, aim, and prayer, that their families may be the accepted servants of God, without which no outward prosperity will satisfy their minds; and if, through their own negligence, or occasional misconduct, they are otherwise; they will be the more earnest in supplication for them, that they may not perish with the sons of Belial.—Yet in all their troubles, true believers, being conscious that they "have fled for refuge to the hope set before them" in the gospel, and having experienced the power of renewing grace, may rejoice that the Lord hath made with them an everlasting covenant; and may meditate with comfort on the rich provision and firm security of it: and seeing all their salvation there treasured up, and there finding all their desires centre, they may cheerfully bear up under all they feel or fear, and look forward with joyful hope of complete deliverance.—Such, as are in reality partakers of divine grace, will long for more holiness: and they who, in this imperfect state, are satisfied with their own attainments, have no good ground to consider themselves as true Christians.

V. 8-32. The Lord dispenses all his gifts as he pleases, and there are various degrees of eminence and usefulness among able and serviceable men. Whether our talents therefore be more or fewer, the honour of them belongs to God, and we ought to improve them for the benefit of the church, and of the world, without envying or despising others.—In a good cause we should willingly venture, and endure hardship, even when deserted by those who ought to help us; for the Lord will be our helper: and we should allow others, sometimes to share the advantages, who would not expose themselves with us for the public good.—The habit of wishing and hankering after those things which Providence withholds, though natural to us, and often given way to by godly men in an unguarded hour, is indeed a degree of rebellion against the Lord; and it shews the remaining sensuality and selfishness of the heart, and leads to many snares and evils. Upon recollection and experience, a wise man will be ashamed of this folly; and will abstain, not only from unlawful indulgences, but from those also which are inexpedient, and might expose his brethren to temptation and danger.—Were we but as much attached to the person and cause of the Captain of our salvation, and as much pleased to shew our love and gratitude to him, by doing his will and promoting his honour, as some soldiers have been to a beloved prince or commander; how self-denying, and ready for every service and suffering, should we be, and how glad to spend or to lay down our lives for his sake! Yet surely, never ruler or captain was of so excellent a character as ours; his commands are all righteous and beneficial, his authority is an inexpressible blessing. The obligations that he has conferred on his soldiers and servants, the love he bears to them, and the honours that he has prepared for the meanest of them, are beyond all computation or conception. The blessings which he freely bestows, were dearly purchased by him; and for them when rebels and enemies! "Precious in his sight is the death of his saints:" he will expose them to no danger or loss, but for their good; he will comfort them under every suffering; and finally deliver them, and present them and all their services, as an oblation to the glory of God. Under his command, and refreshed by the waters of life which he bestows, we may venture to engage, yea, defy, all our adversaries at the greatest disadvantage, and shall be able to turn their own arms upon them. Though not numbered with apostles and prophets, our names and services will be recorded in the book of life; and not a cup of cold water, given for his sake, shall be unrewarded: yea, the willing mind to suffer for him, shall be accepted, as if we had actually shed our blood in his cause. But, as he hath shed his blood for sinners, let all beware of neglecting so great salvation; for the sons of Belial, especially the abusers of his truth, and the persecutors of his people, will be thrust away as thorns into the everlasting fire of hell.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIV. V. 1, 2. (Note, 2 Chr. xxi. 1.) The Israelites had offended God, by their ungrateful and repeated rebellions against David; by not duly profiting under the means employed for the revival of religion; and probably by that pride, luxury, and ungodliness, which generally spring from great prosperity. They had before, in a famine which lasted three years, experienced the effects of the Divine displeasure, and it is likely they had not been amended by the correction: but some think, that the sin immediately intended, was the setting up Absalom for king, and rebelling against David. (Note, 1 Sam. viii. 6-9. Hos. viii. 2-4.) This David had cordially forgiven: but it was a national defection from God, which he did not judge it proper to leave unpunished. So that, "again the anger of the Lord was kindled against Israel;" and he permitted Satan to tempt and prevail against David, that in chastising him, he might punish them. David's thought and purpose of numbering the people, sprang from his remaining depravity, excited by Satan's suggestions: and as this "was of the Lord," (in the same manner, that it was of him that the Canaanites should be hardened, and that Ahab should be deceived,) he withdrew every internal or external restraint, and left him to follow his own counsels. (Marg. Ref.) Thus, by a manner of expression common in Scripture, the Lord is said to have "moved David against Israel;" for certainly this is the most natural construction of the words: (Marg. Note, 1 Chr. xxi. 1:) but other passages prove, that the sinful disposition and resolution could not be from God, though he both permitted them, and overruled them to accomplish his own wise and righteous purposes: and this example throws light upon the doctrine of God's providential government of the world, and suggests many practical instructions. (Notes, xii. 11. Gen. i. 20. 1 Kings xxii. 20-23.)—But what constituted David's sin in numbering the people? Some expositors think it was a contempt of the promise that they should be innumerable; and that they ought not to have been numbered without express command, as in the days of Moses: and others suppose, that David neglected to collect the half-shekel, a piece for the use of the sanctuary, which should have attended the numbering of them. (Notes, Gen. xiii. 16. Ex. xxx. 11-16.) It, however, seems evident, that pride both induced David to this measure, and rendered it so very displeasing to the Lord. Elated with the prosperity and extent of his dominions, he wished to know, and that others might know, the number of his subjects who were capable of bearing arms. This originated from an ambitious curiosity, and an ostentatious vanity; and probably it was accompanied with a secret complacency in his own good conduct, under whose government Israel had attained this prosperity, and with an improper dependence on the number and valour of his forces. As he was far advanced in life, he probably indulged the idea of having it said, how populous and flourishing a kingdom he had left to his posterity. It is likewise evident, that the chastisement was especially levelled against his pride and ambition. These evils had before been secretly indulged: but the Lord would have restrained them, had he not seen it best to permit them to break forth, both for the people's punishment, and David's deeper humiliation; as a physician permits some

6 Then they came to ¹Gilead, and to the ²land of Tahtim-hodshi; and they came to ³Dan-jaan, and about to ⁴Zidon,

7 And came to the strong hold of ⁵Tyre, and to all the cities of the Hivites, and of the Canaanites: and they went out to the south of Judah, even ⁶to Beer-sheba.

8 So when they had gone through all the land, they came to Jerusalem at the end of nine months and twenty days.

9 And Joab gave up the sum of the number of the people unto the king: and there were in Israel ⁷eight hundred thousand valiant men that drew the sword; and the men of Judah were five hundred thousand men.

10 ¶ And ⁸David's heart smote him after that he had numbered the people. And David said unto the LORD, 'I have sinned greatly in that I have done: and now I beseech thee, O LORD, 'take away the iniquity of thy servant; for I have done very ⁹foolishly.

11 For when David was up in the morning, the word of the LORD came unto the prophet ¹⁰Gad, David's ¹¹seer, saying, unto him, Shall ¹⁴seven years of famine come unto thee in thy land? or wilt thou ¹⁵flee three months before thine enemies, while they pursue thee? or that there be ¹⁶three days' pestilence in thy land? now advise, and see what answer I shall return to him that sent me.

14 And David said unto Gad, 'I am in a great strait: let us fall now into the hand of the LORD; for his mercies are ¹⁷great: and ¹⁸let me not fall into the hand of man.

15 ¶ So ¹⁹the LORD sent a pestilence upon Israel from the morning even to the time appointed: and there died of the people ²⁰from Dan even to Beer-sheba ²¹seventy thousand men.

16 And when ²²the angel stretched out his hand upon Jerusalem to destroy it, the LORD ²³repented him of the evil, and said to the angel that destroyed the people, ²⁴It is enough: stay now thine hand. And the angel of the LORD was by the threshing-place of ²⁵Araunah ²⁶the Jebusite.

17 And David ²⁷spoke unto the LORD when he saw the angel that smote the people, and said, 'Lo, I have sinned, and I have done wickedly: but ²⁸these sheep, what have they done? ²⁹let thine hand, I pray thee, be against me, and against my father's house.

of modern memoirs, by friends of the deceased; how many things would have been concealed, or thrown into the back ground; how much palliated; and what eulogiums would have been paid to his excellent and honourable actions! Thus David's character would have appeared more faultless: but his history would have been so much the less instructive.

V. 12—14. Though the Lord intended to forgive the sin of his repenting servant, as to his personal concern: yet as it was a public offence, he would correct it a public manner, by destroying his subjects before his eyes. (Notes, 1, 2. 2 Kings xxiii. 26, 27. xxiv. 3, 4. 2 Chr. xxxiii. 12—17.) This would be extremely distressing to him, both because of his affection for them, and because they suffered in consequence of his pride and ambition.—Only three years of famine are proposed in Chronicles: but such variations frequently occur, and are probably owing to some trivial errors of the transcribers in so long a course of years; especially as the numbers were distinguished by marks which might easily be mistaken.—In this distressing difficulty, David preferred a calamity which came immediately from God, whose mercies he knew to be very great, to those in which men were concerned; who would have triumphed in the miseries of Israel, and thus have been hardened in their idolatry. He seems also to have chosen the pestilence in preference to the famine: not only because the land had already been visited with one famine of three years' continuance, from which perhaps it was scarcely recovered; and because he and his family would be as much exposed to the pestilence, as the poorest Israelite: but especially that he might continue for a shorter time under the Divine rebuke, however severe it might be.—'They that fear the Lord will prepare their heart, and humble their souls in his sight, saying, We will fall into the hands of the LORD, and not into the hands of men: for as his majesty is, so is his mercy.' (Ecclesiasticus ii. 17, 18.) (Note, Heb. x. 31.)

V. 15, 16. The time appointed may mean either, the close of the third day: or, as it is more probable, the appointed hour of the evening-sacrifice on the first day. For 'the LORD repented him of the evil,' which implies, that he did not proceed to the extent of the judgment denounced. Yet seventy thousand died in the different parts of the land, in about as few hours, as Joab had employed months in numbering the people; and this apparently by the ministration of a single angel! (Notes, Ex. xii. 29, 30. 2 Kings xix. 35. Heb. xi. 28.) 'If it (the pestilence) had raged three days, and in every nine hours had killed so many, above a third part of those who had been numbered would have died of the plague: but, as Kimchi here observes, by the great mercy of God the time was contracted.' (Bp. Patrick.) (Notes, Num. xvi. 45—50. 1 Cor. x. 6—10.)

V. 17. Probably, the angel had before been invisible: but at length David, lifted up his eyes, and saw the angel of the LORD stand between the earth, and the heaven, having a drawn sword in his hand, stretched over Jerusalem; then David and the elders of Israel, who were clothed in sackcloth, fell on their faces. The "drawn sword" was an emblem of the Divine justice about to be executed upon the city. David had before humbled himself in the sight of God, and, no doubt, had earnestly interceded for the people; but this sight affected him more than ever: and, while he and the elders prostrated themselves upon the ground, he poured out his soul before God in fervent prayer for his subjects, and especially for Jerusalem. He pleaded, that "he had commanded the people to be numbered," that "he had sinned, and done evil indeed;" and intreated that, as the whole blame belonged to him, so the indignation might cease in the punishment of him and his family. (1 Chr. xxi. 14—17.) His guilt indeed occasioned the judgment: but the people were far from that innocence which David supposed; for their wickedness was in reality disorders to come forward to a crisis, that the cure may be radical; which is more salutary than merely for a time to suspend their effects. (Notes, 2 Kings xx. 12—19. 2 Chr. xxxii. 24—26. 2 Cor. xii. 1—6.)

V. 3, 4. Joab readily perceived, that David's purpose arose from ambition, and was inconsistent with his character and interest: and that if he persevered to "delight in," or require, "such a thing, it would be a cause of trespass," i. e. of guilt and punishment "to Israel." On this occasion he spoke with great reason and temper; expressed much affection both for his prince and country; and even assumed an appearance of piety: and David would have shewn his wisdom, had he yielded to his remonstrances. Yet the king's word prevailed, but "it was abominable to Joab;" and as he and the captains set about it reluctantly, we may suppose that they did not perform it very exactly. 'It is something strange, that Joab should see the danger of this, and David not think of it; no, not when it was so plainly represented to him. But the best of men are sometimes very drowsy, and apprehend not those things, which plainly appear to those who are not so good.' (Bp. Patrick.) A considerable degree of self-will, and precipitation, was manifested in David's conduct, respecting this measure. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 5—8. Joab and his assistants began, by numbering the inhabitants of the country to the east of Jordan; thence they proceeded to the northern part of the land; and, passing through the regions to the west of Jordan, they numbered all the men capable of bearing arms, (except the Levites and Benjaminites;) having spent almost ten months in accomplishing it! (Note, 2 Chr. xxi. 6.) (Marg. Ref.)

V. 9. The numbers, as stated in Chronicles, are very different from those here given: and in order to reconcile them, it is thought that the regular troops, serving in rotation every month, and amounting to two hundred and eighty-eight thousand, (besides their officers, as it is supposed,) are included in the one account, but not in the other. (Note, 1 Chr. xxvii. 1—15.) If these are added to the men of Israel, as here numbered; and a due proportion taken from the men of Judah for their part of this militia; the round numbers will amount to nearly the same in both places.—This is, however, uncertain: and as Levi and Benjamin were not numbered, we may suppose that in other respects the accounts were inaccurate: and it might please God thus to order it, that David at last "might not know the number of the people."—It is remarkable that the Israelites had not multiplied when possessed of Canaan, in any proportion to what they had done during their bondage in Egypt. (Note, Ex. i. 7.)

V. 10. David was not convinced of the evil of his conduct, until he received an account of the numbers which had been rated, and then "his heart smote him;" he became sensible that he had displeased the Lord, and earnestly besought forgiveness. Notes, Ez. xi. 17—20. 1 John iii. 18—24.) 'When he ordered it, he was possessed of other thoughts; and did not seriously reflect upon what he had done, till God touched his heart with a sense of his guilt after the sin was committed.' (Bp. Patrick.)

V. 11. Literally: "And David arose in the morning; and the word of the LORD was," &c. It is probable, that David had become sensible of his sin, and had offered his humble confession and supplication before God over-night, or in the night; before Gad delivered his message to him in the morning.—Gad was called David's seer, for he had long been employed as the messenger of God to him, and David had paid great regard to his admonitions; (Notes, 1 Sam. ix. 6—10. xxii 5;) and he also complied, in part at least, the annals of David's last years; (Note, 1 Chr. xxix. 29;) with an impartiality unprecedented, except in the inspired writers.—Had David's history been written in the manner the cause of the calamity. (Note, 1, 2.) His intercession however prevailed: and it was doubtless in answer to his prayer, that the Lord said to the destroying angel, "It is enough; stay now thine hand."

V. 18—25. (Note, 1 Chr. xxi. 20.) Araunah, or Ornan, though a Jebusite by birth, seems to have been cordially attached to the interests of David and of Israel; and was permitted to possess a threshing-floor, and some contiguous estate, near mount Zion. On that very spot the angel of the Lord appeared, and thence spake to Gad, (1 Chr. xxi. 18:) that he should order David to build an altar there; whose ready obedience afforded Araunah an opportunity of shewing his veneration for the king, his affection for Israel, and his liberality in the service of God and for the public advantage. With a generosity like that of a king, he was ready to give David the oxen, threshing-floor, and all that appertained to it, that he might offer the appointed sacrifices: but David did not think it right to accept of them; and therefore he gave him fifty shekels of silver for the oxen and the wood, and six hundred shekels of gold for the ground; for this is the most obvious way of reconciling this account with that in Chronicles. (1 Chr. xxi. 24.) There the sacrifices were offered, and "the Lord answered by fire from heaven;" Notes, Lev. ix. 24. 1 Kings xviii. 38, 39. 1 Chr. xxi. 26. 2 Chr. vii. 1—3.) and the plague was stayed. On this very spot, bought of a gentile, the temple was soon after built, no doubt by the express command of God. (Note, 1 Chr. xxi. 1.—2 Chr. iii. 1.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—9. In the righteous government of God, rulers and their subjects have a reciprocal influence on one another. Like the members in the human body, they are interested in each other's conduct and welfare; and cannot sin or suffer without mutually affecting each other.—When the wickedness of nations provokes God, he leaves princes to adopt pernicious measures, or to commit atrocious crimes, which bring calamities on the people: and when the ruler commits iniquity, he is punished, by the diminution of his power, and by witnessing the distresses of his subjects. Instead therefore of mutual recriminations under public calamities, however occasioned, all parties should be reminded to repent of their own sins, and to practise their own duties. Princes should hence be instructed, even for their own sakes, to repress wickedness, and to promote righteousness in their dominions, as well as to set a good example: and the people, for the public benefit, should concur in salutary measures, and pray continually for their rulers.—The remains of sin live, and will often revive, in the best of men, as long as they continue in this world: and the wisest are soon induced to do very foolishly, when God leaves them to themselves, and permits Satan to tempt them: and against this there is no security, except humble watchfulness and unceasing prayer.—Pride, in all its varied exercises, is the sin of fallen man, as well as of fallen angels: it is the substance of spiritual wickedness, the rival and enemy of the glory and authority of God, and equally averse to the submissive obedience of the law, and the sovereign grace of the gospel. (Notes, Dan. iv. 28—37. Jam. iv. 4—6.) Yet this hateful evil mixes with and defiles the best of our services. Even the believer often sacrilegiously assumes to himself the glory which belongs to God; idolatrously confides in himself, or in some creature; ostentatiously courts that admiration and applause, of which the Lord alone is worthy; and becomes vain of those endowments or possessions, which he had no share in procuring, and cannot secure for one hour! Those, who are altogether proud, God will resist and fight against to their destruction: and he will detect and chastise the indulged pride of those who, upon the whole, are humbled before him as mean sinful creatures, and yet inconsistently value and prefer themselves upon some incidental advantages! Through this hateful principle it comes to pass, that we so readily can spy a mote in our brother's eye, and yet remain unconscious of a beam in our own: so that even ungodly men can discern those evil tempers and that unbecoming conduct in eminent believers, of which themselves remain unconscious! (Note, Matt. vii. 3—5.) This should warn Christians to walk circumspectly, lest their mistakes should encourage others in unbelief and ungodliness: and it is sometimes a part of our chastisement to be shamed and rebuked by men of very bad characters. Yet they, who have no real piety, may, on personal and relative accounts, be sincerely attached to the interests of true Christians; and in a certain way have the cause of religion much at heart, as it happens to be connected with that of their party or their friends: but they cannot love the disciple simply because he loves and bears the image of his Master. They sometimes, however, give good advice supported by solid arguments: they can foresee consequences which the believer does not suspect, and sincerely endeavour to prevent them; and they can mingle their expostulations with affectionate good wishes, and a kind of prayers for their welfare and success.—These things do not prove a man to be a partaker of the grace of God; but they entitled him so far to the attention of godly persons. It is indeed a shame for us to require and delight in those things, that such men perceive to be wrong: and it is our own fault, if we do not in many ways profit by their advice and cautions.—But when authority prevails against reason and truth, pernicious effects must follow: yet this is so common, that they who possess much power and influence, rarely acquit themselves honourably as professors of godliness.—Men seldom accomplish to good purpose those services, in which they reluctantly engage: and God does not generally allow those whom he loves, the satisfactions which they sinfully covet.

V. 10—25. Where grace possesses the heart, a man's conscience, on reflection, will reproach him with his transgressions: and he will not only be frightened and distressed, (which the hypocrite may be,) but he will be humbled before God, and with ingenuous confessions and fervent prayers, seek forgiveness from him, sincerely purposing by his grace no more to return to folly: and thus a man's pride will prove an occasion of increasing his humility. (Note, 2 Chr. xxxii. 25, 26.)—But when God corrects the transgressions of his people; by the anguish of their souls, in the great straits to which he reduces them, he makes them taste the bitterness of their sins, and perceive his abhorrence of them.—Whatever we idolize, or grow proud of, will generally be taken from us, or converted into a cross: and no aggravation or affliction is more painful to generous minds, than the reflection, that others whom they love are suffering on their account. This is a common case in kingdoms and families: and perhaps, while ministers mourn over the state of their congregations; they may sometimes profitably enquire, whether their own supineness, pride, want of zeal and simplicity, their self-indulgence, or conformity to the world, do not bring a secret blight upon their labours, although more open evils do not bring a blot upon their profession? and whether the people's souls are not suffering, for their correction, and to bring them to deeper humiliation, greater fervency in prayer, and a more spiritual frame of mind, and devotedness to God? And surely we should choose to be chastened in our own persons, rather than that the blessing should be withheld from our congregations: for, though the Lord is righteous in these dispensations; yet the people have not deserved at our hands, that we should occasion this evil to them.—Grace teaches men to condemn themselves rather than others, and to seek the interests of their fellow-creatures in many respects before their own: and earnest prayers offered in this temper of mind, by those who unreservedly cast themselves on the mercies of the Lord, are very prevalent. For "he is slow to anger, and ready to forgive:" and he never fails of his promises, though he readily recedes from his threatenings in behalf of the humbled sinner.—If the power of angels is so terrible, what is that of the Almighty Creator! and as they are so obedient to their Maker's word, and so prompt in executing his will: we ought carefully to imitate them, especially in the delightful service of "ministering to the heirs of salvation."—Death is continually, and in so many forms and so suddenly, destroying all around, that it is madness not to be expecting, and preparing for, the closing scene.—Through the great sacrifice and intercession of the Saviour, the vilest sinner may approach a reconciled God: and, being justified by faith in his blood, may become his servant and child, and be made meet for his eternal kingdom.—This message, the ministers of God propose to men, that they may "advise, and consider what answer they will return to him that sent them;" and they affectionately long that sinners would thankfully accept of this great salvation. Though men are required to forsake sin, to renounce the world and its friendship, and to deny themselves, if they would be Christ's disciples; yet surely this need not reduce them to a great strait, for he will supply every want, make up every loss, and give them a hundredfold more in this present time, for all they part with for his sake.—Grace will teach men liberality when the honour of God and the good of his people require it: and extraordinary occasions require extraordinary disinterestedness. But we should not encroach on those who are willing to give, or prefer a cheap religion. All we possess, and are, belongs to God, and we should desire to employ in his immediate service, that measure of our time and substance, which he requires: and whilst we simply follow his directions, we shall speedily obtain the comfort of his pardoning love, and also be instrumental in averting his wrath from others.

THE FIRST BOOK OF THE

K I N G S

COMMONLY CALLED

THE THIRD BOOK OF THE KINGS.

The two following books contain, as their name imports, the history of Judah and Israel, under the government of kings, from the close of David's reign to the Babylonish captivity, during about four hundred and twenty-seven years. They seem originally to have formed but one book, and to have been called, Vah-melech David, from the first words; but they were afterwards divided into two, and called "The first and second books of the Kings;" and in some versions, "The third and fourth books of the Kings."—It is evident that they contain an abstract of the history, compiled from much more copious records, which seems to have been collected and preserved by contemporary prophets: (xi. 41. xiv. 29. xv. 31. xxii. 39. 45. 2 Chr. ix. 29. xii. 15. xiii. 22. xx. 34. xxvi. 22:.) and indeed a considerable part of the transactions of their own times, is recorded in connexion with the prophecies of Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel. It is, however, uncertain by whom this compilation was made: but, if Ezra, as it is generally and probably supposed, compiled the books of Chronicles; it is not likely, that, (according to the opinion of some learned men,) he compiled these also: as they form a distinct history of the same times. If, therefore, they were arranged in the present manner, principally by one sacred writer, they, who ascribe them to Jeremiah, seem to have adopted the more probable opinion. Indeed, the second book of the Kings, and his prophecy, end with the narrative of the same events; though, perhaps, both were added after his death by another hand; and it is not unlikely that some other trivial alterations were made in the days of Ezra, to render the narrative more perspicuous to the Jews after the captivity.—They have, however, been constantly received, both by Jews and Christians, as a part of the sacred canon, the holy Scriptures: and the events recorded are frequently referred to in the New Testament. (Matt. i. 7—12. vi. 29. xii. 42. Luke, iv. 25—27. Acts, ii. 29. vii. 47—50. Jam. v. 17, 18.) It is observable also, that our Lord and his apostle James not only speak of them as authentic records, and a part of the sacred oracles as received by the Jews; but especially attest some of the most wonderful miracles recorded in them; and thus affix a direct sanction to them, as given by inspiration of God.—They also contain many prophecies; especially that of Josiah, who was foretold by name three hundred years before his birth; (Note, 1 Kings, xiii. 2:) but none of these predictions, in their most evident literal meaning, refer to events later than the Babylonish captivity.—After the death of David, the sacred historian records the principal transactions of Solomon's long and peaceable reign; which, however, was covered with a dark cloud towards the close: and under his successor, the nation was divided into the two distinct kingdoms of Judah and Israel.—The descendants of Solomon reigned over that of Judah till the captivity, for about three hundred and eighty-seven years. So that from the accession of David, during a course of four hundred and sixty-seven years, the throne was filled by his descendants, in lineal descent, except as the sons of Josiah succeeded one another. During this long term of years there was not a single revolution, or civil war; and but one short interruption, by Athaliah's usurpation. Perhaps it would be difficult to find, in universal history, any thing equal to this permanent internal order and tranquillity. Let the reader recollect how many revolutions, civil wars, murders of reigning kings by rivals and successors, and changes in the succession, are found in the English history, during the same number of years.—Above half the kings of Judah supported true religion, and many of them were eminently pious men: and it is remarkable that their reigns were much longer, than those of the wicked princes; (xi. 42. xv. 10. xxii. 42. 2 Kings, xv. 2. 33. xviii. 2. xxii. 1;) so that they comprise much above three hundred years of this period; and the greatest part of this time was evidently passed, either in profound peace, or in remarkable prosperity. Let this state of things be compared with the history of Greece or Rome; and the situation of Judah must be allowed to have been vastly more desirable, than that of these celebrated heathen nations.—The kingdom of Israel continued about two hundred and fifty-four years, till the Assyrian captivity. The nineteen kings, of several families, who, during this period, reigned in succession, were all idolaters, and most of them monsters of iniquity: yet the Lord by his prophets, especially by Elijah and Elisha, preserved a considerable degree of true religion in the land, till the measure of their national wickedness was full; and then they were finally dispersed among the Gentiles: except as a remnant of them was incorporated among the Jews.—In these books the history of the two kingdoms is carried on together; and the whole forms an admirable comment on the prophecies delivered to the nation by Moses and Joshua; (Notes, Lev. xxvi. Deut. iv. xxviii. xxix. xxx. xxxi. xxxii. Josh. xxiii. 15, 16;) and a striking illustration of the proverb, "Righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is the reproach of any people." This first book contains the history of about a hundred and twenty years. Connected with the peace and prosperity of Solomon's reign, and the fame of his wisdom; a full account is given of the temple having been built by him. God, had commanded Israel to offer all their sacrifices at one place; Shiloh had for some time been that place; and the ark had been removed to Zion, by David, in order that a temple might there be built, which Solomon his son accomplished. Now a large proportion of the subsequent parts of the Old Testament relate to this temple; to the sins of the people in sacrificing elsewhere; to their profanation of the temple; to the judgments of God upon them for these crimes; especially to the destruction of the temple by the Chaldeans; and to the rebuilding of it by Zerubbabel. These things so run through all the subsequent history and prophecies; that if Solomon did not build the temple by the express command of God, it must follow, that God punished the nation with tremendous judgments for violating merely human appointments.—When the Samaritans preferred mount Gerizim, our Lord told the woman of Samaria, that they "knew not what they worshipped, for salvation was of the Jews:" and this declaration, with his own constant attendance at the ordinances there administered, sufficiently attest the divine inspiration of those records, in which alone it is expressly declared, that Solomon built the temple by the direction and appointment of God himself.—Solomon's fall into idolatry seems evidently implied in the book of Ecclesiastes: and the history of Rehoboam's imprudence, the division of his kingdom, Jeroboam's idolatry, and the subsequent events to the end of the book, are assumed as undoubted facts in the writings of all the prophets. So entirely does the whole canon of Scripture coincide; while each part confirms, and receives confirmation from, all the rest.

CHAP. I.

Abishag is procured, to cherish David in his old age and sickness, 1—4. Adonijah gains over Joab and Abiathar, and aspires to the throne, 5—10. Nathan counsels Bath-sheba, who speaks to David, and is seconded by Nathan, 11—27. David assures Bath-sheba, by an oath, that Solomon shall succeed him; and gives orders that he should, that day, be anointed and proclaimed king, 28—37. Zadok and Nathan execute these orders, and the people rejoice, 38—40. Jonathan informs Adonijah and his company; and they hastily disperse, 41—49. Adonijah flees to the horns of the altar, and obtains from Solomon a conditional pardon, 50—58.

NOW king David was ^aold ^band ^cstricken in years; and they covered him with clothes, but he gat no heat.

(if they may be so called,) to excite in him a due degree of animal heat, especially when we advert to the pains bestowed to find out a very fair damsel for the purpose, deserves much censure: though similar advice has often been given in other ages and countries. We may suppose, that David acceded to it merely in compliance with their wishes, and in deference to their judgment;

NOTES.

CHAP. I. V. 1—4. David was seventy years old when he died, and these events occurred not long before. He seems to have been a healthy man: yet his constitution was entirely worn out; perhaps in some measure through his great exertions in his various wars.—The counsel of his courtiers, or physicians, but the appearance was not at all becoming his character, and circumstances. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 5, 6. Adonijah could not be ignorant, that Solomon had been appointed by God himself to succeed David in the kingdom; (Notes, ii. 15-18. 2 Sam. vii. 12-16. 1 Chr. xxii. 8-10. xxiii. 1.-xxviii. 5;) and his whole conduct shews, that he considered him alone as his rival. After the death of Absalom, Adonijah was David's eldest son: and no doubt he considered the kingdom as his birthright, and confided in the support of the people to seize upon it; without any regard to his father, or to the revealed will of God. It is remarkable how frequently the first-born were set aside by his express appointment. In the ordinary course of things, it is expedient that the primogeniture should have the precedence; and the judicial law of Moses, (as well as the civil laws of most nations,) was formed accordingly. But the examples of Jacob, Judah, the sons of Joseph, David, Solomon, and others, prove that this is not grounded on moral obligation, is not divine, or unalterable, or to be put in competition with the welfare of whole nations, and the liberty and rights of all the rest of mankind; according to the sentiments of some authors, who most absurdly ground their doctrine upon the word of God, though it is evidently contradictory to it!—Absalom had been displeased with his father, though unjustly, because of the disgrace under which he laid him for the murder of Amnon: (Note, 2 Sam. xiv. 28, 29;) but David had never given Adonijah the least cause of displeasure; except that, in obedience to God, he intended Solomon to be his successor. It is probable, that Adonijah was of an imperious disposition; and David very imprudently indulged him, and never restrained or reproved him in any matter. This was David's fault: for he ought to have exerted his authority, and kept him in subjection; but at the same time it aggravated Adonijah's contempt and ingratitude. He seems to have greatly resembled his elder brother Absalom: like him, he was too much indulged and beloved on account of his exterior accomplishments: (Notes, 2 Sam. xiv. 25-27. xv. 1-6;) and he succeeded to his ambitious projects, though he concealed and deferred them, till his father was, as he supposed, finally incapacitated for business.

V. 7. It seems wonderful that Joab and Abiathar, who were persons of years, experience, and capacity; who had long attended on David, and were highly preferred under him; and who doubtless understood his intentions concerning Solomon, should at last concur in Adonijah's conspiracy. But perhaps Joab, though attached to David, was not favourable to Solomon, and preferred Adonijah as more congenial with his own disposition. Being destitute of piety, he disregarded the Divine appointment, and deemed it more politic to place the eldest son upon the throne; and no wrong to David, who, he might think, injured Adonijah in preferring his younger brother. Perhaps he was still afraid of being called to account for his murders; and hoped to secure himself, to continue his preferment, and to increase his influence, by helping Adonijah to the kingdom; and it may be supposed, that he secretly resented David's conduct in attempting to lay him aside, and to put Amasa in his place. (Notes, 2 Sam. xix. 9-15. xx. 5-10.)—Abiathar, though high priest, seems to have been less regarded by David than Zadok was: (Note, 2 Sam. xv. 24-29;) and perhaps he suspected that Solomon would set his family aside, in favour of the line of Eleazar to which Zadok belonged; but by attaching himself to Adonijah, he hastened that event, and shewed, that David had good reasons for preferring Zadok, who probably was a man of more serious religion. (Notes, ii. 26, 27. 35. 1 Sam. ii. 31-36.)

V. 8-10. Adonijah knew that it would be in vain and dangerous, to tamper with Zadok, Nathan, and Benaiah, who were firmly attached to the cause of Solomon, as well as that of David.—It is highly improbable, that Shimei, the Benjamite, would be much regarded by either party. (Notes, ii. 8, 9. 36-46. 2 Sam. xvi. 5-15. xix. 19-23.) Solomon afterwards preferred a person of this name, (iv, 18;) and, probably, he was a man of considerable consequence. (Note, Zech. xii. 9-14.)—We know nothing further of Rei, but no doubt he was a person of rank and great influence.—The mighty men were the chieftains before enumerated. (Marg. Ref.)—It is most likely that Adonijah made a solemn sacrifice, as well as a magnificent feast, on the occasion; and thus he concealed his designs, till ripe for execution.—En-rogel was in the vicinity of Jerusalem. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 11-14. Solomon could not be ignorant of Adonijah's intentions, of which he made no secret: but he remained quiet, and left his cause with God. His life and succession were secured by promise: yet it was proper that Nathan and Bath-sheba should use prudent means for his preservation, and the maintenance of his right. Had Adonijah succeeded, he would, no doubt, have put Solomon and Bath-sheba to death: for the history of the world demonstrates, that when men are aspiring after dominion, they are easily tempted to the most enormous crimes which seem necessary for their purpose, even when most contrary to their apparent natural disposition. (Notes, Judg. ix. 4-6. 2 Kings xi. 1, 2. Matt. ii. 3-6. 16-18. Marg. Ref.)

V. 15-18. It is not recorded, on what occasion David swore to Bath-sheba, that Solomon should succeed him: but it is supposed with probability, that it took place after Absalom's rebellion; and as God himself had settled the succession, he might very properly give her this assurance.—David was aware that Adonijah had taken great state upon him; but he did not know that he had actually advanced a claim to the kingdom: this both enhanced Adonijah's crime, and pleaded David's excuse.

V. 20. The people knew, "That the Spirit of the Lord spake by David, and his word was in his tongue:" (Note, 2 Sam. xxiii. 1, 2;) and they had great confidence in his wisdom, piety, and affection. They therefore waited to know the will of God from him. David, though anointed to the kingdom, did not assume regal authority at first, without the concurrence of the elders of 25 For he is gone down this day, and hath slain oxen, and fat cattle, and sheep in abundance, and hath called all the king's sons, and the captains of the host, and Abiathar the priest; and, behold, they eat and drink before him, and say, "God save king Adonijah."

26 But me, even "me thy servant, and Zadok the priest, and Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, and thy servant Solomon, hath he not called.

27 Is this thing done by my lord the king, and thou hast not shewed it unto thy servant, who should sit on the throne of my lord the king after him?

28 ¶ Then king David answered and said, Call me Bath-sheba. And she came into the king's presence, and stood before the king.

29 And the king sware, and said, "As the LORD liveth that hath redeemed my soul of all distress, 30 Even "as I swear unto thee by the LORD God of Israel, saying, Assuredly Solomon thy son shall reign after me, and he shall sit upon my throne in my stead; even so will I certainly do this day.

31 Then Bath-sheba bowed with her face to the earth, and did reverence to the king, and said, "Let my lord king David live for ever.

32 ¶ And king David said, Call me "Zadok the priest, and Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah the son of Jehoiada. And they came before the king.

33 The king also said unto them, Take with you the servants of your lord, and cause Solomon my son to ride upon mine own mule, and bring him down to "Gihon.

34 And let "Zadok the priest and Nathan the prophet anoint him there king over Israel: and blow ye with the trumpet, and say, "God save king Solomon.

35 Then ye shall come up after him, that he may come and sit upon my throne; for he shall be king in my stead: and "I have appointed him to be ruler over Israel and over Judah.

36 And Benaiah the son of Jehoiada answered the king, and said, "Amen: "the LORD God of my lord the king say so too.

37 As "the LORD hath been with my lord the king, even so be he with Solomon, and make his throne greater than the throne of my lord king David.

38 So "Zadok the priest, and Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, and "the Cherethites, Judah and Israel; (Notes, 2 Sam. ii. 4. v. 1—5. xix. 9—15.) and after Absalom's rebellion, he did not return to the exercise of it without their approbation. He could not therefore claim a right to dispose of the kingdom by will, as if it had been his own private property: but he might very properly inform the people of the Lord's appointment in that behalf; (Note, 1 Sam. viii. 19—22:) and so far from eagerly joining Adonijah, as they had done Absalom; they remained in suspense, till his determination was notified.

V. 23. He bowed, &c. The exterior indications of civil honour, to persons in authority, were generally rendered by the most eminent servants and prophets of God. The refusal of them may arise from an erroneous conscience; but it has the appearance of pride and affected moroseness. (Acts xxvi. 25.)

V. 25—27. (Marg. Ref.) As the business was so public, and such eminent persons were concerned, it had the appearance of being countenanced by the king: but after all that had passed, the prophet could not believe, that David would have taken such a step without informing him.

V. 29. (Notes, Gen. xlviii. 16. 2 Sam. iv. 9.)

V. 31. Live for ever. This common expression of loyalty and affection to princes, as here used, implied, that Bath-sheba cordially desired the continuance of David's life, in preference to her son's succession to the throne. (Notes, Neh. ii. 3. Dan. ii. 4.)

V. 36, 37. The language of Benaiah, on this occasion, not only expressed the most loyal attachment to Solomon, but also fervent piety; and an earnest desire of the prosperity of Israel, under the government which God had placed over them.—This instance serves to explain the original use and emphasis of the word Amen. (Notes, Deut. xxvii. 15—26. Ps. lxxii. 17—19. Matt. vi. 13.)

V. 38. Gihon. A fountain near Jerusalem. (2 Chr. xxxii. 30.)

V. 38, 39. (Notes, 1 Chr. xxiii. 1. 2. xxix. 21—25.)—An horn, &c. (39.) Neither Absalom, nor Adonijah, regarded this expressive ceremony; perhaps presuming on the right of primogeniture, for we do not find that kings, who and the Pelethites went down, and caused Solomon to ride upon "king David's mule, and brought him to Gihon.

39 And Zadok the priest took "an horn of oil out of the tabernacle, and "anointed Solomon. And they blew the trumpet; and "all the people said, God save king Solomon.

40 And all the people came up after him; and the people piped with "pipes, and "rejoiced with great joy, so that the earth rent with the sound of them.

41 ¶ And Adonijah and all the guests that were with him heard it, "as they had made an end of eating. And when Joab heard the sound of the trumpet, he said, "Wherefore is this noise of "the city being in an uproar?

42 And while he yet spake, behold, "Jonathan the son of Abiathar the priest came; and Adonijah said unto him, Come in; for thou art "a valiant man, and bringest good tidings.

43 And Jonathan answered and said to Adonijah, "Verily our lord king David hath made Solomon king.

44 And the king hath sent with him Zadok the priest, and Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, and the Cherethites, and the Pelethites, and they have caused him to ride upon the king's mule.

45 And Zadok the priest and Nathan the prophet have anointed him king in Gihon: and they are come up from thence rejoicing, so that "the city rang again. "This is the noise that ye have heard.

46 And also Solomon "sitteth on the throne of the kingdom.

47 And moreover, the king's servants came to "bless our lord king David, saying, "God make the name of Solomon better than thy name, and make his throne greater than thy throne: and the king "bowed himself upon the bed.

48 And also thus saith the king, "Blessed be the LORD God of Israel, "which hath given one to sit on my throne this day, "mine eyes even seeing it.

49 And "all the guests that were with Adonijah were afraid, and rose up, and went every man his way.

50 ¶ And Adonijah feared because of Solomon, and arose, and went, and "caught hold on the horns of the altar.

succeeded as the first-born of their predecessors, without any interruption, were anointed. (Notes, xix. 15—17. 1 Sam. x. 1. xvi. 13. 2 Kings ix. 5—10. xi. 12.) The anointing denoted both their appointment expressly from God, and the qualifications with which he would endow them; and their being types of Christ, the anointed of their Father.—The oil, with which Solomon was anointed, was taken out of the tabernacle, being, as it is probable, the same holy oil with which the priests were anointed. (Note, Ex. xxx. 22, 23.)

V. 41. Adonijah and his guests seem to have wasted much time upon this magnificent feast, when far more important concerns waited their attention, and ruin hung over their heads. (Notes, Dan. v. 1—9. Nah. i. 9, 10. Marg. Ref.)

V. 42. (Note, 2 Sam. xvii. 17—21.) It is probable, that Jonathan was not invited to the feast, nor concerned in the conspiracy; but he went to warn his father of the danger: though some think he was left in the city, to learn what should occur, and to bring an account of it to Adonijah.

V. 43—48. (Notes, 1 Sam. xxviii. 12—19.) The loud acclamations of the people, on this occasion, and the pious and fervent congratulations of David's servants, were especially suited to dismay the conspirators. (Notes, Matt. xx. 8—11.)

V. 49—53. Adonijah expected to be joined by the multitude: but finding himself mistaken, and being deserted by his friends, he gave up all for lost.—The murderer was to be taken from the altar, and slain: (Note, Ex. xxi. 12—14:) but in other crimes it was a customary refuge, at least till a pardon could be supplicated; as representing the method of obtaining forgiveness from God, through the great sacrifice for sin.—Adonijah acknowledged Solomon as king, both by word and deed; and received a conditional pardon, but Solomon gave him fair warning that he was put upon his good behaviour. He also required him to go to his house, and live a retired private life, not affecting the splendour and state which he had before done. (Marg. Ref.)

51 And it was told Solomon, saying, Behold, Adonijah feareth king Solomon: for, lo, he hath caught hold on the horns of the altar, saying, Let king Solomon swear unto me to-day, that he will not slay his servant with the sword.

52 And Solomon said, If he will shew himself a worthy man, ^bthere shall not an hair of him fall to the earth; but if ^cwickedness shall be found in him, he shall die.

53 So king Solomon sent, and they brought him down from the altar. And he came and ^dbowed himself to king Solomon: and Solomon said unto him, ^eGo to thine house.

CHAP. II.

David charges Solomon to serve God; and directs him how to act towards Jonab, the sons of Barzillai, and Shimei, 1-9. His death, and the years of his reign, 10, 11. Solomon succeeds him, 12. Adonijah persuades Bath-sheba to ask Solomon to give him Abishag to wife; and is put to death, 13-25. Abiathar's life is spared, but he is deprived of the high priesthood, 26, 27. Jonab, having fled to the altar, is there put to death, 28-34. Benaiah succeeds Jonab, and Zadok Abiathar, 35. Shimei is confined to Jerusalem; but breaking his engagement, he is put to death, 36-46.

NOW ^athe days of David drew nigh that he should die; and he ^bcharged Solomon his son, saying,

2 ^cI go the way of all the earth; ^dbe thou strong, therefore, and ^eshew thyself a man:

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-10. The most vigorous constitutions must soon wear out, and our lives hasten to a close: and, though proper means of restoring health and prolonging our days should be used; yet a wise man ought not to yield to such expedients as have the appearance of evil, or may become temptations to him. But carnal men counsel others according to their own inclinations, and often enforce their advice under specious pretences; by which they impose upon such as mean no evil, but are induced to actions inconsistent with their character and profession.—Indulgent parents are commonly chastised with disobedient children, who ungratefully despise their infirmities, and are impatient to get possession of their estates.—Every depraved propensity gathers strength by being gratified: and when ambition comes within the reach of its object, it urges a man to violate all obligations, to break through all obstructions, to despise all dangers, and to disregard the examples of those who have before been ruined by similar attempts. So long as carnal self-love reigns in the heart, no worldly wisdom and experience, no maturity of age, no rank or station in the community or in the church, no previous fidelity or attachment to princes or patrons, can secure men's continuance in their former course or connexions: for innumerable circumstances may occur, which may prompt them to some new method of gratifying their reigning inclinations. So that disgust, fear, conscious guilt, or the hope of greater authority, influence, or wealth, may speedily induce them to measures, which stand in opposition to all their former lives! We ought therefore to depend on the Lord to preserve us from the deceitfulness of our own hearts, and from the fickleness and treachery of men.—Political wisdom frequently contradicts the word of God, and proves in the event the greatest folly: and crafty seducers can discern who are, and who are not, fit for their purpose; and will shun determined honest characters as their enemies and rivals.

V. 11-27. In every age men form designs, which their own consciences condemn as contrary to the will of God; and yet they hope for success from the favour and assistance of man! But they, who are vain of their own accomplishments, often flatter themselves with the imagined attachment of numbers, that have no real esteem or affection for them.—A feast, and a sacrifice, are proper baits to draw in the sensual or the unsuspecting: and aspiring men, according to the taste of the times, have always employed one or both of these expedients to subvert their own ambitious purposes; by which numbers have been inadvertently betrayed to concur in base measures, contrary to their judgments, consciences, characters, and interests.—In these days, when kingdoms are disposed of by common providence, the ministers of God have little to do with disputed successions; and are best at a distance from the cabals, intrigues, and parties which generally surround the courts of kings: yet the welfare of the state, as well as of the church, should lie near their hearts; and they ought to use all their influence, and embrace every opportunity, to remind the greatest men of the words of God, and to excite them to do their duty according to his revealed will.—If a neighbour is in danger of being injured or murdered, without knowing it, or being able to avoid the snare; it must be the duty of every man, in all cases or at any hazard, to give him warning, or counsel, and to interpose for his preservation.—When others are neglecting their duty, through inattention or multiplied infirmities or engagements, they should be put in remembrance of it: when they are slack to do it, prudent contrivances and quickening expostulations may be successfully employed to incite them; and every means should be used to prevent manifest injustice, to exclude occasions of future discord, and to promote decisive measures for the glory of God, and the good of his people: for if the enemies of religion be combined, active, and daring; its friends should not be timid, supine, and disunited.—The most respectful behaviour to our superiors is very consistent with plainness of speech in the great concerns of God; and such language and behaviour will be very forcible with men of piety and integrity.

V. 28-53. The true believer loves to review his past experience: even the recollection of his distresses, from all "which the Lord hath redeemed him," increases his comfort as well as his gratitude; and inspires him with hope, and animates him to his duty, though under the decays of nature, and at the approach of death. In preparation for that event, we should arrange all our domestic, or more public, concerns, as may best secure peace and good to the survivors: and we should lose no time before we do so useful a work, even though it somewhat interrupt our religious exercises.—Those enterprises must end well, which are conducted with piety and integrity, in simple dependence on God, and cordial acquiescence in his will.—We can see no one so wise, so good, or so happy, in this world, but we may well desire that others may be more wise, holy, and happy than he; and every pious man must long that it may be thus with his beloved children, both for their sakes, and for the benefit of the community.—They, who are engaged in a bad cause, are exposed to continual terrors: and no good man can bring other than evil tidings to those who are rebelling against God and the king.—Vain confidence and sensual pleasure are the usual forerunners of temporal and eternal destruction.—Combinations formed upon iniquitous principles will speedily be dissolved, when self-preservation or self-interest calls another way. But clemency becomes those in power, especially towards such as have rather injured them than the public: yet, no government can pardon or tolerate a traitor, who perseveres in his treasonable machinations.—But we see here, as in a glass, Jesus, the Son of David and the Son of God, exalted to the throne of glory, notwithstanding all the conspiracies and opposition of his enemies. (Notes, Ps. ii.) His kingdom is far greater than that of his father David; and all the true people of God most cordially rejoice in his exaltation. The prosperity of his cause and the triumphing of his servants, are the vexation and terror of his enemies: and no "horns of the altar," no forms of godliness, no pretences to religion of any kind, can profit those who will not submit to his authority and accept of his salvation. He spares and readily pardons those, who have most desperately rebelled against him, when they repent, and do works meet for repentance. But if wickedness be afterwards found in them, discovering the hypocrisy of their professed submission, they will at length die without mercy, and perish without remedy.

NOTES.

CHAP. II. V. 2. Solomon could not at this time be more than twenty years of age; and, it is probable, he was not so much: an early period for him to enter upon so weighty a charge, as the government of God's people! (Note, iii. 5-14.) But he was endowed with extraordinary wisdom; and David exhorted him to shew all Israel, that though he was but a child in years, he was a man in capacity and attention to business. (Notes, Num. xxvii. 19. 1 Tim. iv. 11-16. 2 Tim. ii. 1, 2.)

V. 3. (Notes, Josh. i. 7-10. 1 Chr. xxii. 12, 13. xxviii. 9.) Testimonies, in this connexion, may signify those laws, which preserved the remembrance of great events; as the sabbaths, the passover, and others. (Notes, Deut. vi. 1. Ps. xix. 7-11. Is. viii. 16. 20.)

V. 4. (Notes, Gen. xviii. 18, 19. 2 Sam. vii. 12-16.) The continuance of the kingdom to David's posterity was sure, as it respected the Messiah and his spiritual reign: nor would every transgression forfeit the temporal kingdom entailed upon his descendants; for chastisements would be used to bring them to repentance: yet obstinate and aggravated disobedience would cut off the entail. Thus the Lord punished Solomon's idolatry by the defection of the ten tribes from his son. (Notes, xi. 9. 13. xii. 8-15.) and at length, the family of David was deprived of all authority, till Christ came and set up his spiritual kingdom.

V. 5, 6. These dying counsels of David ought not to be imputed to personal resentment; but to a regard to justice, and a wise and pious concern for the security of Solomon's throne, which was the cause of God and of Israel.—Joab had long deserved to die; and David's timidity had left blood-guiltiness upon his family and kingdom. (Notes, Num. xxxv. 31-34. 2 Sam. iii. 28, 29.) His late conspiracy proved him to be a factious and dangerous person: and, though his influence seems to have been weakened by it, yet his party was still so strong, that it was not probable Solomon would reign in peace whilst he lived.—He had not so much as attempted to conceal the base murders which he had com-

19 ¶ Bath-sheba therefore went unto king Solomon to speak unto him for Adonijah. And the king *rose up to meet her, and bowed himself unto her, and sat down on his throne, and caused a seat to be set for the king's mother; and *she sat on his right hand.

20 Then she said, *I desire one small petition of thee; I pray thee, say me not nay. And the king said unto her, *Ask on, my mother, for I will not say thee nay.

21 And she said, *Let Abishag the Shunammite be given to Adonijah thy brother to wife.

22 And king Solomon answered and said unto his mother, And *why dost thou ask Abishag the Shunammite for Adonijah? ask for him *the kingdom also; for he is mine elder brother; even for him, and for Abiathar the priest, and for Joab the son of Zeruiah.

23 Then king Solomon sware by the LORD, saying, *God do so to me, and more also, if Adonijah have not *spoken this word against his own life.

24 Now therefore, *as the LORD liveth, which hath established me, and *set me on the throne of David my father, and who hath *made me an house, *as he promised, Adonijah shall be *put to death this day.

25 And king Solomon sent by the hand of Benaiah the son of Jehoiada: and *he fell upon him, that he died.

26 ¶ And unto *Abiathar the priest said the king, Get thee to *Anathoth, unto thine own fields; for thou art *worthy of death: but I will not at this time put thee to death, *because thou barest the ark of the LORD God before David my father, and *because thou hast been afflicted in all wherein my father was afflicted.

27 So Solomon thrust out Abiathar from being priest unto the LORD; *that he might fulfil the word of the LORD, which he spake concerning the house of Eli in *Shiloh.

mitted; but he avowed and vindicated them, without shame or fear of punishment; and it was evident that he did not now repent, but would readily repeat them, to carry his purpose, and secure his preferment. His murders were crimes against David, as committed upon two men who were connected with David; and yet they were so conducted, as to bring him into suspicion as if privy to them. David, therefore, reminded his successor to expiate the guilt of these murders, by Joab's blood, "That he, and his kingdom and family, might be guiltless," (Note, 28—34.) It is observable that David did not blame Joab for killing Absalom: being doubtless conscious that he deserved to die, and that his own desire to spare him was a weakness and a sin.

V. 8, 9. Shimei also deserved to die, though for an offence of a different kind from Joab's. Probably he retained his old enmity to the family of David, and his partiality to the house of Saul. Solomon was not bound by the oath that David had sworn, not to put him to death: his punishment at first, would indeed have been a salutary act of justice, yet David would not then consent to it, because unsuitable to his circumstances. But the case was different with Solomon; who might take occasion from some recent offence, to remember the old crimes, and to execute deserved vengeance on an irreconcilable enemy to him and the peace of the kingdom. David therefore counselled him, not to trust Shimei, but to watch him narrowly; and he would be sure to find just cause for punishing him. (Note, 36—46.)

V. 10, 11. The remains of Saul, and his sons, were buried in the sepulchre of Kish his father, (2 Sam. xxi. 14.) But David was not buried in the sepulchre of Jesse at Beth-lehem; but in that city which he had taken from the Jebusites, and made the capital of his kingdom, and the seat of his government, and that of his family. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 15—18. It is evident that Adonijah had by no means given up his pretensions to the throne; and probable, that neither he, nor Joab, nor Abiathar expected safety, unless in success; and that they were in concert forming new designs against Solomon. With this view, they seem to have thought, that if Adonijah married Abishag, it would increase the number of his adherents; both by the accession of her friends and relations, and from the general notions which prevailed, concerning the wives and concubines of deceased kings. (Notes, 2 Sam. iii. 6—10. xii. 8. xvi. 20—23.) But they could not get possession of Abishag, without Solomon's consent; which they had no hopes of obtaining, but by the interposition of Bath-sheba.—In Adonijah's speech to her, he insinuated, that the kingdom was his, by the right of primogeniture: and that he had been in possession of it, by the consent of all Israel. This, however, was totally false: for the kingdom had never been his, except in his own groundless opinion, and that of the few who abetted his usurpation: for the people generally favoured Solomon. But he meant to induce Bath-sheba to compassionate his case; and to make a merit with her of peaceably receding from his claim: and that she might not suspect any ill design, he at length conceded, that "it was Solomon's from the LORD." But though his language was not well calculated to inspire confidence; and his request was in itself improper, and highly indecorous at least: yet, according to his hopes, Bath-sheba suspected no ill, but considered him as entitled to compassion; and supposed his request to be the result of love, not ambition: and perhaps she thought this an easy way of satisfying Adonijah, and securing Solomon in the kingdom.—She did not look upon Abishag as the wife of David, and therefore did not consider her marriage with Adonijah as unlawful: and she readily consented to become his intercessor with Solomon, (Note, Matt. xx. 20—23.)

V. 20. For I, &c. All such general promises imply the supposition, that the request is lawful and proper to be granted; for even the assurances of God's word, that whatever we ask of him, shall be given, admit of a similar limitation: i. e. if consistent with his glory, and for our real good. (Notes, Rom. viii. 24—27. Jam. iv. 1—3. 1 John v. 14, 15.)

V. 22. Solomon immediately saw through Adonijah's intentions, and that he was aiming to take the fortress by sap, (so to speak,) which he had failed of seizing by surprise. He perceived him still restless, aspiring, and scheming; and discerned that he considered this as one step to the throne, and that Joab and Abiathar were concerned in the project. To show the inefficacy therefore of every application in his favour; to convince Bath-sheba of the impropriety and impolicy of her request; and to declare the necessity of his death, in order to public peace, and the establishment of his authority, he spoke with great earnestness and decision. (Notes, Matt. xii. 46—50. John ii. 1—5.)

V. 23—25. Solomon has been censured, as too severe and precipitate in this execution; but there is no intimation of this in the Scripture. Adonijah's pardon had been conditional; and he had owned Solomon as king, yet he was plotting against him; (Note, i. 49—53:) he affected to tread in the steps of Absalom; and doubtless he would have created as fatal disturbances to Solomon's government, as Absalom had to David's. Nor would sound policy admit of any delay; when persons of so great authority and extensive influence were joined in the conspiracy, and had far more specious reasons for opposing Solomon, than Absalom had for rebelling against David.

V. 26, 27. Solomon's language, and Abiathar's silence, clearly prove, that some recent conspiracies had been formed. Abiathar had suffered much with David, and had been faithful and useful to him; (Notes, 1 Sam. xxii. 20—23. xxiii. 1—13. 2 Sam. xv. 24—29;) so that, in remembrance of his services, as well as in respect to his sacred character, Solomon resolved to spare his life:

28 ¶ Then tidings came to Joab; for ^aJoab had turned after Adonijah, though he turned not after Absalom. And Joab fled unto the tabernacle of the LORD, and ^bcaught hold on the horns of the altar.

29 And it was told king Solomon that Joab was fled unto the tabernacle of the LORD; and, behold, ^che is by the altar. Then Solomon sent Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, saying, ^d"Go, fall upon him.

30 And Benaiah came to the tabernacle of the LORD, and said unto him, Thus saith the king, Come forth. And he said, Nay; but I will die here. And Benaiah brought the king word again, saying, Thus said Joab, and thus he answered me.

31 And the king said unto him, ^e"Do as he hath said, and fall upon him, and bury him; that thou ^fmayest take away the innocent blood which Joab shed, from me, and ^gfrom the house of my father.

32 And the LORD shall ^hreturn his blood upon his own head, who fell upon ⁱtwo men ^jmore righteous and better than he, and slew them with the sword, ^kmy father David not knowing ^lthereof, to wit, Abner the son of Ner, captain of the host of Israel, and Amasa the son of ^mJether, captain of the host of Judah.

33 Their blood shall therefore return ⁿupon the head of Joab, and upon the head of his seed for ever: but ^oupon David, and upon his seed, and ^pupon his house, and upon his throne, shall there be peace for ever from the LORD.

34 So ^qBenaiah the son of Jehoiada went up, and fell upon him, and slew him: ^rand he was buried in his own house ^sin the wilderness.

35 ¶ And the king put Benaiah the son of Jehoiada in his room over the host: and ^tZadok the priest did the king put in the room of Abiathar.

36 ¶ And the king sent and called for ^u"Shimei, and said unto him, ^v"Build thee an house in Jerusalem, and dwell there, and go not forth thence any whither.

xxv. 5.

37 For it shall be, ^athat on the day thou goest out, and passest ^bover the brook Kidron, thou shalt know for certain that thou shalt surely die: ^cthy blood shall be upon thine own head.

38 And Shimei said unto the king, ^d"The saying is good: as my lord the king hath said, so will thy servant do. And Shimei dwelt in Jerusalem many days.

39 And it came to pass at the end of three years, that two of the servants of Shimei ran away unto ^eAchish son of Maachah king of Gath. And they told Shimei, saying, Behold, thy servants ^fbe in Gath.

40 And Shimei ^garose, and saddled his ass, and went to Gath to Achish to seek his servants; and Shimei went, and brought his servants from Gath.

41 And it was told Solomon that Shimei had gone from Jerusalem to Gath, and was come again.

42 And the king sent and called for Shimei, and said unto him, ^h"Did I not make thee to swear by the LORD, and protested unto thee, saying, Know for a certain, on the day thou goest out, and walkest abroad any whither, that thou shalt surely die? and thou saidst unto me, The word ⁱthat I have heard is good.

43 Why ^j"then hast thou not kept the oath of the LORD, and ^kthe commandment that I have charged thee with?

44 The king said moreover to Shimei, ^l"Thou knowest all the wickedness which thine heart is privy to, that thou didst to David my father: therefore the LORD shall ^mreturn thy wickedness upon thine own head;

45 And king Solomon ⁿshall be ^o"blessed, ^pand the throne of David shall be established before the LORD for ever.

46 So the king commanded Benaiah the son of Jehoiada; which went out, and fell upon him, that he died. And ^qthe kingdom was established in the hand of Solomon.

and as he had not committed murder, this clemency might properly be exercised. In depositing Abiathar from the high priesthood, Solomon purposely intended to fulfil the word of God to Eli. (Marg. Ref.) And in confining him to his own estate in the country, he only put him under a disgrace which he justly merited. (Notes, 36—46. 2 Sam. xiv. 28, 29.)

V. 28—34. (Note, 5, 6.) In fleeing to the altar, Joab pleaded guilty of the treason charged upon him: and Solomon, in ordering him to be slain before the altar, not for that crime alone, but especially for his former murders, evinced his knowledge of, and regard for, the law of God, and his superiority to vulgar prejudices. He also shewed the people, that no place, however sacred, should secure a murderer from justice.—His language, on this occasion, proves, that he considered the guilt of innocent blood as resting on his family and kingdom, so long as Joab's murders remained unpunished.

V. 35. Zadok. The high priesthood seems to have continued, from this time, in the line of Eleazar and Phinehas, at least till long after the Babylonish captivity. (Marg. Ref.)—Nothing further is said of Jonathan the son of Abiathar. (Note, i. 42.)

V. 36—46. No doubt, Solomon suspected that Shimei's influence would be dangerous upon his own estate, and among his numerous dependents: and therefore he proposed to him, as the condition of his indemnity for former crimes, that he should live in Jerusalem under his eye, and by no means remove thence. (Note, 26, 27.) These terms Shimei readily agreed to, and solemnly swore to observe them; and for three years he lived unmolested, and in affluence. But growing secure, in contempt of Solomon's authority, and of the oath of God, upon an unnecessary business he took a journey, which according to his own engagement forfeited his life. Thus the Lord left him to be infatuated, that due punishment might be inflicted upon him: in order, that every ringleader of opposition to Solomon's kingdom might be crushed, and others be intimidated by their examples; and that his throne might be established in peace, as the type of the Redeemer's kingdom of peace and righteousness.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—9. It is desirable to be habitually, and calmly, expecting the approach of death; for that is "the way appointed for all men," to pass from this world to another: a dark and gloomy road indeed it is for the workers of iniquity, to a still more dark and dreadful place; but rendered cheerful to the righteous, by the presence of the Lord, and by the hopes of complete felicity. Whilst they are supported by these lively hopes and strong consolations, how becoming is it for them to animate their survivors and successors, to fill up their stations in the church of God, and in society, after a proper manner!—Young men, who are called to important services, should be cautioned by their seniors to act with gravity and prudence, that they may prevent others "from despising their youth." And they, who, in this evil world, would keep the commandments of God, and (as magistrates or ministers) would induce others to do the same, need resolution and fortitude, as well as meekness, discretion, and zeal. "For they must keep the charge of the LORD;" and the smiles and flatteries, the reproaches and opposition, the friendship and enmity of the world, will, in different ways, impede them in the performance of their duty.—We cannot prosper in our undertakings further, than we make the whole word of God our rule and our hope; nor can we finally come short of all desirable success, if we do this, however appearances may for a while be against us.—No length of time will obliterate the guilt of sin; and justice, though long delayed, will finally be executed on the impenitent.—In human governments undue lenity is an evidence of imbecility, of want of wisdom, and disregard to justice. Can it then be supposed that the King of heaven will so indiscriminately exercise mercy, as not to magnify his law, and shew decidedly his abhorrence of iniquity?—No human authority has a right to pardon wilful murder: and the magistrate, who presumes to do so, is unfaithful to him, who hath commissioned him to execute vengeance upon evil-doers; and not only exposes the peaceable subject, but brings guilt on his own soul, on his family, and on the land. They, therefore, who act "according to wisdom," will not let the murderer, though advanced in years, or exalted in rank, go down to the grave in peace.—As private persons, we are not to avenge ourselves, but must return blessings and prayers for the bitterest curses and injuries of our enemies: but such offenders will not be held guiltless before God; and if their crimes be a violation of human laws, we may, out of regard to public justice, and for the sake of the peace and prosperity of the church or state, desire that they should be restrained and punished; and in our proper stations we may promote the execution of the law upon them. Nay, in doing this, we "may serve our generation according to the will of God," and prepare for death; no less than when we are recompensing our benefactors, and doing acts of kindness to the distressed.

V. 10—25. It is very happy for a nation, when the death of one good king is followed by the peaceable succession of another, equally wise and righteous. But men are not duly thankful for these blessings: and therefore the Lord permits their course to be interrupted; that public calamities, experienced or dreaded, may promote humiliation for sin, fervency in prayer, and general reformation; and make way for more lively gratitude, when they are removed or prevented. On such great emergencies, wisdom is needful to direct Christians, that they may neither neglect their present duty, nor intermeddle out of their proper sphere.—Ambitious men can never rest; they must

2 ¶ Only the people sacrificed in high places, because there was no house built unto the name of the LORD until those days.

3 And Solomon loved the LORD, walking in the statutes of David his father: only he sacrificed and burnt incense in high places.

4 And the king went to Gibeon to sacrifice there; for that was the great high place. A thousand burnt-offerings did Solomon offer upon that altar.

5 ¶ In Gibeon the LORD appeared to Solomon in a dream by night: and God said, Ask what I shall give thee.

6 And Solomon said, Thou hast shewed unto thy servant David my father great mercy, according as he walked before thee in truth, and in righteousness, and in uprightness of heart with thee: and thou hast kept for him this great kindness, that thou hast given him a son to sit on his throne, as it is this day.

7 And now, O LORD my God, thou hast made thy servant king instead of David my father; and I am but a little child: I know not how to go out or come in.

continually be aiming to disturb the settled order and public peace, that they may mount to superior authority; and when baffled with one weapon, they make trial of another. Whatever goes besides them in providence, they deem taken from them; and if they may not domineer, they claim compassion as injured persons: under plausible pretences and soft insinuations, they conceal their aspiring purposes; and with apparent modesty and affection, address themselves to the passions of the unsuspecting, the undiscerning, and the tender-hearted. These they would persuade into improper concessions, and engage to use their influence, that their moderate and equitable desires may be granted; and then they shall rest satisfied, and give nobody any further disturbance; whilst perhaps all this covers the most dangerous and subtle intentions. But they, who have the ear of princes, should be careful what requests they present to them. Compassion, generosity, or even gratitude, may induce them to ask for others, what cannot be granted consistently with the honour of the sovereign, or the interest of the kingdom: and it were better to be upbraided with unkindness or ingratitude, than to make so ill an use of influence.—The duty of honouring parents is obligatory upon us in every station in life; and too much respect and gratitude cannot be shewn them, provided they be not gratified by unlawful and improper compliances: but no relative affection, no engagement whatever, can bind us to do a thing that is evil, or of bad tendency to the public.—The machinations of crafty men generally entangle themselves, and involve them in mischiefs which simple upright men escape. No government can be secure, whilst they, who aim to subvert it, remain unpunished: and such as have been convicted, and still persist in treasonable designs, are proper persons to be sacrificed for the public good, and for an example to others; for, apparent severity to them may eventually be mercy to thousands.

V. 26—46. They, who have disgraced the sacred ministry by their crimes, are unworthy to officiate in holy things, and should be excluded from them; and wicked priests, though often spared here, will hereafter receive the deepest condemnation. Yet distinctions should be made in the punishment of the guilty; former services and sufferings in a good cause may plead for an alleviation of the sentence, where the law of God will admit of it; and in every event his word will one way or other be accomplished.—Many who slight the ordinances of God in their prosperity, flee to them in terror and affliction; but no expedients will avail to secure the impenitent from condign punishment; and the crimes, in which men long glory and prosper, will at length fall with heavier vengeance on their heads.—Even murder admits of degrees of criminality. The character of the persons murdered, their rank, and usefulness to society; and the malice, treachery, and boldness, with which the crime was perpetrated, enhance proportionably its malignity.—Different offenders ought to be treated in diverse ways, and punishments so inflicted, as may appear most equitable.—The old malignity remains in the unconverted heart, and a watchful eye should be kept on those, who have manifested their enmity, but have given no evidence of their repentance: yet, it is well to shew them such impartiality, as shall cause them to allow, "the saying is good." But no engagements or dangers can restrain worldly men from their pursuits; they will go on, though

10 And the speech pleased the LORD, that Solomon had asked this thing.

11 And God said unto him, Because thou hast asked this thing, and hast not asked for thyself long life; neither hast asked riches for thyself, nor hast asked the life of thine enemies, but hast asked for thyself understanding, to discern judgment;

12 Behold, I have done according to thy words: lo, I have given thee a wise and an understanding heart; so that there was none like thee before thee, neither after thee shall any arise like unto thee.

13 And I have also given thee that which thou hast not asked, both riches and honour; so that there shall not be any among the kings like unto thee all thy days.

14 And if thou wilt walk in my ways, to keep my statutes and my commandments, as thy father David did walk, then I will lengthen thy days.

15 And Solomon awoke; and, behold, it was a dream. And he came to Jerusalem, and stood before the ark of the covenant of the LORD, and offered up burnt-offerings, and offered peace-offerings, and made a feast to all his servants.

NOTES.

CHAP. III. V. 1. As Rehoboth was born before the death of David, (Comp. xi. 40. with xiv. 21;) it is plain that Solomon had before this married Naamah an Ammonitess; and at this time he married the daughter of the Egyptian king. It is supposed, that both of them had embraced the religion of Israel: and, as Solomon is not censured on this account, there might be special reasons inducing him to this conduct, of which we are not informed. It is also remarkable, that when Solomon's wives drew him into idolatry, the idols of Egypt are not mentioned: so that Pharaoh's daughter does not seem to have been one of his tempters. (Note, xi. 1—8.) At first he brought her into the city of David: but after he had finished his other works, he built her a palace at some distance from the temple. (ix. 24. Note, 2 Chr. vii. 11.)

V. 2, 3. Until the temple was built, the irregularity of sacrificing to the God of Israel in high places, and burning incense by the priests, was in some degree connived at: but the people proceeded further in it, than in the days of David, and Solomon was censurable for countenancing them by his example. Upon high hills, especially when covered with trees, as having peculiar solemnity, and being favourable to retirement, they erected altars, and offered sacrifices, after the manner of the nations around them, but contrary to the law of Moses. (Notes, Lev. xxvi. 30. Deut. xii. 2—8. 2 Kings xviii. 4. 32. Ez. xx. 28, 29.)

V. 4. The tabernacle made under the direction of Moses, and the altar belonging to it, were at this time stationed at Gibeon: and this was, on that account, the principal high place, where the priests and Levites officiated according to the law. (Notes, 2 Sam. vi. 17. 1 Chr. xvi. 37—43. xxi. 29.) Solomon continued at Gibeon for some time on this occasion, and he offered a thousand burnt-offerings, which the constant and vehement fire on the altar entirely consumed.

V. 5—14. (Notes, Gen. xx. 1—6. xxxi. 23, 24. Job iv. 12—16. xxxiii. 14—18.) In ordinary dreams almost every thing is incoherent and irrational, though they often savour of a man's waking thoughts, pursuits, and character: but Solomon's dream was of another kind. While his corporeal senses were

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—15. Whatever external or intellectual accomplishments any man may possess, "to love the Lord" is the grand distinction between one man and another: and thus the meanest believer is preferred before all the wise, learned, renowned, and prosperous unbelievers on earth, and is classed among apostles, prophets, and those princes who have served God. Indeed, admiration of his perfections, gratitude for his goodness, delight in his service, and zeal for his glory, form the perfection and felicity of angels: and to this character the grace of our Redeemer renews all those, who accept of his salvation. Such as love the Lord should copy the examples, and follow the instructions, of those who have gone before them in the same path; especially of pious parents: but they should be careful to avoid their errors and transgressions; for even good men find it difficult to act themselves at all times as they would counsel others; so that defects will be found in the best characters, and the best state of the church upon earth. We should indeed watch and pray against all evil in ourselves, and use our influence to prevent it in others: yet we should expect to see many things that we disapprove, and learn to make allowances for them.—That is never wasted, which is prudently spent in God's service; and the munificence and liberality of the great should be proportioned to their affluence, that their example may edify their inferiors. To abound in the work of the Lord, upon scriptural principles, forms the proper method of waiting for the communications of further knowledge, grace, and comfort.—In effect, the Lord by his gospel makes this proposal to all who hear it, "Ask what I shall give thee." (Note, Matt. vii. 7—11.) He does not indeed bind himself to gratify the desires of the ambitious, the covetous, the sensual, the envious, or the revengeful; but he is ever ready to answer the petitions of those, who ask of him heavenly wisdom and spiritual blessings, how vile soever they have hitherto been. We should therefore first request the Lord to teach us what to pray for, and how to pray aright: and if we from our hearts, in the Redeemer's name, have been taught to ask of the Lord, his favour, his image, his graces, and his comforts; with wisdom, ability, and a willing mind, to fill up our station in the church and in society, to his glory, and the good of others: he hath already given us an understanding heart, and will make continual accessions to this gift. When we decidedly prefer these spiritual blessings to all carnal things, we may be sure that he will give us as much of outward comforts, as he sees really subservient to our good. We should also honour the riches of his all-sufficiency and liberality, by multiplying and enlarging our requests, and grasping at more and more from him; for he will take it graciously, and deal with us accordingly.—In every service, public and private, they are most qualified for their work, and acquit themselves the best in it, who are most sensible of its difficulty and of their own insufficiency. It bodes well, when they, whom others call wise men, deem themselves children; and as ill, when men are singular in a good opinion of their own abilities and attainments.—Distinguishing favours require peculiar returns of gratitude: and a man's being evidently called to very important and arduous services, may dictate his prayers, and encourage his expectations of proportionable assistance.—Such as succeed eminently wise and good men, should ask a double portion of wisdom and grace, to answer the expectations of others from them: and they who, in deviation from ordinary rules, are employed in any public service, will be more narrowly watched, and more severely censured, if they act inconsistently. Let not this hint be overlooked, or taken amiss, by those who preach the gospel without an express regular appointment from man, in any of those ways by which ministers are ordinarily sent forth.—The continued blessing of God can only be expected in the way of persevering obedience: and negligence or wickedness will always ensure loss in our temporal or spiritual comforts.

V. 16—28. Judges, magistrates, and all concerned in trying causes, need great discernment, as well as integrity, in order to search out the truth, when all possible pains and fallacy are employed to conceal it: they ought therefore, in all their studies and in all their decisions, to ask wisdom of God; and we should earnestly remember them in our prayers.—Where the Lord has given abilities, and a heart disposed to improve them, he will open a way for the profitable exercise of them in his due time: and an accurate acquaintance with the human heart will be found a most profitable kind of knowledge for all, but especially for magistrates and ministers.—God hath made natural affection very locked up in sleep, the powers of his soul were supernaturally invigorated; and he was enabled to receive the divine vision, and to make a suitable choice in the case referred to him. His pleas were cogent, and his determination wise. His father had ruled over Israel in truth and righteousness, and had been greatly favoured and prospered; he was the first of the rulers of Israel, who had been succeeded by his son; Solomon had been preferred before his elder brethren by God's own appointment; all these circumstances concurred to raise men's expectations, or to excite their enmity and envy: and thus to increase the importance and arduousness of his station. The people were very numerous, they were the chosen of God, and among them he must both judge in equity, and promote true religion. Yet he was very young, and inexperienced as a child. (Notes, ii. 2. 1 Chr. xxii. 2—5. xxix. 1. Jer. i. 6—8.) His single petition therefore was, that the Lord would give his servant an understanding heart; that is, that he would enlarge and strengthen his intellectual powers, give him a ready discernment in spiritual things, and a correspondent disposition: and furnish him with the peculiar talents and capacities for government; that he might administer justice and judgment, with impartial rectitude and deep penetration, for the benefit of the people and the honour of God. Doubtless these sentiments were habitually in Solomon's mind, previously to this dream: and his consciousness of his own insufficiency had led him to depend upon the Lord to qualify him for the discharge of the duties of his important station. (Notes, 1 Chr. xxii. 12. Ps. lxxii. title, 1, 2. Prov. ii. 1—6. xiv. 8. Jam. i. 5—8.) Absalom and Adonijah do not seem to have been troubled with anxiety on this account, though far inferior to Solomon in capacity for ruling; but they sought the honour and power of the kingdom; he desired to discharge the duty of a king.—The disposition and judgment which dictated this petition, in preference to all those alluring distinctions which carnal minds pursue, and which especially attract young persons in superior stations, was well pleasing to the Lord; and he assured Solomon, that "he had given him a wise and understanding heart," and that he should receive a vast accession of wisdom: (Note, Matt. xlii. 12:) so that he should excel all the kings of Israel who had preceded or should succeed him, in all kinds of knowledge and discernment, and also in riches and honour, which he had not asked. (Notes, iv. 30—34. Matt. vi. 33. xii. 34. 41, 42.)—The promise of long life was conditionally added; and perhaps it was in part forfeited by the idolatry, and other sins, into which he was afterwards betrayed. (Notes, 2 Chr. 1—12.)

V. 16—22. These harlots, it seems, found means to evade the law. (Marg. Ref.)—They were alone when the child died, though probably not when the children were born. The first woman's account, though conjectural, seems to have been the truth. Perhaps the other woman feared some reproach, suspicion, or punishment, as if she had willingly or negligently occasioned the death of her child; or she hoped to have some gain by means of the living child; or perhaps she was induced by envy and malignity to claim it as her own; for her willingness to have it divided evinced that she had no true affection for it.

V. 23—28. As there were no witnesses in this transaction, and both parties were alike strenuous and positive, the cause became extremely difficult; and probably is was referred to the king's hearing, because it had puzzled the inferior judges. In many countries such cases have been decided by lot, and, which is much worse, by duels; or the parties have been tortured, that they might be compelled to declare the truth. But Solomon adopted the only rational method, by making use of his acquaintance with the heart, to discover which of them had the feelings of a mother for the living child. Yet when he called for the sword, and ordered the living child to be divided; as none of the auditors seem to have perceived his intentions, they doubtless would secretly condemn the proposal, as puerile, absurd, and inhuman. The woman who consented to the division of the child, perhaps expected to obtain Solomon's favour by this acquiescence: but she betrayed her want of natural affection for the child, and her resentment against her competitor; whilst the other expressed all the feelings of a mother in an artless and inimitable manner. And when the people saw, that, by this extraordinary measure, Solomon had extorted the truth beyond all further doubt; they revered and stood in awe of him, notwithstanding his youth; perceiving "that the wisdom of God was in him to do judgment." (Note, ii. 2.)

30 And Solomon's wisdom excelled the wisdom of all the children of the east country, and all the wisdom of Egypt.

31 For he was wiser than all men; than Ethan the Ezrahite, and Heman, and Chalcol, and Darda, the sons of Mahol: and his fame was in all nations round about.

32 And he spake three thousand proverbs: and his songs were a thousand and five.

33 And he spake of trees, from the cedar-tree that is in Lebanon, even unto the hyssop that springeth out of the wall: he spake also of beasts, and of fowl, and of creeping things, and of fishes.

34 And there came of all people to hear the wisdom of Solomon, from all kings of the earth, which had heard of his wisdom.

CHAP. V.

Hiram, king of Tyre, sends to congratulate Solomon: who informs him that he intended to build a temple, and desires him to furnish the timber, 1-6. Hiram blesses God for Solomon's wisdom, and engages for the timber: requiring in return food for his household, 7-9. The mutual good offices between Hiram and Solomon, 10-12. The number of Solomon's workmen and labourers, 13-18.

AND Hiram king of Tyre sent his servants unto Solomon: for he had heard that they had anointed him king in the room of his father; for Hiram was ever a lover of David.

2 And Solomon sent to Hiram, saying,

3 Thou knowest how that David my father could not build an house unto the name of the LORD his God for the wars which were about him on every side, until the LORD put them under the soles of his feet.

chariots to have change of horses. The four hundred might be added afterwards. As numbers were generally expressed in the manuscripts by numeral letters, over which, in many cases, a small mark distinguished twenty from two, and forty from four, &c.; it seems most obvious to suppose that a trivial mistake has here occurred. Forty thousand stalls for chariot horses (unless all sorts of carriages be included) seems out of all proportion to twelve thousand horsemen: and in no place are more than a thousand and four hundred chariots mentioned. (Note, x. 24-27. Deut. xvii. 16.)

V. 29. Largeness of heart, &c. This expression, and comparison, denote the unparalleled greatness of Solomon's intellectual powers; his most extensive knowledge, and his enlargement of heart in communicating instruction to all around him. 'A mind very comprehensive of all sorts of knowledge; and a heart to do a vast deal of good. As the sand incloses a vast body of waters; so his mind contained an ocean of knowledge, as Lord Bacon speaks.' (Bp. Patrick.) (Notes, Ps. cxix. 32. 2 Cor. v. 11-13.)

V. 30-34. God gave Solomon not only heavenly wisdom, and singular talents for government; but extraordinary capacities for the attainment of all kinds of knowledge: so that he excelled the wise men of Egypt, and of Babylon, Arabia, or other countries still more to the east, in astronomy, and other sciences, for which they were renowned. In the knowledge of divinity he surpassed Ethan and Heman, who seem to have been men renowned for extraordinary piety and wisdom at that time; and all others who were celebrated in Israel on the same account. (Marg. Ref.) He excelled also in morality, and economics; for he spake three thousand proverbs, of which such as were most suited for general utility, have come down to us in the book of Proverbs. He likewise excelled in poetry, and wrote one thousand and five songs: but only one of these is preserved in Scripture. It may, however, be supposed, that many of the others were upon moral and religious subjects; as well as remarkable for the beauties of poetry. He was, moreover, deeply versed in all the branches of natural philosophy, and discoursed in an admirable manner, upon the nature, properties, and uses of the several species of plants and animals. So that in every thing he possessed such an undisputed superiority over all men in that age, that his reputation for wisdom brought numbers from different kings and nations all around, to learn every kind of useful knowledge from him; and perhaps he possessed more accurate and extensive knowledge, on a vast variety of subjects, than any mere man besides, in any age or nation of the world, ever did.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-28. True wisdom generally directs those who succeed prudent and prosperous men, in kingdoms or estates, to tread in their steps, to employ their servants, and to avail themselves of the good advice of their friends and counsellors: but folly and self-conceit delight in making many and great changes, though they commonly prove disadvantageous. (Notes, xii. 6-15. 2 Kings xxi. 1-3. Ec. ii. 18-23.)—They who faithfully seek the good of our souls, though sometimes with sharp reproofs, are our best friends; and their memories are always entitled to grateful respect, and their children to kind regard; yet these are worthy of a wise man's confidence and friendship, only when they tread in the steps of their pious parents.—The different ranks of men in society should be distinguished by a suitable attendance and provision: but "when riches increase, they are increased that eat them," and the owners have much additional incumbrance, and but little accession of solid advantage. It is also extremely difficult to possess abundance, without covetousness, luxury, or 4 But now the LORD my God hath given me rest on every side, so that there is neither adversary nor evil occurrent.

5 And, behold, I purpose to build an house unto the name of the LORD my God, as the LORD spake unto David my father, saying, Thy son, whom I will set upon thy throne in thy room, he shall build an house unto my name.

6 Now therefore command thou, that they hew me cedar-trees out of Lebanon, and my servants shall be with thy servants; and unto thee will I give hire for thy servants; according to all that thou shalt appoint; for thou knowest that there is not among us any that can skill to hew timber like unto the Sidonians.

7 ¶ And it came to pass, when Hiram heard the words of Solomon, that he rejoiced greatly, and said, Blessed be the LORD this day, which hath given unto David a wise son over this great people.

8 And Hiram sent to Solomon, saying, I have considered the things which thou sentest to me for: and I will do all thy desire, concerning timber of cedar, and concerning timber of fir.

9 My servants shall bring them down from Lebanon unto the sea: and I will convey them by sea in floats unto the place that thou shalt appoint me, and will cause them to be discharged there, and thou shalt receive them: and thou shalt accomplish my desire in giving food for my household.

10 ¶ So Hiram gave Solomon cedar-trees, and fir-trees, according to all his desire.

ostentation; without abusing, wasting, or burying, the goods of our common Lord, to whom every one must give an account of his stewardship: yet, prudent management and frugality are excellent appendages to liberality, and serve to support the expenses of it.—Wise and righteous princes are most valuable blessings to whole kingdoms, and should be sought in prayer from that God, who hath all hearts in his hands: yet all outward prosperity is precarious and transient: and too often it proves unfavourable to religion, and increases pride, sloth, and sensual indulgence; thus rendering divine judgments necessary.—Wealth without wisdom, and knowledge without humility and grace, are generally destructive to the possessor, and to those with whom he is connected: yet both are the gifts of God, good in themselves, and only evil as perverted by man's depravity. And heavenly wisdom teaches men to give God the glory in the use of these inferior blessings, and so renders them ornamental to the Christian profession, and conducive to promote designs of extensive usefulness.

V. 29-34. A reputation for wisdom and piety is no further desirable, than as it consists with humility, and affords a man an opportunity of communicating more extensively that useful knowledge, which the Lord hath imparted. Every information, which is needful to our glorifying God, and obtaining his salvation, is preserved to us in the sacred Scriptures: and the light of heaven will more certainly and speedily instruct us in all useful knowledge, than all the regretted records of antiquity could do if we had them. Let us then rejoice that the Lord reigneth on a mercy-seat, and that his name is Emanuel. His kingdom was faintly shadowed forth in that of Solomon, but is of a nobler and more heavenly nature. The blessings of it consist not "in meat and drink, but in righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." In his days the righteous flourish; their numbers have already been immensely multiplied, and future ages shall witness a more rapid and vast increase, "when all kings shall bow down before him, and all nations shall do him service." (Notes, Ps. lxxii.) Then "shall they beat their swords into ploughshares, and war shall be learned no more;" then shall "every man call his neighbour under the vine, and under the fig-tree." (Zech. iii. 10.) "In him are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge;" his fame shall spread through all the earth, and all people shall come to him, learn of him, take upon them his easy yoke, and find rest for their souls.—But, whilst we look with joyful longing desires and fervent prayers for these glorious days, let us now sit at his feet, hear his word, ask of him wisdom, submit to his will, and seek his glory. Then, outward tribulation shall not break our inward peace; then, we shall be satisfied with the plenteousness of his house; then, we shall enjoy much liberty, and have many glimpses of his glory on earth, and shall speedily remove to yon brighter world above, where innumerable angels, and redeemed sinners, are happy in his presence, and rapturously celebrating his praises.

NOTES.

CHAP. V. V. 1. (Note, 2 Sam. v. 11.) It is highly probable, that Hiram was himself a worshipper of JEHOVAH, and loved David on account of his wisdom and piety: though his people in general seem to have continued idolaters. He sent to condole with Solomon on his father's death, and to congratulate him on his peaceable succession.—Tyre and Zidon lay north of Canaan, and were not expressly included in the grant to Israel; it was therefore lawful to form alliances with them.

V. 2-9. (Notes, 1 Chr. xxii. 8-10. 2 Chr. ii. 3-12. Marg. Ref.) The Tyrians possessed a very small tract of land, and were employed and enriched 11 And Solomon gave Hiram twenty thousand measures of wheat for food to his household, and twenty measures of pure oil: thus gave Solomon to Hiram year by year.

12 And the LORD gave Solomon wisdom, as he promised him: and there was peace between Hiram and Solomon; and they two made a league together.

13 ¶ And king Solomon raised a levy out of all Israel; and the levy was thirty thousand men.

14 And he sent them to Lebanon, ten thousand a month by courses; a month they were in Lebanon, and two months at home: and Adoniram was over the levy.

15 And Solomon had threescore and ten thousand that bare burdens, and fourscore thousand hewers in the mountains:

16 Beside the chief of Solomon's officers, which were over the work, three thousand and three hundred, which ruled over the people that wrought in the work.

17 And the king commanded, and they brought great stones, costly stones, and hewed stones, to lay the foundation of the house.

18 And Solomon's builders and Hiram's builders did hew them, and the stone-squarers: so they prepared timber and stones to build the house.

CHAP. VI.

The building of the temple is begun, 1. The dimensions of the house, and its porch, 2, 3. The windows, 4. The chambers, 5-10. The promise of God concerning the temple, 11-13. Its walls, ceiling, floor, and ornaments, 14-18. The Oracle and Cherubim, 19-30. The doors of the Oracle, and of the house, 31-35. The inner-court, 36. The time in which the whole was completed, 37, 38.

AND it came to pass in the four hundred and eightieth year after the children of Israel were by commerce and manufactures; and they had their provisions chiefly from the fruitful land of Canaan. (Note, Acts xii. 20-23.)

V. 11. "Twenty thousand baths of oil" are mentioned in Chronicles, which amounted at least to two thousand cors. (Marginal reading.) But as barley and wine are there spoken of; some think that the wheat, here mentioned, was intended for the use of Hiram's family, and the small quantity of very fine oil for his own use; whereas in Chronicles the provisions made for the workmen are intended.

V. 13-18. Only comparatively a small number of Israelites were employed, in rotation, as it consisted with their convenience, and probably in the easier services: but a great number of the remains of the ancient inhabitants of the land continually assisted the Tyrians, by removing the timber, conveying it to the sea, helping to navigate the floats, and conveying it when landed, to Jerusalem; and in preparing stones for the temple. (Marg. Ref.) These were superintended by three thousand and three hundred persons, perhaps of the same nations. Three thousand six hundred are mentioned in Chronicles: (2 Chr. ii. 17, 18.) perhaps three hundred were officers over the rest; or they were supernumeraries, to supply for such as were sick and disabled from attendance. (Notes, ix. 20-22.)—Thus the temple was chiefly built by the labour and riches of those who were originally Gentiles; which typified the calling of the Gentiles into the church: and the costly stones laid out of sight, as the foundation of the temple, typified Christ our tried and precious foundation; and were an emblem of the hidden excellency of those who form a part of his spiritual temple. (Note, 1 Pet. ii. 4-6.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The love of God causes men to love one another, and renders them superior to selfish jealousies and envyings: and it teaches them to rejoice in each other's prosperity, and to be glad to receive or afford mutual assistance.—The most necessary and successful wars, not only produce much temporal evil, but obstruct or retard the execution of many useful designs for promoting godliness: we may then, well pray, 'Send peace in our time, O Lord: and when he "gives rest on every side, so that there is no adversary nor evil occurrent," no time should be lost, but every one should be intent to devise, and execute, such useful undertakings as were before prevented. (Note, Acts ix. 31.)—Different persons are qualified for different services; and whilst all harmoniously concur, in their proper places, and by improving their several talents, the common cause will prosper.—It is admirable when the children rise up, and complete the wise and pious designs of their deceased parents; and all should rejoice and bless the Lord, when they see such tokens of the prosperity of his church.—God hath so constituted the earth, that every nation hath its peculiar productions, and its inhabitants their distinguished endowments: thus their mutual intercourse is forwarded; and, by an interchange of benefits, they are instructed to love one another as children of the same family. Happy would it be, if commerce were generally conducted on such principles, and rendered subservient to the spread of true religion: but, alas! through man's depravity, it has often tended to diffuse wickedness and misery more rapidly through the nations of the earth!—All agreements should be made with consideration, that equity may be established, and contests precluded: and great punctuality should be observed in paying labourers their wages.—Frequently, they are most ingenious in the liberal arts, who are strangers to true godliness: and many are employed about come out of the land of Egypt, in the fourth year of Solomon's reign over Israel, in the month Zif, which is the second month, that he began to build the house of the LORD.

2 And the house which king Solomon built for the LORD, the length thereof was threescore cubits, and the breadth thereof twenty cubits, and the height thereof thirty cubits.

3 And the porch before the temple of the house, twenty cubits was the length thereof, according to the breadth of the house, and ten cubits was the breadth thereof before the house.

4 ¶ And for the house he made windows of narrow lights.

5 ¶ And against the wall of the house he built chambers round about, against the walls of the house round about, both of the temple and of the oracle: and he made chambers round about.

6 The nethermost chamber was five cubits broad, and the middle was six cubits broad, and the third was seven cubits broad: for without in the wall of the house he made narrowed rests round about, that the beams should not be fastened in the walls of the house.

7 And the house, when it was in building, was built of stone made ready before it was brought thither: so that there was neither hammer, nor axe, nor any tool of iron, heard in the house while it was in building.

8 The door for the middle chamber was in the the church of God, who have no interest in its blessings. The meanest office in his service is honourable and profitable, if cordially performed: and millions of us poor Gentiles, who in ourselves were devoted to destruction, have been employed by him.—Our gracious Lord lays no intolerable burdens on any of his true people: but in every injunction consults their interest and comfort. Let us then serve him cheerfully, and attend to our proper work: and after his example, may we be humane and considerate in all our requisitions from our inferiors; that our service, like his, may be loved, and considered as a privilege by those employed in it.

NOTES.

CHAP. VI. V. 1. (Notes, Ex. xxv. 8, 9. Judg. xi. 26.) The use and typical meaning of the temple, and those of the tabernacle, were the same: but the moveable tabernacle suited the state of Israel when wandering in the wilderness, and a magnificent temple was more proper when they were settled in Canaan.—A temple was not indeed essential to the religion of Israel: and therefore the building of it was deferred till four hundred and eighty years, after that people was brought out of Egypt; or four hundred and forty years after they entered Canaan: and this temple was destroyed in less than four hundred and twenty years after it was finished.—Solomon was more than three years in making the necessary preparations; and in the fourth year of his reign, he laid the foundation. The month Zif was the second of the ecclesiastical year. Some think that the names of the months, here given, were not in use before the captivity.

V. 2, 3. The temple was a very magnificent building, and immense quantities of gold and silver were used about it: yet, apart from its courts, it was but a small structure, compared with many buildings in ancient and modern times. It was about a hundred feet long, thirty-three feet wide, and fifty feet high: and it had a porch, on the east end at the entrance, which formed an ornamental steeple of about two hundred feet high. (Notes, 2 Chr. iii. 3, 4.) The tabernacle is computed to have been fifty feet long, twelve or thirteen feet wide, and nearly seventeen feet high.

V. 4. Windows, &c. The tabernacle had no light from without, and the temple had not much. (Note, Ex. xxv. 31-39.) These windows, which are supposed to have been wider on the inside than without, were situated in the spaces betwixt the chambers afterwards mentioned: or, as some think, above them.

V. 5, 6. These chambers accommodated the priests, when they were upon duty at the temple: and in them they laid up their clothes, the sacred vessels not in immediate use, and the other treasures belonging to the temple. For the purpose of fixing these chambers, the wall of the temple was made two cubits thicker at the bottom than at the top: and where it was made a cubit less in thickness, a rest was formed on the outside, for the beams of the second story of chambers to lodge upon, and so for the third. By this contrivance the upper stories were larger than the lower; and the wall of the temple was not weakened, either by building, or by repairing the chambers. It is supposed that there was also a gallery round about, by which the priests entered the chambers; and that there were no chambers over the entrance of the temple.

V. 7. Every stone was squared, and fitted for its place, at the quarry; so that the temple was erected without noise, or the encumbrance of useless rubbish. Several of these circumstances may shadow forth spiritual things. (P. O.)

right *side of the house: and they went up with winding stairs into the middle chamber, and out of the middle into the third.

9 So ^{he} built the house, and finished it: and covered the house with ^{beams} and boards of cedar.

10 And then he built chambers against all the house five cubits high: and they rested on the house with timber of cedar.

11 ¶ And the word of the LORD came to Solomon, saying,

12 Concerning this house which thou art in building, if thou wilt walk in my statutes, and execute my judgments, and keep all my commandments to walk in them; ^{then} will I perform my word with thee, which I spake unto David thy father:

13 And ^I will dwell among the children of Israel, and ^{will} not forsake my people Israel.

14 ¶ So ^{Solomon} built the house, and finished it.

15 And he built the walls of the house within with boards of cedar, ^{both} the floor of the house, and the walls of the ceiling: and he covered them on the inside with wood, and covered the floor of the house with planks of fir.

16 And he built twenty cubits on the sides of the house, both the floor and the walls, with boards of cedar: he even ^{built them} for it within, even for the oracle, even for the most holy place.

17 And the house, that is, the temple before it, was forty cubits long.

18 And the cedar of the house within was carved with ^{knops} and ^{open flowers}: all was cedar: there was no stone seen.

19 ¶ And ^{the} oracle he prepared in the house within, ^{to} set there the ark of the covenant of the LORD.

20 And the oracle in the forepart was twenty cubits in length, and ^{twenty} cubits in breadth, and ^{twenty} cubits in the height thereof; and he overlaid it with ^{pure} gold; and so covered ^{the} altar which was of cedar.

21 So Solomon ^{overlaid} the house within with pure gold; and he made a partition ^{by} the chains of gold before the oracle, and he overlaid it with gold.

22 And the whole house he overlaid with gold, until he had finished all the house: ^{also} the whole altar that was by the oracle he overlaid with gold.

23 ¶ And within the oracle he made ^{two} cherubims of ^{olive-tree}, each ten cubits high.

24 And five cubits was the one wing of the cherub, and five cubits the other wing of the cherub; from the uttermost part of the one wing unto the uttermost part of the other were ten cubits.

25 And the other cherub was ten cubits: both the cherubims were of one measure, and one size.

26 The height of the one cherub was ten cubits, and so was it of the other cherub.

27 And he set the cherubims within the inner house: and they ^{stretched} forth the wings of the cherubims, so that the wing of the one touched the one wall, and the wing of the other cherub touched the other wall; and their wings touched one another in the midst of the house.

28 And he overlaid the cherubims with gold.

29 And he carved all the walls of the house round about with ^{carved} figures of cherubims, and ^{palm-trees}, and ^{open} flowers, within and without.

30 And ^{the} floor of the house he overlaid with gold, within and without.

31 ¶ And for the entering of the oracle he made ^{doors} of olive-tree: the lintel and side-posts were ^{a fifth part} of the wall.

32 The ^{two} doors also were of olive-tree; and he carved upon them carvings of cherubims, and palm-trees, and ^{open} flowers, and overlaid them with gold, and spread gold upon the cherubims, and upon the palm-trees.

33 So also made he for the door of the temple, posts of olive-tree, ^{a fourth part} of the wall.

34 And the two doors were of ^{fir-tree}: the ^{two} leaves of the one door were folding, and the two leaves of the other door were folding.

35 And he carved ^{thereon} cherubims, and palm-trees, and open flowers; and covered them with gold fitted upon the carved work.

36 ¶ And he built ^{the} inner court with three rows of hewed stone, and a row of cedar beams.

37 ¶ In ^{the} fourth year was the foundation of the house of the LORD laid, in the month Zif:

38 And in the eleventh year, in the month Bul, which is the eighth month, was the house ^{finished} throughout all the parts thereof, and ^{according} to all the fashion of it. So was he ^{seven} years in building it.

V. 8. There seems to have been a door, in each of the two upper stories, into a gallery, which communicated with all the chambers: and winding stairs from one story to another.

V. 10. The chambers were five cubits high in each story; and thus they did not go up to the top of the temple.—The beams of cedar lay on the rests in the wall. (Note, 5, 6.)

V. 11-13. This word of the LORD was both an encouragement to Solomon to proceed; and an intimation to him, and to Israel, that neither the service performed in building the temple, nor its presence with them, could secure to them the Lord's favour, if they were not obedient to his commandments: for both king and people stood upon the same terms with God, as they did before the temple was begun. (Notes, ix. 3. 6. Jer. vii. 4-15. Marg. Ref.)

V. 15-22. The inside of the walls of the temple were throughout wainscoted with cedar, ornamented with exquisite workmanship; and it was covered with planks of fir, or, as some explain the word, of a very durable kind of cedar: yet both these were covered with plates of solid gold. (Note, Ez. xlii. 22.) In the same manner and proportion, as the tabernacle had been, this building was divided into two parts: "the oracle," or "the most holy place," in which was the ark of the covenant, and the mercy-seat, (Note, Ps. xxviii. 2,) and from whence the Lord delivered his answers to the high-priest from above the mercy-seat, was twenty cubits square: it is also said to have been twenty cubits high, though the house was thirty: it was therefore either built or ceiled lower than the other part of the temple. The veil, which separated the holy of holies, was hung by golden chains on pillars erected for that purpose. (2 Chr. iii. 15, 16.)—"The altar, by the oracle," was the altar of incense without the veil, in the holy place, which was twice as long as the most holy place.

V. 23-28. These cherubim were the emblems of the angels, as jointly worshipping God our Saviour; and as delighting to contemplate the mysteries of redemption.—They were distinct from, and much larger than, those which covered the mercy-seat, and indeed were inseparably united to it. (Notes, Ez. xxv. 10-22.)—They stood erect with "their faces towards the wall;" (2 Chron. iii. 13;) and they covered with their outstretched wings the whole breadth of the most holy place.—The others were of solid gold; but these, of olive-tree covered with gold.

V. 31-35. It is probable, that, besides the veil, there was another partition between the holy of holies and the sanctuary. The veil covered the whole of this: but when that was drawn aside, folding doors, of olive-tree plated with gold, and curiously engraved, took up a fifth of the partition, or about four cubits.—The doors at the entrance of the sanctuary were rather larger.

V. 36. The inner court, at the entrance of the sanctuary, in which the altar of burnt-offering stood, was principally appropriated to the priests, Levites, and those who brought the sacrifices. (Notes, Ez. xxvii. 9-19. Ez. xli. xlii. xliii.) It was separated from the other courts by a wall of hewn stone: but it is supposed that part was built of cedar beams, to leave openings, through which the other worshippers might see the sacrifices offered, and join in the sacred services.

V. 37, 38. The whole time was seven years and a half; but the number of whole years alone is mentioned. This is frequently the case.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-13. Though God does not delight in outward magnificence, but is present with, and accepts the worship of, poor believers who assemble in the meanest place: yet he expects that the wealthy should devote their riches to his service. And whatever is liberally expended, out of zeal for his glory, and according to the rule of his word, shall be graciously accepted; though perhaps man may censure the expense, as needless or useless. (Notes, Matt. xxvi. 6-13. John xii. 1-8.)—Every good work should be done heartily and without procrastination: but it is not needless delay to consult prudent measures, to make requisite preparations, and to remove such obstructions as might Solomon builds himself an house, 1: and the house of the forest of Lebanon, 2—5: the porch of pillars, 6: the porch of judgment, 7: the house of Pharaoh's daughter, 8. BUT Solomon was building his own house "thirteen years, and he finished all his house.

2 ¶ He built also "the house of the forest of Lebanon; the length thereof was an hundred cubits, and the breadth thereof fifty cubits, and the height thereof thirty cubits, upon four rows of cedar-pillars, with cedar-beams upon the pillars.

3 And it was covered with cedar above upon the "beams, that lay on forty-five pillars, fifteen in a row.

afterwards impede our progress, or divert our attention. Thus, young men, animated with a laudable design to seek the salvation of souls, and impatient to be employed in the work of the ministry, would do well to restrain their ardour, to wait for a proper opening in providence, and to spend some time in previous study, meditation, and prayer; that they may acquire the wisdom, experience, humility, and steadiness, requisite for so important a work; and afterwards proceed in it without interruption, and to better effect: and a few years spent in this manner will no more be lost time, than those which were employed in preparations for the building of Solomon's temple.—Every thing in the church above is conducted in perfect harmony and regularity; every part of that spiritual temple being made ready for its place, before it is conveyed thither: and the more the church on earth resembles it, the better.—The true church of God is most glorious within; and the true believer is chiefly employed in attending to the state of his heart.—In all religious matters expediency must be preferred to splendour; but stability must not be sacrificed even to apparent expediency.—No pompous services will purchase a dispensation from obeying the least of God's commandments. All those things in which men, who allow themselves in sin, confide, will be found as unavailing, as the temple was to the wicked kings and people of Israel; for nothing but unreserved obedience, to the precepts and statutes of God's word, can prove the sincerity of our faith, and our love to the Saviour. But, though numbers of professors apostatize, and whole nations forfeit their peculiar privileges; yet the Lord will dwell in the midst of his true people, and never forsake them; they will delight in his ordinances and commandments; and be encouraged by being told their duty, as it is a token of the Lord's favour to them.

V. 14—38. What is begun in the fear and love of God, in dependence on him, and obedience to him, will in due time be accomplished to his glory.—God must be honoured with the best we have: but gold is only meet to be trodden under foot, in comparison with the beauty of holiness, which is the glory and ornament of his spiritual temple.—The human nature of the Redeemer, that true temple in which God dwells with man, is immaculately holy: the Christian, as united unto Jesus, and "an habitation of God through the Spirit," is sanctified in his measure: and the church above, where innumerable angels unite with redeemed sinners, in ceaseless worship of God our Saviour, is perfect in this beauty. Let not then the hypocrite, or formal professor of Christianity, who is a stranger to the sanctifying influences of God's Spirit, and who lives in secret or open sin, suppose himself a part of this living temple.—Yet let sinners come to Jesus, as the living foundation, that they may be built on him, a part of this spiritual house, consecrated in body and soul to the glory of God.—If we have good ground to conclude, that we are a part of this living temple; let us look to it, that our inward part, which is seen by God alone, may be preserved most pure: let us be careful also of our outward conduct, that our blameless conversation may be ornamental to our profession in the sight of man: let us look to Jesus for encouragement and assistance in every service, and as the great exemplar to which we are to be conformed: and let us by faith behold that glorious company whom we hope soon to join; that we may now emulate their praises, imitate their obedience, and thus anticipate their comforts, even in this world of sin and sorrow.

NOTES.

CHAP. VII. V. 1. Solomon began the temple first, and was most earnest in expediting it; and therefore it was finished in far less time than his own palace. As he employed twenty years in these buildings, (ix. 10,) it seems he finished the temple before he began his own house; though his numerous workmen might have carried on both together.

V. 2. Some have thought that this palace was built, for retirement, in a beautiful situation near mount Lebanon: but it seems rather to have been erected not far from Jerusalem; and to have been thus called, either from its airy and lofty situation, or from the cedars of Lebanon of which it was built. For Solomon put the shields of gold "in the house of the forest of Lebanon:" yet when Shishak came to Jerusalem, he seized on them: and when Rehoboam made brazen ones in their stead, they were carried before him when he went to the house of the Lord, and brought back with him to the great chamber. (x. 17. 2 Chr. ix. 16. xii. 9—11.)

V. 6—12. The "porch of pillars" is supposed to have been a covered portico, in which Solomon's guards and attendants waited: and "the porch of judgment," another portico, in which he sat to decide causes. It is not certain, whether "the porch of pillars" belonged to "the house of the forest of Lebanon," or to the palace in Jerusalem: but it is most probable, that "the porch for the throne" was at Jerusalem.—The palace seems to have stood within two courts; one nearer to it than "the porch for the throne," and the other farther off.—The palace for Pharaoh's daughter was placed at some distance, "out of the city of David:" (Note, 2 Chr. viii. 11.) but it was built with the same magnificence as the other palaces. The costly stones seem to have been large valuable blocks of marble, beautifully squared and polished on every side: and the outer court was surrounded with a wall, like that which separated the court of the temple; so that the people might look through the rows of the cedar-beams, which were placed at proper distances. These buildings, though magnificent, were intended for use, and not mere ostentation: and no doubt they were finished in the best style of the architecture of those days. The court round Solomon's own house was built in the same manner as the inner court of the house of the Lord.

V. 14. Hiram's mother is in Chronicles said to have been "of the daughters of Dan;" (2 Chr. ii. 14;) and some think, that Dan was the proper name of her father: but perhaps she was originally of the tribe of Dan, and had first been married to a man of Naphtali; and, being by him left a widow, had married a Tyrian, to whom she bare Hiram, or Huram, who was called by the name of the king of Tyre. This man, uniting, as it were, the Israelite and the Gentile in one person, and being the chief workman in making the furniture of the temple, aptly represented the union of Jews and Gentiles in the Christian church. (Note, Eph. ii. 19—22.)

V. 15—22. (Marg. Ref.) Each of these pillars being eighteen cubits in height, the two together would measure thirty-six cubits in length: but one cubit is supposed to be allowed for the bases. (2 Chr. iii. 15.)—The chapters are, in one place, said to have been three cubits in height: but the upper part, covered with decorations, is thought to be there mentioned separately, and to be here included.—There were four hundred pomegranates in all; two hundred on each chapter, in two rows of an hundred each. Perhaps ninety-six of these might be counted on every side; being nearly one half of the whole number on each chapter: but, as some think, there were ninety-six smaller pomegranates in each row, in four divisions towards the four quarters of the sky; and four larger pomegranates were placed between these four divisions. (Jer. l. 23.)—A writer, who completely understood such subjects, would scarcely be able, by 18 And he made the pillars, and two rows round about upon the one net-work, to cover the chapters that were upon the top, with pomegranates: and so did he for the other chapter.

19 And the chapters that were upon the top of the pillars, were of lily-work in the porch, four cubits.

20 And the chapters upon the two pillars had pomegranates also above, over against the belly which was by the net-work: and the pomegranates were two hundred, in rows round about upon the other chapter.

21 And he set up the pillars in the porch of the temple: and he set up the right pillar, and called the name thereof Jachin; and he set up the left pillar, and called the name thereof Boaz.

22 And upon the top of the pillars was lily-work: so was the work of the pillars finished.

23 ¶ And he made a molten sea, ten cubits from the one brim to the other: it was round all about, and his height was five cubits: and a line of thirty cubits did compass it round about.

24 And under the brim of it round about there were knops compassing it, ten in a cubit, compassing the sea round about: the knops were cast in two rows when it was cast.

25 It stood upon twelve oxen, three looking toward the north, and three looking toward the west, and three looking toward the south, and three looking toward the east: and the sea was set above upon them, and all their hinder parts were inward.

26 And it was an hand-breadth thick, and the brim thereof was wrought like the brim of a cup, with flowers of lilies: it contained two thousand baths.

27 ¶ And he made ten bases of brass: four cubits was the length of one base, and four cubits the breadth thereof, and three cubits the height of it.

28 And the work of the bases was on this manner: they had borders, and the borders were between the ledges:

29 And on the borders that were between the ledges were lions, oxen, and cherubims: and upon the ledges there was a base above; and beneath the lions and oxen were certain additions made of thin work.

30 And every base had four brazen wheels, and plates of brass; and the four corners thereof had undersetters: under the laver were undersetters molten, at the side of every addition.

31 And the mouth of it, within the chapter and above, was a cubit: but the mouth thereof was round, after the work of the base, a cubit and an half; and also upon the mouth of it were gravings with their borders, four-square, not round.

32 And under the borders were four wheels: and the axletrees of the wheels were joined to the base, and the height of a wheel was a cubit and half a cubit.

33 And the work of the wheels was like the work of a chariot-wheel; their axletrees, and their naves, and their felloes, and their spokes, were all molten.

34 And there were four undersetters to the four corners of one base: and the undersetters were of the very base itself.

35 And in the top of the base was there a round compass of half a cubit high: and on the top of the base, the ledges thereof, and the borders thereof, were of the same.

36 For on the plates of the ledges thereof, and on the borders thereof, he graved cherubims, lions, and palm-trees, according to the proportion of every one, and additions round about.

37 After this manner he made the ten bases: all of them had one casting, one measure, and one size.

38 ¶ Then made he ten lavers of brass: one laver contained forty baths: and every laver was four cubits: and upon every one of the ten bases one laver.

39 And he put five bases on the right side of the house, and five on the left side of the house; and he set the sea on the right side of the house eastward, over against the south.

40 ¶ And Hiram made the lavers, and the shovels, and the basons: so Hiram made an end of doing all the work that he made king Solomon for the house of the Lord;

41 The two pillars, and the two bowls of the chapters that were on the top of the two pillars; and the two net-works, to cover the two bowls of the chapters which were upon the top of the pillars;

42 And four hundred pomegranates for the two net-works, even two rows of pomegranates for one net-work, to cover the two bowls of the chapters that were upon the pillars;

43 And the ten bases, and ten lavers on the bases;

44 And one sea, and twelve oxen under the sea;

45 And the pots, and the shovels, and the basons: and all these vessels, which Hiram made to king Solomon for the house of the Lord, were of bright brass.

46 In the plain of Jordan did the king cast them, in the clay-ground between Succoth and Zarthan.

47 And Solomon left all the vessels unweighed, because they were exceeding many: neither was the weight of the brass found out.

48 And Solomon made all the vessels that pertained unto the house of the Lord: the altar of gold, and the table of gold, whereupon the shewbread was.

words without plates, to convey any adequate ideas of the ornamental workmanship described in this chapter.—These pillars were intended for ornament and for significance. "Jachin" signifies, He will establish: "Boaz," In him is strength, (Marg. Ref.) And thus the priests and worshippers were reminded to trust only in the Lord, and not in themselves, or in their forms.

V. 23—30. In the tabernacle there had been one laver of brass, at which the priests continually washed themselves, and the sacrifices. (Note, Ex. xxx. 18—21.) But now the numbers of the priests and Levites were multiplied, and the sacrifices were proportionably increased. Therefore Solomon prepared this brazen sea; and ten lavers besides, at which the sacrifices were to be washed. These were constantly supplied with water, by the Nethinims or the Gibeonites, who were servants to the priests. (Note, Josh. ix. 27.) The brazen sea was a vast reservoir, capable of holding three thousand baths, or about four hundred and fifty hogsheds: though no more than two thousand were generally put into it.—The knops are supposed to have been in the form of an ox's head, (2 Chr. iv. 3,) and some think that the water flowed out at the mouths of them or of some of them.—The oxen on which, it was placed, might be intended as a protest against the absurd idolatry of worshipping God under an image in that form: though some have supposed them typical of the twelve apostles, bearing the gospel of Christ, "the fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness," into all the divisions of the earth.—The ten lavers, though generally placed in two rows, in the inner court of the temple, were fixed upon bases, which ran on wheels, that they might be removed as convenience required.—The description given of these bases, is very difficult: many of the original words are but seldom used, if at all, elsewhere: and it would be impossible to give a satisfactory explanation of each particular, without labour and prolixity disproportioned to its importance to us.—The likeness of lions, oxen, &c., we shall hereafter find to be undeniably emblematic of the boldness, patience, diligence, and heavenly-mindedness of the ministers of Christ; (Note, Ez. i. 5—14. Rev. iv. 6—8.) Oxen and cherubim are both mentioned, (29,) which shews they were not the same figures. (Note, Ez. x. 14.)

V. 48—51. There were ten tables; but perhaps one was much larger than the rest, and the shewbread was chiefly placed upon it. Everything was made new for the temple, even the altar for burnt-offering; (Note, 2 Chr. iv. 1;) except the ark of the covenant, with the mercy-seat and cherubim; for this was the 50 And the bowls, and the snuffers, and the basons, and the spoons, and the censers, of pure gold; and the hinges of gold, both for the doors of the inner house, the most holy place, and for the doors of the house, to wit, of the temple.

51 So 'was ended all the work that king Solomon made for the house of the LORD. And Solomon brought in the things which David his father had dedicated; even the silver, and the gold, and the vessels, did he put among the treasures of the house of the LORD.

CHAP. VIII.

Solomon assembles the elders and princes, and the priests carry the ark into the most holy place, 1-3. The glory of the LORD fills the house, 10, 14. Solomon blesses Israel; and praises God for performing his word to David, 12-21. He prays, that God would answer the supplications of Israel, and of strangers, in all ages, and in all cases, in which they should call upon him towards this holy temple, 22-33. He again praises God, and blesses the people, 54-61. He offers numerous sacrifices, keeps the feast fourteen days; and dismisses the people, who return home joyful and thankful, 62-66.

THEN ^aSolomon ^bassembled the elders of Israel, and all the heads of the tribes, the chief of the fathers of the children of Israel, unto king Solomon in Jerusalem, that they might bring up the ark of the covenant of the LORD, out of the city of David, which is Zion.

2 And all the men of Israel assembled themselves unto king Solomon at the feast, in the month Ethanim, which is the seventh month.

3 And all the elders of Israel came, and the priests took up the ark.

4 And they brought up the ark of the LORD, and peculiar symbol of God's presence with his people, as reconciled in Jesus Christ, the one Mediator between God and man. (Notes, Ex. xxv. 9-40. xxvii. 1-8. xxx. 1-8. Ex. xl. 38-44. xli. 22. xliii. 13-17.) Thus under the gospel-dispensation, externals of worship are altogether changed, but the way of access and acceptance with God is the same.—Most things were multiplied, or enlarged above what they were in the tabernacle; but there was but one altar of burnt-offering, and one altar of incense, as before. Thus the New-Testament dispensation is suited to the spread of the gospel, through all nations: but the multiplication of atonements and intercessors is antichristian.—Solomon, having plenty of materials, prepared great quantities of all requisite utensils for the service of the sanctuary, for the benefit of those who should come after him: and he deposited the remainder of the consecrated treasures in the house of the LORD, for the purpose, in future times. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-12. Princes and nobles may be allowed, without censure, to build their houses, and to lay out their estates, as it is suitable to their rank, convenience, or inclinations: yet they should be reminded that they will find it all a mere vanity. (Notes, Ex. ii. 4-11.) They should also be cautioned, not to expend too much in that manner, lest they should be straitened in their ability of doing good to others, and glorifying God; and not to suffer such cares and contrivances to take up their time, or to draw their thoughts and affections off from communion with God, and the care of their souls: for peace of conscience, joy in the Holy Ghost, and the lively hope of a heavenly inheritance, are the choicest comforts; the beauties of holiness are the most valuable ornaments; and distinguished usefulness is the most honourable and durable testimony to a man's character. When, however, men begin first with the service of God, and are not by other employments taken off from it, or rendered negligent in it, and still return to it for satisfaction; and when in all their undertakings, they have an eye to the peculiar duties of their stations, as well as to general convenience and utility; we may conclude, that the multiplicity of their engagements will not materially injure them.

V. 13-51. It is well when great ingenuity unites with equal integrity; when entire confidence is proved to have been well placed; and when every one abounds in the work of the Lord, in proportion as his abilities are enlarged. Yet, in all our services, and after them, we need washing from the guilt and pollution of sin, which defiles us and all we do. Let us therefore bless God for "the fountain" which he hath "opened for sin and uncleanness;" and which by the preaching of the gospel and written word, may be conveyed to every part of the earth.—In him also is strength, and he will establish all who trust in him. They who depend on their own resolutions, wisdom, or works; they who trust in riches, honour, prosperity, or powerful friends; they who worship other gods, or depend on other intercessors; and they who presume upon their notions, creeds, or external forms, can never be established, but will at length sink and perish. But the power of Christ rests upon the humble believer; his arms uphold him; his grace establishes his heart in hope and love: he is his stability in every trial, and his sufficiency for every service: and is both able, and willing "to keep him from falling, and to present him faultless before the presence of his glory, with exceeding joy." He indeed is both the temple and the builder; the altar and the sacrifice; the light of our souls, and bread of life; and in every way adequate to the largest and most numerous wants of the millions, who have applied, and shall apply, to him. External images cannot describe, words cannot express, the heart cannot conceive, his preciousness or his love. Let us come to him, and wash away our sins in his blood; let us seek the tabernacle of the congregation, and all the holy vessels that were in the tabernacle, even those did the priests and the Levites bring up.

5 And king Solomon and all the congregation of Israel that were assembled unto him, were with him before the ark, sacrificing sheep and oxen, that could not be told nor numbered for multitude.

6 And the priests brought in the ark, of the covenant of the LORD unto his place, into the oracle of the house, to the most holy place, even under the wings of the cherubims.

7 For the cherubims spread forth their two wings over the place of the ark, and the cherubims covered the ark, and the staves thereof, above.

8 And they drew out the staves, that the ends of the staves were seen out in the holy place before the oracle, and they were not seen without: and there they are unto this day.

9 There was nothing in the ark save the two tables of stone, which Moses put there at Horeb, when the LORD made a covenant with the children of Israel, when they came out of the land of Egypt.

10 ¶ And it came to pass, when the priests were come out of the holy place, that the cloud filled the house of the LORD, 11 So that the priests could not stand to minister because of the cloud: for the glory of the LORD had filled the house of the LORD.

NOTES.

CHAP. VIII. V. 1. (Notes, 2 Sam. vi. 1, 2. 1 Chr. xiii. 1—4.) The temple was in a peculiar manner the residence of JEHOWAH in the midst of Israel, when the ark of the covenant was placed in it: and the want of the ark, after the Babylonish captivity, in the temple then built, intimated that that dispensation was ready to vanish away.—Solomon's undertaking therefore was incomplete, and the temple lacked its chief glory, (notwithstanding all its gold and exquisite workmanship,) until the ark was removed thither, and fixed in the most holy place. This therefore he took care to perform, according to the law, and in the most public and solemn manner.—Mount Moriah, on which the temple was built, lay near the city of David, on mount Zion, where the ark was before placed, but was distinct from it. (Notes, 1 Chr. xxi. 18—30. xxii. 1. 2 Chr. iii. 1.)

V. 2. This was about eleven months after the temple was completed. The intervening time was doubtless employed in getting every thing ready for the solemnity; and the time which was chosen coincided with the feast of tabernacles, which ensured the presence of multitudes of the most zealous and pious Israelites, along with the elders and chief persons. (Note, 63—65, 2 Chr. vii. 4—10.)

V. 3. The Levites of Kohath's family were appointed to carry the ark; and the priests were of that family: on the most solemn occasions, therefore, the priests performed this service. (Notes, Num. vii. 4—9. Josh. iii. 4. 2 Sam. vi. 12, 13. 1 Chr. xv. 15.)

V. 4. It is probable, that both the ancient tabernacle which Moses had made, and that which David had formed at Jerusalem, were brought up to the temple, and with all their vessels and furniture, deposited in its treasures. Thus the Mosaic dispensation afterwards resigned up all its honours to the Christian; and thus the knowledge and grace of the church on earth will be absorbed and lost in the vision and glory of heaven.

V. 5. The altar of burnt-offering, which Solomon had prepared, seems to have been covered with sacrifices, without any fire under them: and when Solomon had ended his prayer, the fire came down from heaven and consumed them. (Note, Lev. ix. 24. 2 Chr. vii. 1—3.) But there might also be other sacrifices on the former altar, and likewise temporary altars erected, with all suitable preparations for so extraordinary an occasion. (Note, 63—65.)

V. 7—9. The cherubim, here mentioned, do not mean those made of solid gold, in the days of Moses, shadowing the ark, which were inseparable from the mercy-seat; (Note, Ex. xxv. 10—21;) but those especially which Solomon had just prepared in the most holy place. (Note, vi. 23—28.) The ends of the staves might be seen in the holy of holies, but not in the outer sanctuary. The ark now came to its resting place, and it continued in the same situation when this history was written.—Aaron's rod, the pot of manna, and the copy of the law, were by, but not within, the ark. (Note, Heb. ix. 1—5.)

V. 10—14. All the priests and Levites attended the removal of the ark, and sang solemn praises upon the occasion, with the sound of trumpets and instru-

12 ¶ Then spake Solomon, "The LORD said that he would dwell in the thick darkness.

13 I have surely built thee an house to dwell in, a settled place for thee to abide in for ever.

14 And the king turned his face about, and blessed all the congregation of Israel: (and all the congregation of Israel stood;)

15 And he said, "Blessed be the LORD God of Israel, which spake with his mouth unto David my father, and hath with his hand fulfilled it, saying,

16 Since the day that I brought forth my people Israel out of Egypt, I chose no city out of all the tribes of Israel to build an house, that my name might be therein; but I chose David to be over my people Israel.

17 And it was in the heart of David my father to build an house for the name of the LORD God of Israel.

18 And the LORD said unto David my father, "Whereas it was in thine heart to build an house unto my name, thou didst wilt that it was in thine heart.

19 Nevertheless thou shalt not build the house; but thy son, that shall come forth out of thy loins, he shall build the house unto my name.

20 And the LORD hath performed his word that he spake; and I am risen up in the room of David my father, and sit on the throne of Israel, as the LORD promised, and have built an house for the name of the LORD God of Israel.

21 And I have set there a place for the ark, wherein is the covenant of the LORD, which he made ments of music. (Notes, 2 Chr. v. 11-13.) But when the ark, as the symbol of God's presence, had taken possession of the temple, the cloud filled the whole of it, so that the priests could no longer continue in it. The "thick darkness" represented the comparative obscurity and terror of that dispensation; and the darkness, which in this world rests upon all our enquiries into the things of God, and of eternity. God, indeed, is LIGHT, and with him is no darkness at all; (Marg. Ref.); but we sinners cannot approach or endure that light, except as seen in the person of Jesus Christ. Yet this thick darkness, whilst it terrified others, assured Solomon of the Divine favour, and that this temple would be the residence of the ark, and the centre of the worship of Israel, for generations to come. And with these assurances he encouraged the people; he congratulated them on this renewed token of the Lord's former favours to Israel; and he pronounced a solemn and affectionate blessing on them. (Note, 2 Sam. vi. 18, 19.)—Similar evidences of the Lord's gracious presence, and of his awful glory, had been vouchsafed, when the tabernacle was erected; (Notes, Ex. xl. 34, 35. Lev. xvi. 2;) and it is not easy to distinguish with accuracy between the cloud, and the glory of God which filled the house. It may, however, be observed, that at the close of Solomon's prayer, the fire burst forth from the cloud, and consumed the sacrifices on the altar. (Note, 2 Chr. vi. 1.)

V. 15-21. In this introductory address, while Solomon adored and blessed God with lively gratitude for performing his promises, he also reminded the people of several particulars which were well suited to affect their hearts, and prepare them to unite with understanding in the solemn services of that interesting occasion. The Lord had by Moses declared his purpose of selecting one place for his sanctuary, where he might "record his name," and meet and bless his worshippers; but hitherto no temple had been built, and the tabernacle and ark had been removed from one place to another. (Ex. xx. 24. Notes, Deut. xii. 5-7. 2 Sam. vii. 7-16.)—David, his chosen king, was indeed accepted in his design of erecting a temple, yet he was not allowed to accomplish his purpose. But, at length, according to the promise of God to him, his son had completed the temple, and had brought the ark into the most holy place. The tables of the law are called the covenant, because the covenant with Israel at Sinai was grounded on them. (Note, Ex. xxv. 10-22. Marg. Ref.)

V. 22. A scaffold had been prepared in the court of the temple; and on this Solomon stood up to bless and instruct the people, and then he knelt down upon it, to offer the following most copious and comprehensive prayer. (2 Chr. vi. 13.) To this reverential posture he also added the spreading forth of his hands towards heaven, as expressive of the fervour of his heart, and the largeness of his expectations, in this act of worship. (Marg. Ref.)—The king of Israel never looked more glorious than on this occasion. Doubtless his personal performance of this service gave it a peculiar solemnity, and greatly affected the people; but he was also a type of Christ, who is at once our King and our Intercessor.—It is most probable that he prayed from a full heart, without any precomposed form of words; but not without having seriously and fully considered the various blessings for which he should pray.

with our fathers, when he brought them out of the land of Egypt.

22 ¶ And Solomon stood before the altar of the LORD in the presence of all the congregation of Israel, and spread forth his hands toward heaven;

23 And he said, "LORD God of Israel, there is no god like thee, in heaven above, or on earth beneath, who keepest covenant and mercy with thy servants that walk before thee with all their heart;

24 Who hast kept with thy servant David my father that thou promisedst him: thou spakest also with thy mouth, and hast fulfilled it with thine hand, as it is this day.

25 Therefore now, LORD God of Israel, keep with thy servant David my father that thou promisedst him, saying, "There shall not fail thee a man in my sight to sit on the throne of Israel: so that thy children take heed to their way, that they walk before me as thou hast walked before me.

26 And now, O God of Israel, let thy word, I pray thee, be verified, which thou spakest unto thy servant David my father.

27 But will God indeed dwell on the earth? Behold, the heaven and heaven of heavens cannot contain thee; how much less this house that I have builded?

28 Yet have thou respect unto the prayer of thy servant, and to his supplication, O LORD my God, to hearken unto the cry and to the prayer which thy servant prayeth before thee to-day:

29 That thine eyes may be open toward this house night and day, even toward the place of which thou

V. 23, 24. Solomon, in opening his prayer, addressed the Lord with reference to his essential perfections, and his general relations to his rational creatures; and, as the God of Israel, the sole object of their worship, the author of their peculiar mercies, a God in covenant with them, and the eternal portion of his believing obedient people. Other nations had their imagined deities, whom they worshipped and confided in; but they were not like the God of Israel, who had evidently performed all his covenant engagements to his "servants, that walked before him with all their heart;" especially in his recent dealings with David and his family. (Notes, Ex. xv. 9-11. Deut. xxxiii. 26-28. 2 Sam. vii. 8-16.)

V. 25, 26. As the Lord had thus far performed his promises to David in placing his son on his throne, and in enabling him to build him a house, Solomon took occasion to plead for the accomplishment of the other promises respecting the perpetuity of the succession in his posterity. But this was conditional; and his petition implied a prayer, that they might be directed and inclined to walk before God, as David had done, in such a manner as might ensure that event. (Notes, 1 Chr. xxviii. 7-9. xxix. 10-19. Ps. lxxxix. 19-37.)

V. 27. Solomon was deeply sensible, and he would have the people seriously consider, that the most magnificent temple was no meet habitation for the infinite God. The ark might abide in it, and the Lord might thence display his gracious presence with his worshippers, which, contrasting his majesty, purity, and justice, with their meanness, guilt, and pollution, was a condescension that could not be sufficiently admired: but "the heaven of heavens," the glorious mansion of angels and archangels, could not contain, or circumscribe, his essential presence. (Notes, Is. lvii. 15, 16. lxxvi. 1, 2. John i. 1-3. 14. Acts vii. 44-50. Eph. ii. 19-22. Col. ii. 8, 9. Rev. xxi. 1-4.)

V. 28-30. The Lord was essentially not more present in the temple than elsewhere; and the full displays of his glory were made in heaven, his throne and his dwelling-place; yet he had recorded his name in the temple; and it was a peculiar type of the human nature of Christ, in whom the Divine perfections are revealed, as harmonizing in the salvation of believers, in whom "God is reconciling the world to himself," dwelling among men, and accepting the services and answering the prayers of all true believers.—The sacrifices continually offered, the incense burnt, and the whole service performed at the temple, were typical of the Redeemer's offices, oblation, and intercession. The temple, therefore, must be continually adverted to in all their prayers. (Marg. Ref.)—Accordingly, the Israelites, when far distant from Jerusalem, were accustomed to turn their faces towards it, as expressive of their dependence on the services there performed by the priests, and of their communion with the worshippers of JEHOVAH; and when they were near it, they resorted thither to present their supplications. (Notes, Dan. vi. 10, 11.)—Thus Solomon besought God, that, in answer to the prayer which he that day offered, he would, in all future ages, regard the temple with his peculiar favour, and hear the prayers of all who should present them towards it, wheresoever they were, or whatever were their distresses. Under one word "forgive," he comprised all that he could ask in behalf of his people; for, as all misery springs from sin, forgive-hast said, "My name shall be there; that thou mayest hearken unto the prayer which thy servant shall make toward this place."

30 And hearken thou to the supplication of thy servant, and of thy people Israel, when they shall pray toward this place; and hear thou in heaven thy dwelling place: and when thou hearest, forgive.

31 ¶ If any man trespass against his neighbour, and an oath be laid upon him to cause him to swear, and the oath come before thine altar in this house:

32 Then hear thou in heaven, and do, and judge thy servants, condemning the wicked, to bring his way upon his head; and justifying the righteous, to give him according to his righteousness.

33 ¶ When thy people Israel be smitten down before the enemy, because they have sinned against thee, and shall turn again to thee, and confess thy name, and pray, and make supplication unto thee in this house:

34 Then hear thou in heaven, and forgive the sin of thy people Israel, and bring them again unto the land which thou gavest unto their fathers.

35 ¶ When heaven is shut up, and there is no rain, because they have sinned against thee; if they pray toward this place, and confess thy name, and turn from their sin, when thou afflictest them:

36 Then hear thou in heaven, and forgive the sin of thy servants, and of thy people Israel, that thou teach them the good way wherein they should walk, and give rain upon thy land which thou hast given to thy people for an inheritance.

ness of sin must prepare the way for the removal of every evil, and the communication of every good; and, without it, no deliverance can eventually prove a blessing. (Notes, Ps. xxxiii. 1, 2. Rom. iv. 6-8.)

V. 31, 32. In case a man should be accused of defrauding or robbing his neighbour, and decisive evidence being wanting to prove whether he were, or were not, guilty, an appeal should be made by oath, at, or towards the altar, before the temple, to the heart-searching God, that he was innocent; or in any other case in which this solemn appeal was made; Solomon prayed that the Lord would interpose, in some evident manner, to discover and punish the guilty, and to clear up the character and recompense the integrity of the innocent. (Notes, Ez. xxii. 7-15. Num. v. 22-31. Matt. xxiii. 16-22.)

V. 33, 34. The Israelites would not be "smitten down," or taken prisoners, by their enemies, except they sinned against God: and, notwithstanding their temple, altar, and sacrifices, they could not expect deliverance, or restoration from captivity or bondage, without repentance and turning to the Lord; without confessing their relations and obligations to him, and their sins against him; and without offering their supplications towards the temple, to him who dwelt upon a mercy-seat between the cherubim. (Notes, Josh. vii. 10-13. Dan. ix. 1-19.)

V. 35, 36. (Notes, xvii. i. xviii. 36-45. Marg. Ref.)—That thou, &c. (36.) In addition to all the teaching of the written word, and the instructions of the priests, Levites, and prophets, Solomon intreated the Lord himself to teach the people to profit by their advantages and chastisements: for this would make way for forgiveness, and consequently for returning plenty and prosperity.—The same words are rendered in Chronicles, "When thou hast taught them the good way in which they should walk."—The Divine teaching particularly respects this "good way in which we ought to walk," and not mere notions and speculations.

V. 38. The plague, &c. Or, "his own sore, and his own grief." 2 Chr. vi. 29. (Note, Prov. xiv. 10.) The former petitions particularly respected public judgments and distresses; but this passage related to private afflictions and trials, and whatever should fill the heart and conscience of any individual with anguish and dismay.—This interpretation doubtless includes, though it is not confined to that meaning which is very frequently given to the expression, "the plague of his own heart;" namely, the prevalence of indwelling sin, which, as a plague or pestilential disease, is the grief and sore of every true believer; and, in connexion with the guilt, which in consequence accumulates upon his conscience, brings him day by day, to offer his fervent prayers and supplications before the mercy-seat of a forgiving God. 38 What prayer and supplication soever be made by any man, or by all thy people Israel, which shall know every man the plague of his own heart, and spread forth his hands toward this house:

39 Then hear thou in heaven thy dwelling place, and forgive, and do, and give to every man according to his ways, whose heart thou knowest; (for thou, even thou only, knowest the hearts of all the children of men;)

40 That they may fear thee all the days that they live in the land which thou gavest unto our fathers.

41 ¶ Moreover, concerning a stranger that is not of thy people Israel, but cometh out of a far country for thy name's sake;

42 (For they shall hear of thy great name, and of thy strong hand, and of thy stretched-out arm;) when he shall come and pray towards this house;

43 Hear thou in heaven thy dwelling place, and do according to all that the stranger calleth to thee for; that all people of the earth may know thy name, to fear thee, as do thy people Israel; and that they may know that this house, which I have builded, is called by thy name.

44 ¶ If thy people go out to battle against their enemy, whithersoever thou shalt send them, and shall pray unto the Lord toward the city which thou hast chosen, and toward the house that I have built for thy name:

45 Then hear thou in heaven their prayer and their supplication, and maintain their cause.

46 If they sin against thee, (for there is no man that sinneth not,) and thou be angry with them, and deliver them to the enemy, so that they carry them away captives unto the land of the enemy, far or near;

V. 39. (Notes, John ii. 23-25. Heb. iv. 12, 13. Rev. ii. 23.) The Lord, "who only knoweth the hearts of the children of men," could exactly distinguish betwixt the hypocrite, and the upright penitent believer; and would deal with each, according to the covenant of mercy made with sinners through the promised Saviour, forgiving and doing all good to the one, and leaving the other under condemnation.

V. 40. As "there is no man that sinneth not," (46,) so no man could worship a holy God, "if there were not forgiveness with him." (Notes, Gen. xxii. 11, 12. Ps. cxxx. 3, 4.) Unless this was clearly revealed, that reverential fear, which unites with hope, and leads men to repent and seek the Lord, would be extinguished, when sinners became acquainted with their own character and state, and with his perfections and holy laws; and only that slavish fear would remain, which unites with enmity and despair, and drives men further and further from God and his worship.—It is very instructive to compare the several parts of this prayer, with the preceding prophecies, and the subsequent history; which may in good measure be done by consulting the marginal references.

V. 41-43. Solomon was persuaded that the heathen nations would hear of the name, perfections, and wonderful works of JEHOVAH; and would come and worship him at this temple, as the God of Israel, who dwelt among his people by the ark of his strength, and was propitious to them through the sacrifices there offered. (Notes, John xii. 20-22. Acts viii. 26-31.) He therefore interceded for them also, that they might be accepted, and obtain the same blessings with the native Israelites: and he desired and hoped, that all the nations of the earth might know, fear, and worship the God of Israel. (Notes, 1 Sam. xvii. 45-47. Ps. xxii. 27, 28. Jer. xvi. 19-21. Matt. vi. 13.) Accordingly we are told, that there was a court built, called the court of the Gentiles, which was appropriated to the use of those who came from other nations to worship the God of Israel, but who were not circumcised, and did not observe the ceremonial law. (Marg. Ref.)—The prejudices of the Jews, in the days of Christ, against the admission of the Gentiles into the church, arose from ignorance of the Scriptures, connected with national prejudices, pharisaical pride, and bigotry; which being early imbibed, were not easily removed even from true believers.

V. 44. Thou shalt send, &c. That is, in any just and necessary war; for God did not send the Israelites, when they were actuated by selfishness to engage in oppressive and unrighteous wars; neither could they reasonably expect his assistance in them.

47 Yet if they shall [†]bethink themselves in the land whither they were carried captives, and repent, and make supplication unto thee in the land of them that carried them captives, saying, We have sinned, and have [‡]done perversely, we have committed wickedness :

48 And so [‡]return unto thee with all their heart, and with all their soul, in the land of their enemies, which led them away captive, and pray unto thee toward their land which thou gavest unto their fathers, [†]the city which thou hast chosen, and the house which I have built for thy name :

49 Then [†]hear thou their prayer and their supplication in heaven thy dwelling place, and maintain their [‡]cause.

50 And forgive thy people that have sinned against thee, and all their transgressions wherein they have transgressed against thee, and [‡]give them compassion before them who carried them captive, that they may have compassion on them :

51 For they [‡]be [†]thy people, and thine inheritance, which thou broughtest forth out of Egypt, from the midst of [†]the furnace of iron :

52 That [†]thine eyes may be open unto the supplication of thy servant, and unto the supplication of thy people Israel, to hearken unto them [†]in all that they call for unto thee.

53 For thou didst [†]separate them from among all the people of the earth, to [‡]be [†]thine inheritance, [†]as thou spakest by the hand of Moses thy servant, when thou broughtest our fathers out of Egypt, O LORD God.

54 ¶ And it was so, that, [†]when Solomon had made an end of praying all this prayer and supplication unto the LORD, he arose from before the altar of the LORD, from [†]“kneeling on his knees, [†]“with his hands spread up to heaven.

55 And he stood, and [†]blessed all the congregation of Israel with a loud voice, saying,

56 [†]Blessed [‡]be the LORD, that [†]hath given rest unto his people Israel, according to all that he promised :

[†]“there hath not [†]failed one word of all his good pro-

V. 46—53. (Notes, Jam. iii. 1, 3. 1 John i. 8—10. iii. 4—6.) This part of Solomon's intercession was evidently answered, in the restoration of the Jews after the Babylonish captivity. (Lev. xxvi. 38—45. Deut. iv. 29—31. Jer. xxix. 11—14.) Though the temple and city lay in ruins; yet when they bethought themselves, and repented, and prayed in the land of Chaldea, towards the land of Israel; the Lord heard, forgave, and restored them to their own land. (Notes, Dan. ix. 1—19.) But it will hereafter receive another more remarkable answer, when the Jews shall be gathered from their present dispersion, become a part of the Christian church, and probably be re-instated in their own country.—All Solomon's arguments, in this plea for his people, were deduced from the Lord's choice of them, his separation of them from other nations to be his inheritance, and the favours which he had already conferred upon them.—It appears from Chronicles, that Solomon concluded with a passage taken from one of the Psalms. (Note, 2 Chr. vi. 41, 42. Marg. Ref.)

V. 55—61. (Notes, Josh. xxi. 43—45. xxiii. 14—16.) Incline, &c. (58.) No blessing can be expected, whilst men continue wilfully disobedient. No human heart is of itself inclined to obey the call to repentance, faith, and newness of life, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord. The first benefit communicated to sinners, through the intercession of Him whom Solomon typified, is “the inclining of the heart to this obedience.” This, therefore, we should beg of God for others, and for ourselves, when we perceive our need of it: for when this is granted, all else will follow. Yet Solomon afterwards exhorted the people to be “perfect with the Lord, &c.” (61:) and this is the scriptural method; though to many it appears unsystematical and inconsistent: but the exhortation reminds men of their duty; and the prayer or promise shews how they may be enabled to do it. Note, Ps. ii. 10. Ez. xi. 17—20. xxviii. 30—32. xxxvi. 25—27. Phil. ii. 12, 13.)

V. 63—65. (Num. vii.) The sacrifices offered at the dedication of the tabernacle were very few, compared with the vast number here mentioned: but those were proportioned to the circumstances of the princes of Israel in the wilderness, these to the riches and power of king Solomon. (Marg. Ref.)—It is probable, that altars of earth, or of rough stone, were prepared all over the inner court. (Note, Ex. xx. 24.)—All these sacrifices were not offered on the mise, which he promised by the hand of Moses his servant.

57 The [†]LORD our God be with us, as he was with our fathers: let him not leave us, nor forsake us :

58 That he may [†]incline our hearts unto him, to walk in all his ways, and to keep [†]his commandments, and his statutes, and his judgments, which he commanded our fathers.

59 And let these my words, wherewith I have made supplication before the LORD, be [†]“nigh unto the LORD our God day and night, that he maintain the cause of his servant, and the cause of his people Israel [†]“at all times, [†]“as the matter shall require ;

61 Let your heart therefore be [†]“perfect with the LORD our God, to walk in his statutes, and to keep his commandments, as at this day.

62 ¶ And [†]the king, and all Israel with him, offered sacrifice before the LORD.

63 And Solomon offered [†]“a sacrifice of peace-offerings, which he offered unto the LORD, two and twenty thousand oxen, and an hundred and twenty thousand sheep. So the king and all the children of Israel [†]“dedicated the house of the LORD.

64 The same day did the king [†]“hallow the middle of the court that [†]“was before the house of the LORD ; for there he offered burnt-offerings, and meat-offerings, and the fat of the peace-offerings: because [†]“the brazen altar that [†]“was before the LORD [†]“was too little to receive the burnt-offerings, and meat-offerings, and the fat of the peace-offerings.

65 ¶ And at that time Solomon [†]“held a feast, and all Israel with him, [†]“a great congregation, [†]“from the entering in of Hamath unto [†]“the river of Egypt, before the LORD our God, [†]“seven days and seven days, [†]“even fourteen days.

66 On [†]the eighth day he sent the people away: and they [†]blessed the king, and went unto their tents, [†]“joyful and glad of heart for all the goodness that the LORD had done for David his servant, and for Israel his people.

same day, but during the whole time of the solemnity: and the immense multitudes assembled feasted on the flesh of the peace-offerings.—The people separated on the twenty-third day of the seventh month, the day after the close of the feast of tabernacles; (2 Chr. vii. 9, 10;) so that the dedication of the temple must have preceded. And, as the great day of atonement was observed on the tenth day of the seventh month, it is not improbably conjectured, that the seven days of the feast of dedication preceded that solemnity; and that the people waited after it, to keep the feast of tabernacles also, before they returned home. (Notes, Lev. xvi. 29—31. xxiii. 26—32.)

V. 66. The people departed full of admiration of Solomon's piety, wisdom, magnificence, and liberality; as well as of gratitude to the Lord for all his goodness: and they prayed most fervently for the king, being much enlivened by the sacred ordinance. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—9. When those in authority heartily promote the cause of true religion, increasing numbers will soon be engaged in the cause: thus, the pious designs, which were conceived in a single breast, may, by the blessing of God, be completed with the concurrence, and to the benefit, of thousands, and perhaps millions! and what a blessed improvement is this of influence, affluence, power, and wisdom! Numbers indeed will assist on such occasions, to please their superiors, or to acquire reputation, who are not cordially attached to the cause, and who will not profit by it themselves; yet, even they may forward such measures as conduce to the good of others.—True wisdom is displayed as much in the well timing, as in the orderly conducting, of important undertakings; and in obtaining the [†]voluntary concurrence of others, where folly would deem it sufficient to employ superior power.—Without the gracious presence of the Lord, every religious observance is an empty form: the written word, the preaching of the gospel, prayer, baptism, the Lord's supper, orthodox creeds, professions, speculations, and external order, form but a well-proportioned lifeless carcass; a temple without the ark, and without the glory; unless we in these things hold communion with a reconciled God upon a mercy-seat, through the person and work of the Redeemer, and by the influences of his sanctifying Spirit. This is the life and soul of true godliness, which infuses efficacy into every truth, ordinance, or duty; and in all things it should be chiefly attended to. For, as far as this is attained, we sinners upon earth hold fellowship with the church above; and, with all the company of angels and archangels, we worship the name of God our Saviour, with acceptance, and to his glory.

V. 10-21. When we wait upon the Lord in the ways of his appointment, we shall surely receive tokens of his special favour: yet, his light is inaccessible to us; and the cloud, with which he veils his insufferable brightness, in his discoveries of himself to us, sometimes obstructs our view of his love, and causes us to tremble for fear of his judgments. The dark dispensations of providence, the awful declarations of God's word, the apprehensions of his purity and justice, and the consciousness of guilt and pollution, often induce the awakened sinner to say, "Depart from me, for I am a sinful man, O Lord;" when such views should quicken him in fleeing for refuge to the hope of the gospel. (Note, Luke v. 1-11.) On these occasions, they, who are stronger in faith, and more advanced in knowledge and experience, should encourage their weaker brethren, and explain such things to them as needlessly alarm them: for the established believer can educe comfort, and motives for thankful obedience, from that very darkness which dismays and confounds the unexperienced Christian. However, blessed be God, in the person of our Emmanuel, and in his complete redemption, "the thick darkness" in which JEHOVAH dwells, is greatly dispelled; the dark cloud is become bright to us; (Note, Matt. xvii. 5-8;) and though, compared with the beatific vision, we see through a glass darkly; yet, following him, who "is the Light of the world," "we shall not abide in darkness, but shall have the light of life." Yet in the best frames of the most eminent believers, sacred joy, gratitude, and love, will be mixed with deep humility and reverential fear; and conscious guilt and pollution will mingle self-aborrence and godly sorrow with their most fervent praises and adorations.—We should all use our utmost exertion for the honour of God: yet the most zealous believer will be conscious, that he has lost opportunities of service, through infirmity, temptation, and encumbrances. But when the Lord is not pleased to employ us in any work, which we sincerely design and vigorously attempt, he will notice and recompense the intention, even as much, as if it had been accomplished; let us then persevere in devising, and endeavouring to execute, plans of usefulness, though we be often baffled and unsuccessful; for it shall at last be declared, that we "did well that it was in our heart:" and let sinners remember, that they also are accountable to God, and will be punished, for all the wickedness which was conceived in their hearts, though they were restrained in providence, left destitute of the power, or deterred by the fear of man; and therefore did not actually commit it.—When the Lord's time arrives for any work to be done, all opposition will die away, all difficulties vanish, and all things concur in forwarding its completion: and whatever good work we have been employed in, and enabled to effect, we should consider it as a performance of his promises, and as an occasion afforded of celebrating His praises, to whom alone all the glory belongs.

V. 22-30. The service of God is the highest honour of the greatest of men; and to lead others in prayer and praise, to animate and assist them in worshipping the Lord, forms the noblest employment on earth, and most resembles that of the angels in heaven. But indeed, the most exalted adorations of the noblest creatures are beneath the notice of his infinite Majesty, and only accepted through his unspeakable condescension. With what internal awe, and external indications of reverence, should we, worthless sinners, prostrate ourselves before his glorious and holy Majesty! How should we approach his mercy-seat with admiring, adoring gratitude, and humble expectation of his invaluable and much needed benefits! and how should faith and love exalt our souls above all external objects, and raise them to heaven, his dwelling place, where He displays his glory, who filleth immensity; and inhabiteth eternity!—But, behold, he dwelleth in human nature, as in his temple! there sinners may see his glory, and live: and when we pray, directing our faith towards that sacred residence of the Deity, he will assuredly hear, and forgive our sins.

V. 31-45. It is a debt we owe to our brethren, neighbours, friends, and strangers, yea, to our enemies, to intercede for them as their cases may require. Having, therefore, such a multiplicity of persons, cases, and wants, to spread before the Lord, our hearts should frequently be enlarged to pray copiously, as well as fervently; and we shall not be condemned for long prayers, if they be not formal, and rendered tedious by vain unmeaning repetitions.—It is also a comfort to the believer to reflect, how many prayers of parents, ministers, and pious friends, are laid up before God on his behalf, and how many are now praying for him in one place or other. All these shall, in due time, be answered in blessings unnumbered; nay, even whole nations, through successive generations, have reaped the benefits of the fervent supplications of a single true believer. Such intercessors form the unseen strength and bulwark of kingdoms; may the Lord increase their numbers, and may we seek to be found among them!—Yet the prayers of all the subjects would be unavailing, did not the King, our Prince of Peace, the builder of the spiritual temple, intercede for them. His pleading is always prevalent, and gives efficacy to all the rest; yet neither the prayers of godly friends, nor even the Saviour's intercession, will benefit those who are never brought to pray earnestly for themselves. For he intercedes for those alone who eventually are led to "believe in his name," and "who come to God by him:" and the prayers of his people, for such as continue impenitent and unbelieving, return into their own bosom.

V. 46-66. We are, alas! all sinners; and sin is the cause of all calamities, public and personal; and unless forsaken and forgiven, it must terminate in final misery. But when the vilest transgressor bethinks himself, and examines his heart and life; when he is humbled before God, and penitently confesses that he hath sinned, hath done perversely, and committed wickedness; when he returns to the Lord with his whole heart, and prays unto him in the Saviour's name, then he hath begun to receive the benefit of his intercession, and the Father will hear in heaven his supplication, and maintain his cause. Then, whatever be his grief, his burden and terror, the guilt of his conscience, the depravity of his heart, the force of temptation, or the pressure of affliction, he will bring it, and spread it in secret before a heart-searching and merciful God; thus he will obtain pardon and peace, and learn to love and fear the Lord all his days. In this manner the Israel of God is established and sanctified, and the backslider is recovered and healed; the stranger is brought nigh, and the mourner comforted; the name of God is glorified, and numbers are added to the church of such as shall be saved. Often did offending Israel in this way prove the mercy of God, when they sought him under their distresses; and there failed not one good word of all that he had promised them. But, at length, they wearied out his patience, and all his threatenings were accomplished: yet, even in their present dispersion, they will at length bethink themselves, and turn to God, as dwelling in his true temple, and then they shall be numbered among his people. Oh, may they speedily be restored, that their conversion may be as life from the dead to all the Gentile nations, that all the people of the "earth may know," and worship our God and Saviour! "May the Lord our God be again with them, as he was with their fathers, and incline their hearts unto him to walk in all his ways!"—By the example of Israel, other nations should be warned and instructed. No war should be engaged in, which cannot be conducted in a spirit of faith and prayer: princes and nobles should set the example in the worship of God, and act accordingly: public calamities should excite to national repentance, reformation, and prayer; and these things would best secure public peace and prosperity. The same should be the conduct of churches, families, and individuals. May "the Lord then incline our hearts unto him, that we may walk in all his ways, and keep his commands and statutes;" may we abound in his work, and stir up others to do the same; may we love the Lord, and do good to, and pray for, one another, and rejoice together for all the goodness that the Lord hath done for us and for his people! Then shall we enjoy some of the days of heaven upon earth, and be continually preparing for that world, where the feast of holy love and joy will be unalloyed and eternal.

NOTES.

CHAP. IX. V. 1, 2. Solomon did not finish his other buildings, till above twelve years after the dedication of the temple; (10. Note, vii. 1;) and it is improbable that this gracious appearance of God to him was delayed so long: some expositors, therefore render these verses, "And it was, that thus Solomon finished," &c. "And the LORD appeared," &c. The two subjects are kept entirely distinct in Chronicles. (2 Chr. vii. 11, 12.)—The encouragement given Solomon while building the temple, (Note, vi. 11-13,) was either sent by a prophet, or given in an answer by the high-priest; for this was only the second appearance of God to him. (Note, iii. 5-14.)

V. 3. The Lord favourably accepted the temple which Solomon had built and consecrated to him, and set it apart as holy, for the residence of his ark, the centre of his worship, the place of his altar and sacrifices, and the visible pledge of his gracious presence with Israel, so long as they adhered to his ordinances and commandments. And he promised, "that his eyes and his heart should be there perpetually:" (Notes, Deut. xi. 12. Ps. xxiv. 15-17. Jer. xv. 1;) that is, he would regard it with peculiar attention and favour, and delight in doing good to those who worshipped at, or towards, that holy place. (2 Chr. vii. 12-16.) And had not the national sins of Israel forfeited the blessing, this would uninterruptedly have been the case until the coming of Christ.

V. 4-6. Solomon, and his posterity, and Israel in that and future ages, were alike concerned in these promises and warnings. The obedience intended in all such declarations, is the unreserved, though imperfect, obedience of a penitent believer: by which he evidences his cordial acceptance of unmerited

7 Then "will I cut off Israel out of the land which I have given them; and "this house, which I have hallowed for my name, will I cast out of my sight; and "Israel shall be a proverb and a byword among all people:

8 And at "this house, which is high, every one that passeth by it shall be astonished, and shall hiss; and they shall say, "Why hath the LORD done thus unto this land, and to this house?

9 And they shall answer, "Because they forsook the LORD their God, who brought forth their fathers out of the land of Egypt, and have taken hold upon other gods, and have worshipped them, and served them: therefore hath the LORD brought upon them all this evil.

10 ¶ And it came to pass 'at the end of twenty years, when Solomon had built the two houses, the house of the LORD, and the king's house, 11 (Now "Hiram the king of Tyre had furnished Solomon with cedar trees and fir-trees, and with gold, according to all his desire,) that then "king Solomon gave Hiram twenty cities in the land "of Galilee.

12 And Hiram came out from Tyre to see the cities which Solomon had given him: and "they pleased him not.

13 And he said, What cities are these which thou hast given me, "my brother? And he called them the land of "Cabul unto this day.

14 And Hiram "sent to the king sixscore talents of gold.

15 ¶ And this is "the reason of the levy which king Solomon raised; for "to build the house of the LORD, and his own house, and "Millo, and the wall of Jerusalem, and "Hazor, and "Megiddo, and "Gezer.

16 For Pharaoh king of Egypt had gone up, and taken Gezer, and burnt it with fire, and slain the Canaanites that dwelt in the city, and given it for a present unto his "daughter, Solomon's wife.

mercies, and aims to glorify the God of his salvation. (Notes, Matt. vii. 24—27. John xiv. 21—24. Rom. ii. 7—11.)—The words "if ye shall at all turn," &c. certainly mean, "if ye altogether turn," &c. (2 Chr. vii. 19:) and indeed not every sin, but national idolatry or apostasy, sanctioned by the example of the prince, or tolerated by him, was intended.

V. 7—9. These denunciations were remarkably fulfilled during the Babylonish captivity; but the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, and the state of the Jews to this very day, are the most extraordinary accomplishment of them. (Notes, Deut. xxix. 21—25. 2 Kings xxv. 8—10. Jer. xl. 2, 3. Lam. i. 8—11. ii. 15, 16. iv. 13—16.)

V. 11—14. Hiram had furnished Solomon with timber, not only for building the temple, but also for his own house, and his many other magnificent works; and he likewise "had sent him a hundred and twenty talents of gold;" for that seems to be the proper construction of the fourteenth verse. Solomon therefore was indebted to Hiram, beyond the corn and wine and oil agreed upon; (Note, v. 11:) and he gave him these cities as a compensation. They seem to have been small towns in the vicinity of Tyre, beyond the boundaries of the land, as divided by Joshua, and lately taken from the ancient inhabitants. Probably they lay in ruins.—Hiram, however, was not satisfied with them, and "called them the land of Cabul." (Marg. Ref.)—Perhaps being accustomed to magnificence, and to acquire wealth by commerce, he had no turn for cultivating land; and, finding the roads bad, the houses mean, and the country depopulated, he was not aware of the advantage which might be made of them. Solomon afterwards rebuilt them, and the Israelites dwelt in them: and probably Hiram was satisfied with some equivalent.

V. 15. The reason, &c. That is, the occasion which there was for the levy, in order to accomplish so many great and magnificent works: or, the method in which it was raised.

V. 16. The Canaanites kept possession of Gezer in the time of Joshua and the judges; but the inhabitants paid tribute to Israel: (Notes, Josh. xvi. 10. (Marg. Ref.) and it seems that they had continued in this state, till Pharaoh expelled them; when, and on what account, we know not.

V. 18. Tadmor in, &c. This is supposed to have been the same with the city Palmyra, whose magnificent ruins, in the midst of widely extended plains of barren sands, attract the attention, and excite the admiration, of modern travellers and antiquarians. But the architecture of these ruins, being evidently Grecian, does not allow us to suppose that they are the remains of buildings erected by Solomon; for they must be of much later date.

V. 20—22. It is probable, that these remains of the Amorites, &c. had submitted to Israel, and renounced idolatry; and so were spared on terms not dissimilar from those formerly granted to the Gibeonites. (Notes, Josh. ix. 19—27.)—They and their posterity seem to have been afterwards called "Solomon's servants," and thus to have been distinguished from the Nethinim. (Notes, 1 Chr. ix. 2. Ezra ii. 55.)—By employing them in these laborious services, Solomon was enabled to exempt the native Israelites from all but the more honourable employments. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 25. Solomon observed the three great festivals with peculiar solemnity: yet he sacrificed at other times also; and "burned incense," not personally, but by the priests, (Note, 2 Chr. xxvi. 16—23.)

V. 26—28. Solomon, possessing Ezion-geber, (a seaport upon the Red sea, which communicates with the Indian ocean,) united with Hiram, whose subjects were skilled in navigation and commerce, and probably traded to some part of the East Indies: and this is perhaps as ancient and authentic account of the East India trade, as any there is extant. (Note, x. 22.) Ophir is by many supposed to have been the island now called Ceylon: though various other opinions are advanced concerning it. (Marg. Ref.)—Four hundred and fifty talents are mentioned in Chronicles: but perhaps thirty talents were divided among the officers and seamen; so that only four hundred and twenty were paid into the treasury.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—9. The Lord is ever ready to hear the prayers which we make before him, and to manifest his acceptance of our upright services: and when we present ourselves, in body and soul, to be consecrated as the temples of the Holy Spirit, to his glory, he will hallow and sanctify us by his grace, and render us meet to be a holy habitation for himself: though before we were altogether polluted. (Note, Eph. ii. 19—22.) In and through Jesus Christ, his eyes and his heart are always upon every true believer, to watch over him, and to rejoice in doing him good; yet it is only at intervals, that he manifests his presence, and lifts up the light of his countenance upon him: but in heaven we shall always behold his face, and be filled with unalloyed, uninterrupted felicity.—After all the services which we can perform, we stand upon the same terms with the Lord as before: nothing can purchase for us an exemption from obedience, or a dispensation to sin in any case whatever; nor would the true believer desire such a license. Rather, in the integrity and uprightness of his heart, he

Our Lord says, "The queen of the south came from the uttermost part of the earth, to hear the wisdom of Solomon;" and Ethiopia is more distant from Jerusalem than any part of Arabia; but at the same time it does not so well answer the description, "the uttermost part of the earth." (Matt. xii. 42.) Learned men are therefore now generally of opinion, that Sheba lay in the most southern part of Arabia Felix, between the Red sea and the Indian ocean; that the queen of Sheba was descended from Abraham by Keturah, and retained some traditional fragments of true religion; and that she had heard the fame of Solomon from the mariners of the fleet to Ophir, which had put into some of her ports: and indeed the more general connexion, in which the name Sheba is used, in the subsequent part of Scripture, powerfully confirms this conclusion. (Marg. Ref.)—Our Lord's testimony to the motives which influenced the queen of Sheba, sufficiently refutes the disadvantageous surmises which have often been entertained and advanced. She "had heard of the fame of Solomon concerning the name of the Lord, and she came to hear his wisdom." The report of his knowledge in the truth and precepts of religion, of his piety and zeal in the worship of JEHOVAH, and of the wisdom given him, peculiarly attracted her attention: and she came to propose many questions to him, which perplexed her mind, upon those important subjects; she could meet with no one, who could clear them up to her; and she desired "to prove him," whether he could or not. This shews that she was used to reflect seriously upon religion; but for want of proper instruction, was not able to obtain satisfactory solutions of her difficulties: and considering her sex and rank, and the magnificence and indulgence in which she might have lived at home; her long journey, undertaken for these purposes, formed a strong proof of a pious and ingenious mind, which knew the value of true wisdom, and was willing "to buy the truth" at any price. (Notes, Prov. xxiii. 23. Acts viii. 26—31.)—Her train and attendance were suited to her high rank; and many think that the treasures, which she brought, serve to mark out the region whence she came.

V. 3. With the books of holy Scripture, then extant, in his hand, and the wise and understanding heart which the Lord had given him, Solomon readily answered those questions, that were most difficult to the queen of Sheba. He had prayed, that “all the people of the earth might know the name of the Lord, to fear him;” (viii. 43.) and he doubtless instructed her fully in those truths which relate to the being and perfections, the authority, law, and worship of the one living and true God; in the nature, and meaning of the temple, altar, priests, and sacrifices, at Jerusalem; and in every other subject, which was essential to the acceptable worship of JEHOVAH. Her language also indicates that she profited by his instructions; and probably carried home with her the sacred Scriptures, and a large accession of profitable knowledge concerning true religion, for the benefit of her subjects. (Notes, Acts vii. 36—40.)

V. 5. His ascent, &c. Some understand these words, of a magnificent communication, which Solomon had prepared, betwixt his palace and the courts of the temple, by which he and all his attendants regularly went up to worship the Lord. (Notes, 2 Kings xvi. 17, 18. Ec. xlv. 1—3. xlv. 1—3.) Others suppose that they mean the sacrifices which he offered upon the altar: while others explain them of the cheerful and fervent solemnity with which he worshipped, shewing that his heart was much engaged in the sacred service. But, however that may be, Solomon’s wealth and wisdom, his magnificence, and his good management of his numerous concerns, united with his exemplary piety, overpowered the queen’s mind with astonishment.—This event probably took place about the middle of Solomon’s reign, at least before he began to turn aside to idolatry.

V. 6—9. Solomon's wisdom made a deeper impression upon the mind of the queen of Sheba, than all his prosperity and grandeur. She congratulated, and almost seemed to envy, the felicity of his servants. She had derived such benefit from her occasional conversation with him, that she considered those persons peculiarly favoured, though her inferiors in rank, who continually enjoyed the advantage of his instructive discourse and wise counsels. She also very fervently praised God, for his love to Solomon and to Israel, in endowing him with such extraordinary wisdom, in raising him to the throne, and in blessing him with peace and prosperity, that he might rule over his people "in justice, and in judgment." These sentiments concerning the sovereignty and providence of God, the giver of all wisdom and prosperity; his free and unfeigned love to his people; the duty of kings; and the happiness of those CHAP. X. V, 1, 2. By comparing the texts referred to in the margin, it appears, that Cush, the son of Ham, had a descendant called Sheba, and it is probable, that he settled in Africa, to the south of Egypt. Eber also had a descendant called Sheba; and Abraham, a grandson by Keturah, called by the same name. On these and other accounts, it has been controverted, whether the queen of Sheba came from some part of Ethiopia in Africa, or from the most remote region of Arabia, near the Indian ocean, in Asia.—Tradition favours the former opinion, but then it is blended with manifest falsehoods.

10 ¶ And she gave the king an hundred and twenty talents of gold, and of spices very great store, and precious stones: there came no more such abundance of spices as these which the queen of Sheba gave to king Solomon.

11 And the navy also of Hiram that brought gold from Ophir, brought in from Ophir great plenty of almug-trees, and precious stones.

12 And the king made of the almug-trees pillars for the house of the LORD, and for the king's house, harps also and psalteries for singers: there came no such almug-trees, nor were seen unto this day.

13 And king Solomon gave unto the queen of Sheba all her desire, whatsoever she asked, beside that which Solomon gave her of his royal bounty. So she turned and went to her own country, she and her servants.

14 ¶ Now the weight of gold, that came to Solomon in one year, was six hundred threescore and six talents of gold, 15 Beside that he had of the merchantmen, and of the traffic of the spice-merchants, and of all the kings of Arabia, and of the governors of the country.

16 ¶ And king Solomon made two hundred targets of beaten gold: six hundred shekels of gold went to one target.

17 And he made three hundred shields of beaten gold; three pound of gold went to one shield: and the king put them in the house of the forest of Lebanon.

18 ¶ Moreover, the king made a great throne of ivory, and overlaid it with the best gold.

19 The throne had six steps, and the top of the throne was round behind: and there were stays on

20 And twelve lions stood there on the one side and on the other upon the six steps: there was not the like made in any kingdom.

21 ¶ And all king Solomon's drinking vessels were of gold, and all the vessels of the house of the forest of Lebanon were of pure gold; none were of silver: it was nothing accounted of in the days of Solomon.

22 For the king had at sea a navy of Tarshish with the navy of Hiram: once in three years came the navy of Tarshish, bringing gold, and silver, ivory, and apes, and peacocks.

23 So king Solomon exceeded all the kings of the earth for riches and for wisdom.

24 ¶ And all the earth sought to Solomon, to hear his wisdom, which God had put in his heart.

25 And they brought every man his present, vessels of silver, and vessels of gold, and garments, and armour, and spices, horses, and mules, a rate year by year.

26 ¶ And Solomon gathered together chariots and horsemen: and he had a thousand and four hundred chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen, whom he bestowed in the cities for chariots, and with the king at Jerusalem.

27 ¶ And the king made silver to be in Jerusalem as stones, and cedars made he to be as the sycamore-trees that are in the vale, for abundance.

28 ¶ And Solomon had horses brought out of Egypt, and linen yarn: the king's merchants received the linen yarn at a price.

29 And a chariot came up and went out of Egypt for six hundred shekels of silver, and an horse for an hundred and fifty; and so for all the kings of the Hittites, and for the kings of Syria, did they bring them out by their means.

nations who are favoured with those that do their duty; together with her praising God for his love to his people, in which she cordially rejoiced; prove an understanding and pious mind, and must convince the reflecting reader that she returned home much benefited by her journey.

V. 12. It is not known what kind of wood is intended by the words almug-trees: but the specimen brought from Sheba would remain to posterity in the pillars, or rails, and the musical instruments, made of it. (2 Chr. ii. 8. ix. 10, 11.)

V. 14, 15. Perhaps the kings of Arabia were induced, by the queen of Sheba's report and example, to pay court to Solomon and send him presents.

V. 16, 17. These targets and shields seem to have been intended principally for magnificence, and to be carried before the king on special occasions. (Notes, vii. 2. xiv. 25—28.)

V. 18—20. Ivory is not mentioned in Scripture till the time of Solomon, who doubtless imported it from India.—It cannot be supposed, that the ivory was entirely covered with gold; but rather inlaid with it, so as to add to its beauty.—The lions seem to have been intended not only for ornament, but as emblems of the courage and resolution requisite in the impartial administration of justice; and they denoted that magistrates should be a terror to evil-doers, and the protectors of those who peaceably submit to their authority. Judah was compared by Jacob to a young lion; and our Lord is called "the lion of the tribe of Judah." (Notes, Gen. xlix. 8, 9. Rev. v. 5—7.)

V. 22. Many learned men have endeavoured to shew that Tarshish was a city in Spain, called Tartessus; and some think that this navy, which Solomon had with the navy of Hiram, was distinct from that which traded to Ophir, and was fitted out from some port on the Mediterranean: and they account for the length of time taken up in each voyage, by supposing that a great part of it was employed in selling and buying, or bartering, the several articles of commerce.—But, whatever gold might be, ivory, apes, and peacocks, (or parrots, as some render the word,) do not seem to have been articles of trade in any of the countries bordering on the Mediterranean.—"Jehoshaphat made ships of Tarshish, to go to Ophir for gold: but they went not; for the ships were broken at Ezion-gaber."—"He joined himself with Ahaziah to make ships to go to Tarshish, and they made the ships in Ezion-gaber.—And the ships were broken, that they were not able to go to Tarshish." (Note, xxii. 48, 49. 2 Chr. xx. 35—37.) These passages, being decisive proofs that the ships of Tarshish, ships to go to Tarshish, were built at Ezion-gaber on the Red sea, the learned Bishop Lowth, (having adopted the opinion, that Tarshish was Tartessus in Spain,) says, "Tarshish is celebrated in Scripture for the trade, which Solomon carried on thither in conjunction with the Tyrians. Jehoshaphat attempted afterward to renew that trade, and from the account given of that attempt, it appears, that this fleet was to sail from Ezion-gaber on the Red sea, and must therefore have designed to sail round Africa, as Solomon's fleet probably had done before: for it was a three years' voyage; and they brought gold from Ophir, probably from the coast of Arabia, silver from Tartessus, and ivory, apes, and peacocks, from Africa.—It is certain, that under Pharaoh-necho, about two hundred years after, this voyage was made by the Egyptians, &c.—But, with all deference to so eminent a writer, it must be allowed extremely improbable, that in regular voyages, for commerce; (not discovery, for which Pharaoh-necho's extraordinary expedition doubtless was undertaken,) such a circuitous course should be chosen; when, as far as we can learn, it was not then known that Africa was a peninsula! To fit out one navy at Ezion-gaber, for Ophir, whether in Arabia, or the East Indies, which might coast some parts of Africa; and to fit out another navy to Spain from some Mediterranean port, would be an obvious and compendious measure: but that the same ships should attempt the whole, and after taking in the far richest part of their freight, comparatively near home; should with it attempt to sail round Africa, in order to add silver, and some other articles of inferior value, at Tartessus, must strike every reflecting person as a most unparalleled proceeding.—To sail round Africa at that time, would be vastly more formidable, than a voyage round the world at present: and a single glance at a map must convince any person, acquainted with commerce, that no man of common prudence would ever think of such a voyage for lucrative purposes.—Tarshish seems indeed, in some places, to mean Tartessus, or Tarsus, or some place connected with the Mediterranean: for Jonah embarked for Tarshish at Joppa; and Joppa is situated on the Mediterranean. Ships of Tarshish seem also sometimes to mean any large ships fitted out for long voyages. But in this place, and some others referred to, if the text be not corrupted, Tarshish must mean some place in the East Indies, or bordering on the Indian ocean.

V. 24—27. (Notes, iii. 5—14. iv. 26—34.) These particulars were recorded, to shew the faithfulness of God to the promises which he had made to David and to Solomon, whose reign typified the kingdom of the Messiah, in its peace and prosperity, and in the submission and willing services of princes and nations.—But Solomon was doubtless culpable in several respects, and his mind was gradually corrupted from its simplicity to over-much luxury and ostentation, which prepared the way for the awful departure from God recorded in the ensuing chapter. (Note, 2 Sam. xi. 1—5.)

V. 28, 29. Solomon and Pharaoh seem to have traded together, by their merchants, to the exclusion of other persons. The price of the linen yarn, according to its quality, was fixed by contract. The price of a good chariot-horse also was fixed at about nineteen pounds sterling, and that of a chariot at seventy-five: and, in a contract, there is no absurdity in supposing that, the quality being described, a certain sum should be given for each, one with another. Besides those which were brought for the king's use, numbers were sold again, at a great profit doubtless, to the neighbouring princes: for Pharaoh reserved to his son-in-law the exclusive advantage of this lucrative

CHAP. XI.

Solomon, having very many wives and concubines, even strange women, is in his old age seduced by them into idolatry, 1-8. The Lord threatens to rend the greater part of the kingdom from his family, 9-13. Solomon finds an adversary in Hadad the Edomite, who had been entertained in Egypt, 14-22; and in Rezon, who reigned in Damascus, 23-25; and in Jeroboam, to whom Ahijah foretold that he should reign over ten tribes, and whom Solomon in vain attempts to kill, 26-40. Solomon dies and is buried, and Rehoboam succeeds him, 41-43.

BUT king Solomon loved many strange women, together with the daughter of Pharaoh, women of the Moabites, Ammonites, Edomites, Zidonians, and Hittites:

2 Of the nations concerning which the LORD said unto the children of Israel, "Ye shall not go in to them, neither shall they come in unto you: for surely they will turn away your heart after their gods:" Solomon clave unto these in love.

trade. Some indeed suppose the stipulated sums to have been an exorbitant tax, laid by Pharaoh on all chariots, or horses, which were exported: but the other seems the more probable way of explaining the passage.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-5. Wisdom and piety are exceedingly valuable, and render men truly honourable: and they, who form a due estimate of their worth, will think no expense or labour too great to obtain them.—When we first attend seriously to religion, we shall meet with many "hard questions," which we cannot resolve, and which will often perplex and distress our minds, especially if at a distance from proper instructions. But "then shall we know, if we follow on to know the LORD." By waiting and prayer, by practising what we have learned, by diligently searching the Scriptures, and by consulting wise and experienced Christians, we shall be delivered from our difficulties, and a clearer light will shine upon our path. (Notes, Prov. iv. 18, 19. Is. xlii. 13-17. Hos. vi. 1-3. John vii. 14-17.)—They, who possess wisdom and knowledge, should be courteous and accessible, and glad to communicate them for the good of others; even as the rich should be to impart their wealth.—Great wisdom and piety, in the midst of singular prosperity and grandeur, are very uncommon, and therefore excite the higher admiration. A good understanding will be displayed, in the orderly and prudent regulation of domestic and secular concerns; so that propriety, and consistency with a man's station and circumstances, will be visible to the attentive spectator; but our greatest diligence, constancy, seriousness, and cheerfulness should be manifested, in attending on the ordinances of God; that our example may influence others to "serve him in reverence and godly fear." This gives a lustre to wisdom, learning, wealth, or greatness: but, alas! how few are ambitious of this honour that cometh from God!

V. 6-13. The reports, which we hear, concerning the achievements and excellencies of our fellow-creatures, or concerning any earthly glory, are seldom verified when we become acquainted with them. But there is a spiritual excellency in heavenly things, and in consistent Christians, to which no reports can do justice: and the better they are known, the more they will be esteemed and relished.—Those who delight in the company of wise men will become wise: and they are highly favoured, who have continual opportunity of conversing with persons of this character: yet frequently, such as have occasional interviews with them get more benefit, than those do who are always with them.—All our comforts and prospects spring from the Lord's love to us: he delighteth in the fruits of his own Spirit; and he communicates many good gifts to magistrates, ministers, and private Christians, out of love to his people, that they may be serviceable to them; and happy are they, who are governed and instructed by those, "in whom the Lord delighteth."—Whatever our station or endowments be, they are connected with correspondent duties: and we should take it kindly to be reminded of them, and excited to perform them with diligence and fidelity.—Reciprocal kindnesses cement friendship; and the wealthy should not willingly be outdone in generosity: but, neither the company of God's people, nor the ordinances of his house, should detain us from our proper place and employments, but should send us to them, prepared and disposed to discharge them with greater wisdom and conscientiousness.—Thus the awakened sinner, oppressed with perplexing difficulties, discouraging objections, and tormenting fears, hears the report of the Saviour's acts and wisdom, of his unsearchable riches and unfathomable love: but can scarcely believe the report. With trouble, self-denial, and the forsaking of many earthly things, he resorts by faith and prayer unto him, and is graciously encouraged, and entertained. The Lord's effectual teaching dispels his darkness and distress; he shews him his glory and grace, he satisfies him with the provisions of his house, and enriches him from his treasures of "wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption." The rejoicing believer no longer glories in himself, and his own attainments: nor is he terrified, though humbled, with the consciousness of his own guilt and pollution. The person, the character, the love, of Jesus attract and engross his admiring attention, whilst they confirm his lively hopes of salvation: and he finds by experience, that the half was not told him of his excellency and preciousness. He now congratulates the felicity of the meanest servant of the Redeemer, but especially that of those above, who always behold his face and do his will.—He blesses the Lord for his love to Israel, in giving them such a Prince and Saviour, and yields up himself both to be ruled and saved by him: and though Jesus needeth not, and is not enriched by, all that he can render to him; yet he devotes his riches and talents to his service, and they are graciously accepted, and recompensed with all that he can desire: yea, of his royal bounty, our Prince of Peace gives more than any petitioner is able to "ask, or think." The believer, who has thus been with Jesus, will return to his station in society, to discharge his duty, with new alacrity, from better motives, and to nobler purposes: yet, he will still look forward to the day, when, being "absent from the body, he shall be present with the Lord;" and when his transient glimpses of the Saviour's glory, which overpower him with admiration, shall be exchanged for uninterrupted vision, with faculties enlarged, and strengthened to endure and delight in that ineffable refulgency. But who can express or conceive aright of that state of felicity? Every enraptured spirit will then confess, that the thousandth part of what is there enjoyed never reached his ear, nor was thought of, in his most delightful moments upon earth.—Oh, may the writer, and every reader of these observations, aspire after that unutterable felicity, and at length rejoice in it together! Behold a greater than Solomon is here! Even upon earth he is present in his word, his ordinances, and on his throne of grace; and will be found of all who seek him uprightly.—But the queen of the south will rise up in judgment with the men of this generation also. "She came from the uttermost parts of the earth, to hear the wisdom of Solomon;" but they will not raise from their beds, or go out of their houses, or even open their Bibles, to learn the wisdom of the Son of God! they will not put themselves to the least inconvenience to receive his instructions, and seek his salvation! (Note, Matt. xii. 41, 42.) Yea, verily, this example shames every one of us; for we are all guilty of undervaluing our mercies, and of slackness in attending on the means of grace. Let then the careless and the infidel take warning, for evil is before them: let the negligent "strive to enter in at the strait gate," lest he should be found without when the door is shut: let the drooping enquirer be encouraged, for poor sinners of the Gentiles are welcome to Christ: and let us all sit at his feet, hear his word, and wait for his salvation: and, by reporting his praises, and doing his will, let us endeavour to recommend him to our fellow-sinners on every side.

V. 14-29. They have the most comfort in worldly things, (though seldom the largest share of them,) who expect least from them, and decidedly prefer wisdom and grace, and who devote the best of all which they have to the Lord; for his largest promises, general and particular, shall surely be performed to those who trust and serve him. But, alas! what are worldly wealth and prosperity? They can only procure luxuries, embellishments, and curiosities, which add nothing to the real enjoyment of life: abundance creates satiety, and what is had in plenty is nothing accounted of. Such possessions always multiply cares and temptations: and they generally undermine humility and heavenly-mindedness; and eat out the life of religion, by leading to sensual indulgence, avarice, ostentation, or the pride of life. But the spiritual peace, riches, and abundance of the Redeemer's kingdom, are of another nature: they satisfy, but never satiate; while they sanctify the soul, and strengthen it to resist temptation, and to mortify every fleshly lust.

NOTES.

CHAP. XI. V. 1-8. We have not a more melancholy and astonishing instance of human depravity, in the sacred Scriptures, than that recorded in these verses. He who was named "Jedidiah," Beloved of the Lord, and who early in life is declared to have "loved the Lord:" he, who had been favoured with such special tokens of God's favour, and had received such answers to his prayers: he, who had been honoured to build the temple, and was so enlarged in supplication when it was dedicated: he, who was renowned throughout the earth for his wisdom and piety, as well as his wealth and prosperity: he, who was employed as an inspired writer, whose name is affixed to a part of the oracles of God: who had given such excellent counsels and warnings to others, and was so illustrious a type of Christ: even he apostatized, and became a public and shameful worshipper of abominable idols, to the disgrace of his understanding, as well as the scandal of his profession!—It is probable, that his declension was gradual: he was perhaps elated with spiritual pride, as well as induced by his prosperity to indulge in luxury and ostentation: or perhaps, he deemed it unnecessary for one of his wisdom and ability, and of his rank and authority, to restrict himself by those rules, which were needful or salutary to inferior persons, as if he were secure from those evils, which they were intended to prevent! He first multiplied horses, and caused the people to go down into Egypt for that purpose; then he greatly multiplied gold and silver, contrary to the law of Moses; (Notes, x. 24-29. Deut. xvii. 16, 17;) not as his father had done, for the service of the sanctuary, but for the increase of his own splendour. Thus, the barrier was broken through, and the fervour of his piety abated.—After the example of his father, he married several women, and added one to another, more and more rapidly, till he had got together an immense number of wives and concubines. And he doubtless might argue, that if it was lawful to have two wives, why not many? and in his case, who could maintain them all, they might not be inexpedient, and would add to his magnificence and royal dignity. Probably, Pharaoh's daughter, whom he first married, was a real convert; (for we find no temples to the gods of Egypt:—) and this might induce him to take more wives of the heathens, flattering himself, that his wisdom and example would prevail with them also to embrace the worship of JEHOVAH. Thus he proceeded, till perhaps persons were employed to collect from every part of his kingdom, but especially from the subjected nations, every beautiful woman whom they met, without regard to her religion. Those of superior rank seem to have been numbered among his wives, and styled princesses; while the inferiors were his concubines, with inferior privileges. (Note, Gen. xxv. 5, 6.) Towards the close of his life, when he was above fifty years of age, he grew more addicted to his women than before: and, spending much time in their company, he doubtless in a degree neglected both the worship of God, and the affairs of his kingdom: and perhaps the enormous expense, which their extravagance occasioned, rendered those burdens requisite, of which the people afterwards complained. (Note, xii. 4.) But the evil did not stop here: for his women gained still greater ascendancy over him, and gradually prevailed with him to connive at their idolatries, to humour them by building idolatrous temples, and at length to join with them in their abominable worship! When one had been thus gratified, there could be no peace, unless the others were obliged in the same manner; and therefore he did this for all his strange wives.—They, who have noted in history, or in society, the effects of the influence of inveigling women over the greatest and wisest of men, will readily perceive that matters were speedily in a train; and that it was almost impossible, without an immediate divine interposition, that Solomon should stop short of this extreme folly and wickedness, when he had once suffered himself to be entangled in the fatal net. (Notes, Judg. xvi. 4—16.) The inspired historian, therefore, quotes the prohibition of marrying strange women, with the annexed consequence, “Surely they will turn away your heart after their gods;” to shew that no eminency of wisdom, or firmness of resolution, will secure any man, when in a careless or self-confident spirit he presumes to violate God’s commandments, and thus to run into temptation. Of this, Solomon formed a most striking proof. (Marg. Ref.)—David had committed several sins, but he had repented, and humbled himself for them: and he had still adhered to the worship of JEHOVAH, and never in the smallest instance set the people an example of idolatry, or gave any connivance to that greatest of all abominations, that open treason against the King of heaven, and violation of the national covenant with Israel. But Solomon’s heart was not thus “perfect with the LORD his God;” and “he went not fully after the LORD!” (Marg. Ref.)

10 And had commanded him concerning this thing, that he should not go after other gods: but he kept not that which the LORD commanded.

V. 9—11. The Lord had twice appeared unto Solomon, in the most condescending and encouraging manner: yet on the last occasion he had fairly warned him of the consequences of disobedience, especially of idolatry. (Notes, iii. 5—14. vi. 11—13. ix. 3—6. This therefore aggravated his offence: and it is probable, that God sent this awful message by a prophet; as refusing to appear again to him, after his ingratitude for his former gracious visits.

v. 12, 13. Benjamin was so connected with Judah, that together they were but as one tribe, and therefore it is not here particularly mentioned. As the punishment of Solomon's sin, the other ten tribes would be rent from him: (Notes, 29—31. 1 Sam. xv. 27, 28:) but in performance of the promises made to David, and in a gracious recompense for his obedience; and to maintain the worship of JEHOVAH at Jerusalem, which he had chosen, God would continue the tribe of Judah under the government of Solomon's posterity.—Even the mitigations of the sentence were suited to humble, and even mortify Solomon. Nothing was done for his sake, but all for his father's. (Notes, Gen. xix. 29. 1 Sam. ii. 30.) It is very probable, that this message brought him to himself, and led him to repentance.

V. 14. As the opposition of Hadad accorded to the Lord's secret design of punishing Solomon, and was over-ruled for that purpose, he is said to have "stirred him up;" though it is evident Hadad was instigated by his own ambition and resentment. (Notes, 1 Sam. xxvi. 19. 2 Sam. xxiv. 1, 2. Jam. i. 13-15.)

V. 15, 16. These particulars do not occur in the preceding history. (Marg. Ref.)—As the Edomites afterwards continued a people, either some particular district only was treated with this severity, or numbers escaped from Joab and his men.—Unless some very peculiar cause required it, this military execution cannot be justified.

V. 21. After David's death, Hadad returned to Idumea, in hopes to excite disturbances before Solomon's authority was established : but he seems to have been disappointed, till after Solomon's apostasy ; when he perhaps attempted to seize the kingdom of Edom, and molested Solomon all the rest of his reign. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 23—25. When David had defeated Hadadezer, Rezon collected a company, over whom he became a captain; and, it is probable, that for a long time they lived by plunder: for "David put garrisons in Syria-Damascus:" (Notes, 2 Sam. viii. 3—6:) but at length Rezon found an opportunity of seizing Damascus, and usurping the kingdom of Syria.—He had indeed abhorred Israel from the first; but, probably, he did not appear as Solomon's adversary.

29 And it came to pass at that time when Jeroboam went out of Jerusalem, that the prophet Ahijah the Shilonite found him in the way: and he had clad himself with a new garment: and they two were alone in the field:

30 And Ahijah caught the new garment that was on him, and rent it in twelve pieces:

31 And he said to Jeroboam, Take thee ten pieces; for thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel, Behold, I will rend the kingdom out of the hand of Solomon, and will give ten tribes to thee:

32 (But he shall have one tribe for my servant David's sake, and for Jerusalem's sake, the city which I have chosen out of all the tribes of Israel:)

33 Because that they have forsaken me, and have worshipped Ashtoreth the goddess of the Zidonians, Chemosh the god of the Moabites, and Milcom the god of the children of Ammon, and have not walked in my ways, to do that which is right in mine eyes, and to keep my statutes and my judgments, as did David his father.

34 Howbeit I will not take the whole kingdom out of his hand: but I will make him prince all the days of his life, for David my servant's sake, whom I chose, because he kept my commandments and my statutes:

35 But I will take the kingdom out of his son's hand, and will give it unto thee, even ten tribes.

or do him any injury, till Solomon had provoked the Lord by his idolatries. (Note, Prov. xvi. 7.)

V. 26—28. Jeroboam, having been employed in superintending the builders, so distinguished himself by capacity and industry, that Solomon preferred him to a post of considerable authority and influence. He either placed him over the tribute collected from the tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh, or made him superintendent of the levy sent from them by courses to assist in his works. (Note, v. 13—18.)—This advancement, probably from a low situation, opened vast prospects to his ambitious mind: and he seems to have excited and encouraged the discontent of the people, on account of the burdens laid on them. Perhaps he was plotting an open revolt; at least he joined the disaffected party: and thus he might be said to "lift up his hand against the king;" though his designs were not executed till after Solomon's death.

V. 19—31. The meaning of the emblematical action, here recorded, seems to imply, that "the new garment" belonged to the prophet, not to Jeroboam; though many expositors suppose the contrary. The division of the kingdom took nothing from Jeroboam, but gave the dominion over ten tribes to him. (Note, 12, 13.)—Some think that the rending of the garment into twelve pieces, represented also the subsequent divisions and distractions which prevailed in Israel.

V. 33. Induced by Solomon's example, and to obtain his favour, it seems that the people had generally joined in his idolatry.

V. 34—36. (Notes, 12, 13. Gen. xviii. 17—19. xxvi. 2—5.) A light &c. (36.) It was the purpose of God that David's family should still continue illustrious; and be the instruments of preserving the light of true religion in Jerusalem; as well as types of Christ, the Light of the world. (Notes, xv. 4, 5. Ps. lxxxix. 19—37. cxxxii. 17. Is. ix. 6, 7.)

V. 37. Thy soul desireth. It appears from this expression, that Jeroboam secretly aspired at the kingdom. But neither the designs of God, nor this declaration by the prophet, excused his ambition and rebellion. David, long after he had been anointed to the kingdom, was faithful to Saul, and was not driven by persecution to attempt ought against him: nor would he even seize the vacant throne, till called to it by the voice of the people. (Notes, 1 Sam. xxiv. 4—7. xxvi. 8—12. 2 Kings viii. 14, 15.)

V. 38. And build thee, &c. Distrusting this promise, Jeroboam endeavoured to establish his authority by disobedience; and thus he forfeited the kingdom to his posterity, and brought ruin upon them, and incalculable mischiefs on Israel. (Notes, xii. 26—31. xiv. 5—16. 2 Sam. vii. 11—16.)

V. 39. But not for ever. Three alleviations of the denounced judgments are here mentioned. They would not happen in Solomon's days; therefore Jeroboam ought by no means to have attempted anything against him: the whole kingdom was not to be taken from Solomon's posterity; therefore Jeroboam must not expect to subject Judah and Benjamin: and the affliction was not to be for ever; which seems especially to refer to Christ and his everlasting kingdom.

V. 40. The word therefore is not in the original, which may be rendered, and Solomon, &c. It does not appear that he sought to kill Jeroboam, because of Ahijah's prophecy, which would have been an instance of most infatuated rebellion against God, and utterly inconsistent with repentance: but because of Jeroboam's subsequent misconduct, who perhaps divulged and boasted of the promise, and "lifted up his hand against Solomon;" which implies an attempt to raise rebellion in his life-time. (26.)—It is probable that Shishak was the successor of Pharaoh, whose daughter Solomon married: but perhaps of another family and interest. He is the only king of Egypt hitherto called by his proper name; all before him being known by the general title of Pharaoh. He is also thought to have been the Sesostrius of pagan history. (Notes, xiv. 25—27. 2 Chr. xii. 2—9.)

V. 41. In the book, &c. Some annals, or records, of Solomon's life and reign, more copious than the account here given; from which such extracts were made, as were needful for edification. (Preface to 1 Kings. Notes, xiv. 19. 1 Chr. xxix. 29, 30.)

V. 42, 43. Solomon was the only king, who reigned so long as forty years over all Israel: yet he was not above sixty years of age when he died, and perhaps he had injured his constitution by indulgence.—We are not here informed, whether he repented before his death, or not: and this silence speaks a warning to every one of us, not to yield to temptations, lest we should leave the world in uncertainty, and be condemned as hypocrites in the consciences of God's people. But this silence in the book of Kings no more proves that Solomon did not repent, than the silence of the book of Chronicles proves that he did not commit idolatry. I would not indeed decide upon so controverted a point with unhesitating confidence: yet the book of Ecclesiastes seems fully to shew, that he repented, and publicly declared that repentance before his death. (Note, Ec. vii. 23—28.) We are not, however, so much interested in the solution, as some persons seem to suppose; for it is extremely nugatory to put the proof of doctrines on examples. If he did not repent, he doubtless perished, notwithstanding all his profession and eminent endowments: for no part of Scripture gives encouragement, concerning those who die in unrepented wickedness. But many think that this supposition would prove all his profession to have been hypocritical; which does not so well accord to his name Jedidiah, and the testimony of the Holy Spirit, that he "loved the Lord."

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—8. We are repeatedly reminded by the examples of the most eminent men, that no abilities or endowments; that no illustrious services, fervent affections, or vigorous resolutions; that nothing inherent in man, forms in itself any security against the deceitfulness and desperate wickedness of his heart, or may be depended on as sufficient to preserve him from the commission of the most atrocious crimes.—Men of superior understanding find it much easier to lay down excellent rules for the conduct of others, than to reduce them to practice in the constant tenour of their own lives; (Notes, Prov. i—ix;) for, alas! they often fall into the same pit, and are caught in the same snare, against which they have repeatedly warned others; and sometimes are guilty of things as absurd and foolish as they are wicked. Nay, old age itself will not eradicate from the heart any evil propensity. The habit of indulgence in fleshly lusts will more than counterbalance the effect of nature's decay: and if our sinful passions be not crucified and mortified by the grace of God, they will never die of themselves, but will subsist and rage when every opportunity of gratification shall be taken away.—Thus we are taught to cease from man, and to watch and be sober: for our's is a dangerous warfare in an enemy's country, whilst the worst of our foes are the traitors which occupy our own hearts.—We all naturally desire prosperity and pre-eminence; yet in general these operate as fatal poisons to the soul. And when we allow of one inordinate or inexpedient indulgence, we give energy to all our passions, and to every temptation of Satan. Not only will the same inclination grow more importunate: but others also, like humourous children, will expect to be gratified in their turn; while the authority of reason and conscience, over the inferior faculties, is weakened by every concession. Our safety and comfort therefore consist in resolutely requiring them all to obey, and, though we cannot extinguish our passions, in rigorously confining them within the bounds of what is lawful and expedient.—Indulged luxury, or the pride of life, generally introduces greater licentiousness, where a man's affluence is equal to his inclinations. But the history of the world, and of the church, demonstrates, that the love of women is one of the most dangerous passions of the human heart. When once the Divine original appointment concerning marriage is violated, the unbridled propensity will know no bounds: nor can the wisest or the most determined say to it, “Thus far shalt thou go, and no further;” but, like a descending weight, the progress is from bad to worse with accelerated rapidity. The designing objects of a sensual and roving affection will employ, by turns, all the arts of persuasion, dalliance, flattery, or upbraidings, to prevail over a man's resolution, and to induce his compliance with the most unreasonable and pernicious requests: till shame and conscience are surmounted, reputation and interest sacrificed, every barrier is broken down, and a perfect infatuation takes place. (Judg. xvi.)—Parents, and those who are in reputation for piety, should be peculiarly careful what practices they sanction by their examples: for such, as will not imitate them in their best actions, will be encouraged to copy, and to exceed them in, their mistakes and misconduct. They, who have made the boldest profession of godliness, and have been most serviceable to its interests, may expect to be assaulted by the strongest temptations from the great enemy of souls; and should always entertain a jealous fear, lest, being overcome in an unguarded hour, they should after all become a scandal to religion, a stumbling-block to the prejudiced, an encouragement to hypocrites and infidels, or a snare and evil precedent to the unstable and injudicious. They should therefore be peculiarly watchful against the incursions of spiritual pride; or the fatal persuasion, that they are superior to those rules and cautions which are needful for weaker persons. They should always meditate with seriousness on their danger of falling, and the wide-spreading fatal effects of their misconduct; and prefer any affliction, or death, to thus dishonouring God and his truth.—The fond hope, which numbers indulge, who marry with ungodly persons, of being instrumental to their salvation, stands exposed throughout the Scripture, but especially in this chapter: the wisest and best of men are more likely to be corrupted by the converse of a beloved ungodly companion, than to bring such a one to a sense of serious religion. Considering the state of human nature, the case is as desperate, as that of a healthy person associating with those that have got the plague, who is vastly more likely to be infected himself, than to recover them: and the Lord's prohibition of such marriages declares them to be means, which he doth not allow of, and will seldom use, for that purpose.—The slaves of fleshly lusts are meet worshippers of abominable idols; but not of the God of Israel, who is holy, and whose worshippers must be holy too.—They, who connive at the wickedness which they ought to punish, will soon join in committing it, and in inducing others to do the same: but all this proceeds from the heart not being fully devoted to the Lord; for when the love of him occupies the affections, and the soul is satisfied with the earnestness and hopes of his favour, all inferior desires will be regulated and subordinated.

V. 9-25. The Lord is very angry even with the objects of his special love, when their hearts are for a season, or in a measure, turned from him; and the peculiar tokens of his favour, his answers to their prayers, and their comfortable communion with him in times past, will aggravate their guilt, and increase his displeasure: nor can there be any peace, or assurance of acceptance, without an unreserved persevering obedience to his commandments. Yet, in punishing transgressors, he will not dishonour his own faithful promises, desert the cause of true religion, or fail to honour the memories of those who have uprightly walked in his ways: and for the sake of Jesus, and his people whom he hath chosen, he will not suffer his whole displeasure to arise. It is grievous indeed to leave sore judgments for our sins, to our posterity; yet it is a mercy to have peace and truth in our days. But when the Lord is become an adversary, he will give power, courage, and capacity to other adversaries, and thus render those formidable, who before appeared contemptible: and we should always observe his righteous hand, even in those sufferings which come upon us from the wickedness of others.—Unnecessary severity may excite resentments, which may long after create us, or our's, disturbance and grief: and it is best, as far as we can, to exercise lenity to all men, and to overcome evil with good.—But, if the abundance and pleasure of a court, and the friendship of a king, could not detain Hadad from his own desolate and subjected country; what earthly prosperity should take off a believer's affections from his glorious inheritance in heaven, or make him reluctant to remove thither?—Many abhor the Israel of God, who are not permitted to hurt them: nay, when they seem to succeed in their malice, they are only the instruments of salutary chastisement to them.

V. 26-43. We often find our worst enemies among those, whom we have most befriended; especially when ingenuity, industry, and resolution, rather than piety, have recommended them to our notice. These qualifications make way for a man's preferment, and every advance enlarges the ambition of a proud unsanctified mind: and when such men come within the attraction of supreme authority, and dare to hope for that dangerous pre-eminence; to “reign according to the desire of their hearts” forms the grand object, and to it every tie of gratitude or duty must be sacrificed.—Providential dispensations to this day, as well as prophetic declarations of old, try men's spirits, whether they will grasp at advantages at all events; or whether they will wait patiently, and use only lawful means of obtaining them, according to the will of God.—Many so believe some parts of God's word, as perversely to take encouragement from them to commit iniquity; instead of so believing the whole, as to expect the blessings proposed in the way of conscientious obedience, there prescribed. They are shewn, and seem to understand, that others have forfeited their most valuable interests by sin; and yet they will seek to seize or to secure their's by similar transgressions! so inconsistent is human nature!—The Lord will not afflict for ever the people of his covenant: but when they grievously offend, he will eclipse all their honour; he will leave obscurity and reproach upon their characters; and perhaps bring them down to the grave in disgrace, discomfort, and uncertainty; distressed concerning the state of their own souls, and about the consequences of their conduct, to their families, to the church, and to the world. May God help us to walk circumspectly; to pass the time of our sojourning here in fear; and to stand with our loins girded, and our lamps burning, prepared for and expecting the coming of our Lord!

NOTES.

CHAP. XII. V. 1. We read of no son of Solomon except Rehoboam, and his mother was an Ammonitess: thus he was, so to speak, but half an Israelite. (Notes, xiv. 21. Deut. xxiii. 3-5.)—This may be considered as a providential rebuke, for Solomon's multiplying wives in so unprecedented a manner.—Solomon seems to have been sensible, that his son was not likely to prove a wise man, or to carry on his designs for the good of Israel and the establishment of his family; and to have greatly regretted it. (Note, Ec. ii. 18-23.) As he was the unrivalled heir of so flourishing a kingdom, we may be sure that his natural imprudence and rashness would be increased by the flattery of the young men with whom he was brought up. The people in general, upon Solomon's death, appeared disposed to recognize his succession, and convened at Shechem for that purpose. Yet, it is probable, that this city, which belonged to Ephraim, was chosen, rather than Jerusalem or Hebron, that the tribe of Judah might not have too great influence in the transaction; and Rehoboam was impolitic in consenting to that appointment, if he could have prevented it.

V. 2, 3. Jeroboam, hearing of the death of Solomon, did not delay to return into the land of Israel, to wait his opportunity of seizing upon the prize, which had been set before his ambition. For he was not disposed to wait the Lord's direction to proceed, as David had done when Saul died. (Note, 2 Sam. iii. 1-4.)—The elders of the people, by sending for him, indicated that they meant to impose strict limitations on Rehoboam.

V. 4. When the scriptural account of Solomon's reign, and the peace, affluence, and prosperity which Israel then enjoyed, are considered, we cannot doubt, but that this charge was either false or greatly exaggerated. Solomon had never oppressed the people with heavy taxes, or exercised cruelty towards them: and though some hardships might have been experienced in the latter end of his reign, compared with the former years; yet they were not “grievous services,” or heavy burdens: but, in fact, “Jeshurun waxed fat and kicked.”—Whilst they complained of their own grievances, and demanded redress, they were silent, as to Solomon's idolatry, in which many of them had concurred; and about the more complete re-establishment of the worship of God among them. (Notes, xi. 33. 1 Sam. viii. 1-5.)

V. 5. This delay of Rehoboam shewed a reluctance to give the elders satisfaction, and afforded the malecontents time to tamper with the elders of Israel, and to render them evil-affected. It would have been far wiser, to have immediately assured them of a redress of all real grievances; and to have waited till particulars were enquired into, when the unreasonableness of exorbitant claims would have been detected.

V. 6, 7. The persons, whom Rehoboam first consulted, were the friends and counsellors of Solomon, firmly attached to the interests of his family, and capable of giving safe and prudent advice. Accordingly, they advised him to make all needful concessions to the assembly, to speak fair to them, and to shew a readiness to pay regard to their interests and inclinations: this would have quieted the minds of the well-disposed, and broken all the measures of the malecontents; and when matters were settled, the people in general would have quietly rendered all proper submission to the prince of the house of David. (Notes, Judg. viii. 1-3. Prov. xv. 1. xxv. 15.)

8 But he forsook the counsel of the old men, which they had given him, and consulted with the young men that were grown up with him, and which stood before him :

9 And he said unto them, 'What counsel give ye, that we may answer this people who have spoken to me, saying, Make the yoke which thy father did put upon us lighter ?

10 And the young men that were grown up with him spake unto him, saying, 'Thus shalt thou speak unto this people that spake unto thee, saying, Thy father made our yoke heavy, but make thou it lighter unto us; thus shalt thou say unto them, 'My little finger shall be thicker than my father's loins.

11 And now, whereas my father did lade you with a heavy yoke, 'I will add to your yoke: my father hath chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions.

12 ¶ So Jeroboam and all the people came to Rehoboam the third day, as the king had appointed saying, 'Come to me again the third day.

13 And the king answered the people roughly, and forsook the old men's counsel that they gave him;

14 And spake to them after the counsel of the young men, saying, 'My father made your yoke heavy, and I will add to your yoke: my father also chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions.

15 Wherefore the king hearkened not unto the people; for the cause was from the LORD, that he might perform his saying, which the LORD spake by Ahijah the Shilonite unto Jeroboam the son of Nebat.

16 ¶ So when all Israel saw that the king hearkened not unto them, the people answered the king, saying, 'What portion have we in David? neither have we inheritance in the son of Jesse: to your tents, O Israel: 'now see to thine own house, David. 'So Israel departed unto their tents.

V. 8—15. The wise counsel of the old men did not suit the rash, insolent, and domineering spirit of Rehoboam: and he opposed to it the advice of the companions of his youthful pleasures, who would be sure to accommodate themselves to his inclinations. They counselled him therefore to speak with authority, and to damp the spirits of the assembly by resolute language; that they might no longer dare to dictate to him. The expressions which they suggested, allowed to the utmost, and even aggravated, the injurious charge brought against Solomon; and yet avowed a resolution of greater oppression and severity! The king was advised to menace them, that "his little finger should be thicker than his father's loins:" that is, that, as he was vastly more powerful than Solomon was at the beginning of his reign; so he would certainly let them feel the weight of that power, if they dared to oppose him. Perhaps he thought thus, because he came to the throne at a more mature age than Solomon had done; and had not any brothers to rival him in it. He also declared that he would "add to their yoke," by demanding heavier services and taxes of them: and, if they hesitated to obey, he would chastise them with scorpions, severe punishments as terrible as the sting of a scorpion; or, as some think, a terrible scourge thus called.—Such language as this was not very wise in Pharaoh to the poor enslaved Israelites, but it was not at all likely it should be endured by a rich, numerous, and free people. (Notes, Ec. v. 4—15.) Nothing can be conceived more foolish and exasperating, than such an address in so critical a juncture: but it was adopted, because it coincided with the self-importance and tyrannical temper of Rehoboam: and we may cease to wonder at his extreme infatuation, when we are told, that "the cause was from the LORD, that he might perform his word." (Notes, 2 Sam. xvii. 7—14. 2 Chr. xxv. 14—17. Is. xix. 11—14.)

V. 16. Though Rehoboam was very faulty, yet perhaps he might have been brought to a better temper, by proper arguments and expostulations.—The Lord had indeed promised ten tribes to Jeroboam: but he had not commanded the people to revolt from the family of David; nor had he commissioned Jeroboam to wrench them from Rehoboam. His purposes and declarations were not the motive of their conduct, and therefore formed no excuse for it. Their contempt of the memory of David, and ingratitude to him and his son, who had done so much towards advancing them to their present prosperity, were very criminal: but their language concerning his house, as if the entail of the kingdom to his family, though confirmed to him by the faithful oath and covenant of God himself, would now come to nought, was extremely profane, and discovered the infidelity of their hearts. (2 Sam. xx. 1, 2.) They indeed would have nothing more to do with the house of David, and he could not see to it himself: but the Lord would take care to fulfil his engagements; and 17 But as for the children of Israel which dwelt in the cities of Judah, Rehoboam reigned over them.

18 Then king Rehoboam sent Adoram, who was over the tribute; and all Israel stoned him with stones, that he died. Therefore king Rehoboam made speed to get him up to his chariot, to flee to Jerusalem.

19 So Israel rebelled against the house of David unto this day.

20 ¶ And it came to pass, when all Israel heard that Jeroboam was come again, that they sent and called him unto the congregation, and made him king over all Israel: there was none that followed the house of David, but the tribe of Judah only.

21 ¶ And when Rehoboam was come to Jerusalem, he assembled all the house of Judah, with the tribe of Benjamin, an hundred and fourscore thousand chosen men, which were warriors, to fight against the house of Israel, to bring the kingdom again to Rehoboam the son of Solomon.

22 But the word of God came unto Shemaiah, the man of God, saying,

23 Speak unto Jeroboam the son of Solomon king of Judah, and unto all the house of Judah and Benjamin, and to the remnant of the people, saying,

24 Thus saith the LORD, 'Ye shall not go up, nor fight against your brethren the children of Israel: return every man to his house; "for this thing is from me. "They hearkened therefore to the word of the LORD, and returned to depart, according to the word of the LORD.

25 ¶ Then Jeroboam built Shechem in mount Ephraim, and dwelt therein; and went out from thence, and built Penuel.

26 ¶ And Jeroboam said in his heart, 'Now shall the kingdom return to the house of David:

27 If this people go up to do sacrifice in the house of the LORD at Jerusalem, then shall the heart of this

David's family could not be destroyed, though it would be corrected or weakened; for the Messiah was to descend from him. (Notes, xi. 13. 36.)—Indeed, the ten tribes themselves were by far the greater losers by the revolt.

V. 17. The Benjamites and many of the Simeonites dwelt in Judah; and numbers of the Levites and of other tribes soon after joined them. (Note, 2 Chr. xi. 13—17.)

V. 18. It is not certain, whether Rehoboam sent Adoram to demand the taxes of the people, after their dispersion, as a feeble attempt to enforce his imprudent threats; or whether, previously to their departure from Shechem, he sent him to pacify them, with proposals for an accommodation. But, whatever his age, experience, and influence might have been, his office alone rendered him a very improper person for this embassy. (iv. 6.—Note, 2 Sam. xx. 24.) for the discontents of the people were excited by the tributes over which he presided. Accordingly he lost his life in a popular tumult, and Rehoboam hastily fled to Jerusalem. All these measures seem to have been exceedingly impolitic; the result of passion, not of judgment.—This is the first time that we read of a king of Israel riding in a chariot; though no doubt Solomon had. (Cant. iii. 9, 10.)

V. 19, 20. The defection of Israel from Rehoboam is called rebellion against the house of David: as no misconduct of either Solomon, or Rehoboam, was sufficient to justify, or even excuse, it; and neither the people nor Jeroboam intended to obey God, though they accomplished his purposes, by pursuing their own schemes.—No whole tribe, except Judah, and little Benjamin as united to it, adhered to Rehoboam. (Note, xi. 13.)

V. 21—24. The Lord would not allow Rehoboam to recover the ten tribes, nor was it his will that he should lose Judah: and therefore he mercifully prohibited the war, and thus prevented much bloodshed; though both parties deserved punishment for their sins. It was commendable in Rehoboam, that he submitted to the message of God by his prophet, when his loss had been so great, and his preparations were so formidable.—It is probable his more prudent counsellors opposed the war.

V. 25. (Marg. Ref.) Jeroboam repaired and fortified Shechem and Penuel; and perhaps erected palaces and other public buildings in them, that they might be the seats of his government, on each side of Jordan. (Note, 2 Chr. xii. 5—12.)

V. 26—29. The Lord had promised Jeroboam, that he would give ten tribes to him, and confirm the kingdom over them to his posterity, in case he obeyed his commandments: but he either forgot, or despised, the word of the Lord; and, leaning to his own understanding, he concluded, that he never could secure the obedience of the people, if they went up to Jerusalem to worship.

people turn again unto their lord, even unto Rehoboam king of Judah, "and they shall kill me, and go again to Rehoboam king of Judah.

28 Whereupon the king took counsel, and made two calves of gold, and said unto them, "It is too much for you to go up to Jerusalem: "Behold thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.

29 And he set the one in Beth-el, and the other put he in Dan.

30 And this thing became a sin: for the people went to worship before the one, even unto Dan.

31 And he made an house of high places, and 29—31. xx. 1. 2 Kings x. 29. Jer. viii. 16. Am. viii. 14. d xiii. 24. 2 Kings x. 31. xvii. 21. e xiii. 32. Ez. xvi. 25. Hos. xii. 12.

(Note, xi. 38.) For in case Rehoboam permitted them to come and return in safety, (as it is probable he would have done,) their friendly intercourse with their brethren, their social worship, and mutual kindness, would induce them to return to their submission to David's family, and to purchase Rehoboam's favour by killing his competitor. This might indeed seem natural and reasonable, but it contradicted the truth of God; and Jeroboam's wicked policy violated his commandments. To cover his secret intentions, he pretended, that it was too much trouble for the people to go to Jerusalem to worship; and that they might as acceptably serve God nearer home. (Notes, Judg. viii. 27. xvii. 5.) He therefore made two golden calves, in imitation no doubt of the idolatries which he had witnessed in Egypt, or according to the idolatry of Israel in the wilderness: (Note, Ex. xxxii. 2—6;) and he placed them at the southern and northern extremities of his kingdom: at Beth-el, afterwards called on that account "Beth-aven," or the house of vanity: and at Dan, where the Danites had formerly established idolatry. These were also reputed sacred places; the one, for Jacob's vision and vow: and the other, for the customary idolatry which had there prevailed. (Notes, Gen. xxviii. 12—22. Judg. xviii. 30, 31.) Thus he "made Israel to sin," and introduced the worship of the golden calves, which was perpetuated in the kingdom of Israel, without interruption, till the Assyrian captivity: and the bulk of the people readily concurred in his measures, as suited to their convenience and inclinations: though the priests, Levites, and many Israelites, were honourable exceptions. (Note, 2 Chr. xi. 13—17.)—It is evident, that Jeroboam meant this worship for JEHOVAH the God of Israel, "who brought them out of the land of Egypt:" though it was directly contrary to the law of God, and infinitely dishonourable to his glorious majesty, to be thus represented. Perhaps the people would be less shocked at worshipping the God of Israel, under the similitude of the golden calf, than if they had been at once invited to worship Baal: but it made way for that species of idolatry also. Thus the worship of images of Christ, and similar superstitions, in the ancient Romish church, soon introduced the worship of saints and angels. (Notes, Exod. xx. 4—6.)

V. 30. Even unto Dan. The people readily resorted to sacrifice, to the appointed places: though sometimes, that might occasion them longer journeys, than if they had gone to Jerusalem. Perhaps they often went from the southern part of the land, even to Dan, to maintain communion with those who worshipped there, who probably would not be backward in repaying their civility.

V. 31. Temples, on high places, were erected for the worship of the calves, at Beth-el and Dan; which were intended to serve the purpose to the religion of the ten tribes, that the temple did to Judah. Some think there were several chapels and altars erected, for the convenience of the worshippers; and perhaps others were added in different parts of the land. For these he appointed and consecrated priests of the poorest and most illiterate of the people, who would on that account be the more obsequious to him for their own interest. Or, as others explain the words, he made priests from every extremity of the land, or from every tribe and family without exception.—Thus he exempted the people from paying tithes to the Levites, whom he drove out of his kingdom, because they would not concur in his idolatry: and he paid court to the other tribes, by admitting them to the priesthood, of which many were ambitious: and in both respects he, no doubt, thought himself, and was considered by others, a consummate politician. (Notes, Sam. xv. 31. 2 Chr. xiii. 4—22. Job xii. 12—14. Prov. xxi. 30. 1 Cor. i. 20—25.)

V. 32, 33. This feast in the eighth month was intended as an imitation of the feast of tabernacles, which was kept in the seventh month, and, it is probable, it lasted as many days. But Jeroboam affected the credit of devising an entirely new system; and perhaps he hoped to draw in those who still went up to Jerusalem, by having his feast at a different time.—He seems to have acted as priest, in offering sacrifice and burning incense. (Note, xiii. 1.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—20. Many wise and pious men have had the severe affliction of foolish and wicked children: and as the Lord alone giveth wisdom, even good instructions will not ensure their prudent and proper conduct. But bad examples generally defeat the effect of wise counsels: and they, who are likely to inherit great dignity, are commonly so flattered and indulged, that it is almost a miracle, if they are not intoxicated with pride and sensual lusts.—Man is a discontented being; and whilst one desire remains ungratified, and one inconvenience unremoved, he is naturally more disposed to murmur, than to be thankful either to God or man, for the multiplied unmerited blessings with which he is surrounded. It is true, that rulers are often oppressive, and make their yoke grievous; and the people possess liberties and privileges, which they have a right in a regular manner to defend: but it is also true, that the people often complain without cause, and in an improper manner; that they do not make proper allowances for human infirmity, and the arduousness of government; that they expect all the advantages of it, whilst they grudge the necessary expenses; and are more anxious about their own interests, than about general equity, or the cause of truth and righteousness. Of these unreasonable dissatisfactions, ambitious men are ready to take the advantage, and put themselves in the way to head any formidable opposition to "the powers that be," when it can subserve their own purposes. (Notes, 1 Sam. vii. 6—9. 2 Sam. xv. 1—6. P. O. 12. xx. 1, 2.) It requires great wisdom to prevent or defeat such pernicious machinations: and if they, who have not prudence or experience adequate to such emergencies, would follow the counsel of their real friends, who are older or wiser than themselves, much mischief would be prevented. But commonly, weak men are the most obstinate, and relish no counsel but what flatters their silly pride, and humours their unreasonable prejudices: and when the companions of a prince's pleasures are his select counsellors: his inclinations, however mischievous, will be preferred to the important interests of the whole kingdom. (Notes, 2 Chr. xxiv. 17, 18. Esth. ii. 1—4. Dan. vi. 12—17.) Yet experience decides that, in general, men best mount by first stooping, prevail by yielding, and rule by becoming servicable, and giving good words: and when this consists with duty, it is in most cases our wisdom and interest. To the haughty indeed it appears degrading and mean: they delight to exert their authority, and shew their courage, by boasting, hectoring, and threatening; without considering whether they have power and abilities, to bear them out against the enraged opposition, which such language and behaviour must excite. By domineering, men expose themselves to the contempt of the wise: their enemies are rejoiced and their friends are grieved, by it: and they who have power to resist, will scorn to fear those, who are above seeking to be loved. Thus, fatal contests are excited, and all parties are hurried on to commit many crimes; yet the Lord over-rules the whole to accomplish his own righteous purpose and holy word.—We need not wonder that those persons who forget the mercies of God, and oppose his appointments with ingratitude and contempt, should recompense their earthly benefactors, with reproaches, insults, or injuries: but the Lord will take care of the characters, families, and interests of his faithful servants; and they may safely leave their cause in his hand, though they cannot see to it themselves.—But when men are left to their own inflated counsels, they add one mistake to another: they perceive their folly in some instances, when it is too late; yet in attempting to rectify their errors, they the more entangle themselves, and expose their friends; and those who were most rash and daring, when danger was out of sight, are generally the most cowardly when it seems to approach.

V. 21—33. It is in vain to attempt to disannul the Lord's counsel: when his revealed will is contrary to our pursuits, they should be relinquished, however great our apparent loss may be; and it is his will, and should be our desire, as much as possible to prevent the effusion of human blood.—Unbelieving men judge by appearances, and often conclude, that safety and prosperity can be obtained by those measures alone, which the word of God condemns. They engage in enterprises, in which they must either succeed or be ruined; success in this case appears the grand object; and the necessity, they suppose, will warrant or excuse their deviations from general rules: and thus they regard not what wickedness they commit, nor what numbers they involve in the same guilt and condemnation. But faith waits upon God in the path of duty, for the performance of his own promises, whatever difficulties may seem to impede it: and it perceives and aims at nobler objects, than the success of any temporal project, or even the preservation of life itself.—The duplicity of politicians often consists, in concealing their selfish purposes under plausible ostensible pretences: but men frequently conjecture aright in such matters; and God sees, and will expose the thought of their hearts, notwithstanding all their disguises.—The benefit of the public is often the plea: personal impunity for their crimes, the retaining of their places, or the increase of their own authority, are the real motives of their conduct. The people, however, are generally willing to gratify their rulers in matters of religion, provided it be easy, cheap, pompous, or sensual: and if a few scruples intervene, the revival of some old superstition, some plea of antiquity, of liberality of sentiment, or of agreement in the main with more scrupulous persons, though expedient alterations are adopted, will generally conciliate the minds of the majority to any religion that suits their convenience, agrees with their interests, and does not disquiet their consciences, or disturb them in gratifying their inclinations.—When persons in authority aim to render religion conducive to their secular purposes, they generally love to bring every thing under their own management. The ceremonies must be of their own devising, and the ministers of their own selecting: and indeed a hireling ignorant priesthood well suits with an idolatrous or superstitious worship, an usurping tyrannical prince, or a rebellious apostate people. But the pride, arrogance, and enmity of the human heart never appears more horrible, than when it presumptuously dares to change the Divine appointments, for those "which a man hath devised of his own heart," and to mould the worship of God into contrariety to his will; when ministers, so called, can be found shameless enough to countenance such arrogance, and

CHAP. XIII.

A man of God from Judah prophesies, that Josiah, of David's race should defile the altar at Beth-el; and he gives a sign, 1-3. Jeroboam's hand, stretched forth against him, withers; and the altar is rent, 4, 5. Jeroboam's hand is restored at the prophet's prayer, 6. He refuses entertainment and a reward, and leaves Beth-el, 7-10. He is seduced and brought back by an old prophet, who afterwards denounces the judgment of God against him for his disobedience, 11-22. A lion kills him on his way home, 23-25. The old prophet fetches his body, buries it with lamentations, and confirms his prophecy, 26-32. Jeroboam persists in his evil ways, 33, 34.

AND, behold, there came a man of God out of Judah, by the word of the LORD, unto Beth-el: and Jeroboam stood by the altar to burn incense.

2 And he cried against the altar in the word of the LORD, and said, O altar, altar, thus saith the LORD; Behold, a child shall be born unto the house of David, Josiah by name; and upon thee shall he offer the priests of the high places that burn incense upon thee, and men's bones shall be burnt upon thee.

3 And he gave a sign the same day, saying, This is the sign which the LORD hath spoken; Behold, the altar shall be rent, and the ashes that are upon it shall be poured out.

4 ¶ And it came to pass, when king Jeroboam heard the saying of the man of God, which had cried against the altar in Beth-el, that he put forth his hand from the altar, saying, Lay hold on him. And his hand, which he put forth against him, dried up, so that he could not pull it in again to him.

5 The altar also was rent, and the ashes poured out from the altar, according to the sign which the man of God had given by the word of the LORD.

6 And the king answered and said unto the man of God, Intreat now the face of the LORD thy God, and pray for me, that my hand may be restored me again. And the man of God besought the LORD, and the king's hand was restored him again, and became as it was before.

7 ¶ And the king said unto the man of God, Come home with me, and refresh thyself, and I will give thee a reward.

8 And the man of God said unto the king, If thou wilt give me half thine house, I will not go in with thee, neither will I eat bread nor drink water in this place:

9 For so was it charged me by the word of the LORD, saying, Eat no bread, nor drink water, nor turn again by the same way that thou camest.

10 So he went another way, and returned not by the way that he came to Beth-el.

11 ¶ Now there dwelt an old prophet in Beth-el; and his sons came and told him all the works that the man of God had done that day in Beth-el: the words which he had spoken unto the king, them they told also to their father.

12 And their father said unto them, What way went he? for his sons had seen what way the man of God went, which came from Judah.

13 And he said unto his sons, Saddle me the ass. So they saddled him the ass, and he rode thereon, 14 And went after the man of God, and found him sitting under an oak: and he said unto him, Art thou the man of God that camest from Judah? And he said, I am.

15 Then he said unto him, Come home with me, and eat bread.

16 And he said, I may not return with thee, nor go in with thee: neither will I eat bread nor drink water with thee in this place:

17 For it was said to me by the word of the LORD, Thou shalt eat no bread nor drink water there, nor turn again to go by the way that thou camest.

18 He said unto him, I am a prophet also as thou art; and an angel spake unto me by the word of the LORD, saying, Bring him back with thee into thine house, that he may eat bread, and drink water. But he lied unto him.

19 So he went back with him, and did eat bread in his house, and drank water.

when whole nations of professing worshippers quietly submit to it: indeed nothing in such a case, but a torrent of ungodliness, and most awful judgments can be expected.—But, alas! how soon all earthly prosperity is clouded! every remarkable prevalence of true religion, on earth, hath hitherto been succeeded by lamentable declensions, apostasies, or divisions. May the Lord hasten that time, when our "Prince of Peace" shall set up his kingdom of truth and of righteousness all over the earth, and when his cause shall finally and universally prevail!

NOTES.

CHAP. XIII. V. 1. To burn incense. (Notes, iii. 2, 3. xii. 32, 33. 2 Chr. xxvi. 16-23.) Jeroboam seems on this occasion to have officiated himself; and to have burned incense at the same altar on which the sacrifices had been offered. As the typical meaning of these institutions was not at all understood, and as the Divine appointment was entirely disregarded; every kind of innovation was made without scruple.

V. 2. We are not informed of this prophet's name; but he came from Judah, in the name of JEHOVAH, whose worship at the temple, Jeroboam and Israel had forsaken; and he predicted the prevalence of the house of David, whose authority they had rejected. With holy boldness and great earnestness, he cried against the altar, whilst Jeroboam and his attendants were performing their religious rites. As the destruction of this newly instituted worship was to be expressly foretold, and the stupidity of the idolaters themselves to be severely reprov'd, he addressed himself to the altar, and not to the worshippers. (Marg. Ref.) This prediction was delivered above three hundred years before Josiah was born; yet during all those years no one of the house of David gave his son, or assumed himself, this name, or attempted to fulfil the prophecy, until the appointed time was arrived; and then Amon, a wicked prince, named his son, Josiah. (Note, 2 Kings xxiii. 15-20.)—This extraordinary prophecy was a plain declaration, that the family of David would continue, and be honoured as the supporters of true religion, when the kingdom of the ten tribes should be incapable of resisting them.—The burning of men's bones upon the altar was the greatest contempt of it imaginable: and the offering of the priests themselves upon it, the greatest mark of God's abhorrence of their crimes. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 3-6. The judgment inflicted upon Jeroboam, and the rending of the altar as it had been foretold, intimidated him, so that he durst not attempt any thing further against "the man of God," whose message was thus divinely attested. In this emergency he had no confidence in his idol-gods, his upstart priests, or his self-invented sacrifices; but he expected help from the prayers of the prophet. He therefore begged him to intreat the face, (or the favour,) of the Lord his God for him: but he neither acknowledged his guilt, nor desired instructions from the prophet, nor sought forgiveness of his sins, nor desisted from his idolatry. He merely desired the removal of the Divine judgment, which the prophet readily prayed for and obtained. (Notes, Ex. ix. 30. Acts viii. 18-24.)

V. 7-10. Jeroboam neither repented, nor returned thanks to God for the restoration of his withered hand: but he was willing to entertain and reward the prophet for it; perhaps supposing that he was ready to do any thing for hire, like his own priests. (Notes, xxi. 13, 14. 1 Sam. ix. 6-10. 2 Kings v. 20-25. Is. lvi. 9, 10. Am. vii. 12, 13.) But the Lord had prescribed to his servant a different conduct. As a solemn protestation against the idolatry of Beth-el, he was forbidden to eat or drink in that city, whatever hardship he might endure. God would not accept their most costly sacrifices: nor would he allow his servant to accept of any entertainment from its inhabitants; or to do any thing which had the appearance of having fellowship with them, whose works of darkness he was sent to reprove. Nay, the more fully to express his abhorrence of their apostasy, and his determination not to make himself in any way familiar with them, or ought belonging to them, he was ordered to return by another road. And when solicited by the king himself, and promised a royal recompense; (though probably he was poor, as well as hungry and weary,) he thus far obediently observed his instructions.

V. 11-19. This old prophet continued to reside at Beth-el, after the priests and Levites had been driven away, and after idolatry was publicly established there: yet he entered no protest against it; and his sons were present at the idolatrous sacrifice, and made no secret of it. One old prophet: if any others had lived there, they had ere this left the place. These circumstances, joined to his conduct on this occasion, are convincing proofs, that though called a prophet he was not a really godly man. Perhaps he had been educated in the schools of the prophets, and had been favoured with the Spirit of prophecy. This had acquired him the reputation of a prophet, and he had maintained it in the days of Solomon, when religion was respected. But when the change took place under Jeroboam, being a carnal man, he preferred ease and interest to his religion, and made no opposition to the prevailing party: perhaps satisfying his conscience with holding his own sentiments privately, and not actually joining in the idolatry. Yet he was still desirous of the reputation of a prophet, as far as he could safely retain it: and this appears to have been his leading motive, in enticing the prophet of Judah back again; and not kindness to him, as some, or malice against him, as others, have conjectured. Many would doubtless applaud the resolution and disinterestedness of the man of God, who at last was not injured by Jeroboam: and perhaps this old prophet was 20 And it came to pass, as they sat at the table, that the word of the LORD came unto the prophet that brought him back :

21 And he cried unto the man of God that came from Judah, saying, 'Thus saith the LORD, Forasmuch as thou hast disobeyed the mouth of the LORD, and hast not kept the commandment which the LORD thy God commanded thee, 22 But camest back, and hast eaten bread, and drunk water in the place, of the which the LORD did say to thee, Eat no bread, and drink no water, thy carcass shall not come unto the sepulchre of thy fathers.

23 ¶ And it came to pass, after he had eaten bread, and after he had drunk, that he saddled for him the ass, to wit, for the prophet whom he had brought back.

24 And when he was gone, a lion met him by the way, and slew him : and his carcass was cast in the way, and the ass stood by it, the lion also stood by the carcass.

25 And, behold, men passed by, and saw the carcass cast in the way, and the lion standing by the carcass : and they came and told it in the city where the old prophet dwelt.

26 And when the prophet that brought him back from the way heard thereof, he said, It is the man of God who was disobedient unto the word of the LORD : therefore the LORD hath delivered him unto the lion, which hath torn him, and slain him, according to the word of the LORD which he spake unto him.

27 And he spake to his sons, saying, Saddle me the ass. And they saddled him.

28 And he went and found his carcass cast in the way, and the ass and the lion standing by the carcass : the lion had not eaten the carcass, nor torn the ass.

29 And the prophet took up the carcass of the man of God, and laid it upon the ass, and brought it back : and the old prophet came to the city, to mourn, and to bury him.

30 And he laid his carcass in his own grave : and they mourned over him, saying, Alas, my brother!

31 And it came to pass, after he had buried him, that he spake to his sons, saying, When I am dead, then bury me in the sepulchre wherein the man of God is buried ; lay my bones beside his bones :

32 For the saying which he cried by the word of the LORD against the altar in Beth-el, and against all the houses of the high places which are in the cities of Samaria, shall surely come to pass.

33 ¶ After this thing Jeroboam returned not from his evil way, but made again of the lowest of the people priests of the high places : whosoever would, he consecrated him, and he became one of the priests of the high places.

34 And this thing became sin unto the house of Jeroboam, even to cut it off, and to destroy it from off the face of the earth.

afraid of being censured for his cowardice, connivance, and selfishness. (Note, Acts v. 1—12.) He might hope to avert this disgrace by shewing kindness to the man of God; and he found he could do it, without incurring Jeroboam's displeasure. He therefore followed him, and found him sitting under a tree, weary and in need of refreshment, which would add much energy to his temptation: and when he perceived him decide against eating bread at Beth-el; he assured him that he also was a prophet, and came by commandment from God to bring him back; thus imposing upon him by speaking lies in the name of the Lord! (Notes, Gen. iii. 6. Is. ix. 13—17. Matt. iv. 1—4.) And the other perhaps supposed that he might refresh himself at the house of a prophet in Beth-el, though not in the house of an idolater. But as the commandment of God to him had been immediate and express; and he had only this man's own word for it, that he was a prophet, or that the Lord had spoken to him; his conduct was very criminal, and calculated to weaken the effect of his message upon the consciences of Jeroboam and his other auditors; and doubtless his judgment was on this occasion bribed by his inclinations. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 20—22. As the Lord inspired Balaam, contrary to his intentions, to pronounce blessings, and to utter, though doubtless with the greatest reluctance, prophecies concerning Israel; (Num. xxiii. 7, 8. xxiv. 1, 2. 13;) so was this prophet constrained to pronounce sentence against the man of God, whom he had seduced into disobedience; and thus to publish the shame of his own horrible imposture, and to read against himself a more dreadful doom, except he repented.—The sentence was direct, that the prophet of Judah should not die in peace at home, to be buried in his own sepulchre: but the time and circumstances of his death were not specified.

V. 23—32. The old prophet did not accompany the prophet of Judah, perhaps apprehensive of some divine judgment overtaking him: but some think, that he supplied him with the ass on which he rode, and that he had come on foot. The lion, commissioned by God, slew the prophet, but did not devour his body; and he neither hurt nor frightened away the ass: nay, he behaved so tamely, that travellers ventured past him, perhaps at a distance! And even the old prophet dared, and was allowed without molestation, to take away his body for burial! All these miraculous circumstances marked his death as a divine rebuke for his disobedience, in eating bread at idolatrous Beth-el; and both counteracted the conclusion, which Jeroboam might have been tempted to draw from his death against the truth of his message, and formed a solemn proof, how God abhorred, and would have all his people abhor, this newly instituted worship.—Thus, for one offence, a faithful servant of God was punished with immediate death, being "chastened of the Lord, that he should not be condemned with the world;" whilst the lying prophet, and the idolatrous king, escaped with impunity, being reserved to the punishments of a future state; which were in this instance loudly proclaimed. The old prophet indeed paid respect to the man of God, and expressed his conviction that his predictions would be verified, and a concern about his own bones; but he seems to have shewn no humiliation for his enormous crimes, no tokens of true repentance, no care about his soul: he neither left Beth-el, nor entered a public protest against Jeroboam's idolatry; nor did any thing, which many a hypocrite hath not equalled or exceeded, in attempting to buoy up his own presumption, or to impose upon others. Nay, he appears to have been desirous of gratifying his own vanity, and his claim to be considered as a prophet, when he buried the man of God in his own sepulchre, and lamented over him, "Alas, my brother!" He was, however, instrumental in accomplishing the Lord's word: and the prophet of Judah being buried at Beth-el, with a monumental inscription, would tend to keep his prediction in remembrance, and be an abiding protest against the worship of the golden calves.—The man of God from Judah appears to have spoken more prophecies, than are mentioned in the beginning of the chapter: and though the city Samaria was not yet built, the historian calls the cities in that neighbourhood, "the cities of Samaria;" in some of which Jeroboam had built high places.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—10. The Lord often meets sinners in the midst of their crimes, with alarming indications of his displeasure, to shew that "their way is perverse before him."—It requires great fortitude to deliver faithfully the messages of God, especially to those in authority: for they will certainly exasperate the proud and ungodly of every description, whether profane, superstitious, or hypocritical. But the Lord will bear those out whom he sends, and who simply trust and obey him: and faith in him is sufficient to overcome the fear of man. They who are thus employed should speak and act decidedly, as men in earnest, calling upon the very inanimate creation to testify, as it were, against the crimes of presumptuous offenders, who will not regard the word of God; in order that a deeper impression may be left upon the minds of their hearers.—The Lord is peculiarly offended with those, who attempt any thing against such intrepid reprovers of sin; and they, who have most insulted his servants, are often brought by affliction to pay court to them, and to desire their prayers. Nor ought this ever to be refused; for by returning good for evil, their severity against men's crimes is proved to be connected with compassionate love for their persons; and in answer to such prayers, God will often bestow temporal mercies upon impenitent sinners, though, continuing such, they cannot escape the damnation of hell.—Carnal men frequently betray their impenitency under convictions, even by their concessions: they acknowledge the true believer to be the servant of God, but they do not imitate him: they feel the vanity of their own superstitions or worldly idols, but they will not renounce them: they desire the removal of their afflictions, rather than the forgiveness of their sins, or the mortification of their lusts; and they shew kindness or offer presents to the minister who prays for them, whilst they requite the Lord with base ingratitude.—When persons are living in open sins, and causing others to sin by their influence and authority, the "men of God" should manifest their abhorrence of their crimes, by refusing to accept of any favours, and by separating from all intercourse with them. And when those, who are in low circumstances, act in this manner, with firmness and meekness, and plainly assign the reasons of their conduct; it will be one of the most alarming and convincing warnings which can possibly be given. Ministers and Christians must often go among ungodly people, but they ought never to make themselves familiar with them; and should shew that they are so uneasy in their company, that none of their temporal good things can bribe them, needlessly to prolong or repeat their visits. In order to this, they must be superior to the love of worldly pleasure and interest, inured to hardship and self-denial, and well acquainted with the commandments of God.—In the mystery of providence, false religion is permitted to be planted, and to prevail to the deceiving of many: but the Lord keeps the times and seasons in his own power; he foresees and determines those events, which are most distant, and appear most contingent: and he will in his appointed time destroy every species of irreligion or superstition, by one of the house of David, of nobler name and greater excellency than Josiah.—But the tokens of his displeasure, on the instruments of iniquity, proclaim his awful vengeance upon the sinners themselves: and none will become sacrifices to his 12 Arise thou therefore, get thee to thine own house: and when thy feet enter into the city, the child shall die.

13 And all Israel shall mourn for him, and bury him: for he only of Jeroboam shall come to the grave, because in him there is found some good thing toward the LORD God of Israel, in the house of Jeroboam.

14 Moreover the LORD shall raise him up a king over Israel, who shall cut off the house of Jeroboam that day: but what? even now.

15 ¶ For the LORD shall smite Israel, as a reed is shaken in the water, and he shall root up Israel out of this good land which he gave to their fathers, and shall scatter them beyond the river, because they have made their groves, provoking the LORD to anger.

16 And he shall give Israel up because of the sins of Jeroboam, who did sin, and who made Israel to sin.

17 ¶ And Jeroboam's wife arose, and departed, and came to Tirzah: and when she came to the threshold of the door, the child died;

18 And they buried him: and all Israel mourned for him, according to the word of the LORD, which he spake by the hand of his servant Ahijah the prophet.

19 ¶ And the rest of the acts of Jeroboam, how he warred, and how he reigned, behold, they are written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel.

20 And the days which Jeroboam reigned were two and twenty years: and he slept with his fathers, and Nadab his son reigned in his stead.

21 ¶ And Rehoboam the son of Solomon reigned in Judah. Rehoboam was forty and one years old when he began to reign, and he reigned seventeen years in Jerusalem, the city which the LORD did secure they might suppose themselves to be; even these should be pursued and cut off. Or, an allusion may be made to those peculiar treasures, which are shut up for security in the safest repositories, and are reserved to the last when all else is spent; and yet they must be parted with, or will be searched out and seized upon. Indeed, the house of Jeroboam was become as offensive to the Lord, as dung would be in a man's habitation; and should therefore be taken away till there was none left. Nor should any of his family, save Abijah, be buried, but their dead bodies should be left above ground, till the dogs or the fowls of the air devoured them, to their deeper disgrace and abhorrence. (Notes, xxi. 21—26. 2 Kings ix. 30—37. Jer. viii. 1—3.)

V. 12, 13. Abijah was the only person of all the house of Jeroboam, who was well disposed to the worship and service of JEHOVAH: and it is probable, that he had expressed strong disapprobation of his father's idolatry, and a purpose of suppressing it, if he should ever have it in his power. His removal was therefore a judgment upon Israel, who were unworthy of so pious a prince to reign over them: and it was the earnest of the entire destruction of Jeroboam's family, and a sort of preparation for it.—It seems, that Israel, though generally apostate, had some sense of Abijah's worth, and of their loss by his death, and sincerely mourned for him. (18. Note, 2 Chr. xxv. 25—27.)

V. 14. (Note, Ex. ix. 13—16.)—But what? even now. That is, 'Do not think that these judgments are distant events; but prepare for them, and consider what will be the consequence if they should come immediately; for they are even now at hand.' In two years after Jeroboam's death, Baasha utterly extirpated his family. (Marg. Ref.)—Some, however, interpret the clause to mean, that the desolation of Jeroboam's house should merely be an introduction to still greater calamities on Israel.

V. 15, 16. These verses emphatically predict the enfeebled, distracted state of Israel, until they were given up finally at the Assyrian captivity.—They were punished for "willingly walking after the commandment of Jeroboam;" to worship the golden calves; and concurring in his revolt from the house of David, and from the worship of God. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Hos. v. 11, 12. viii. 2—6. xiii. 10, 11.)

V. 19. The book, &c. These chronicles, or words of days, or journals, were the public records of the kingdom, from whence extracts seem to have been made by the inspired penmen, with such additions as were suited for instruction. If any one wished further to gratify his curiosity, he was referred to the original records: but these have now long since been buried in oblivion. The same may be said of "The book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah." (29.) which were the records of that kingdom, and not that part of holy writ, which we call the Books of Chronicles. (Marg. Ref. Notes, xi. 41. 1 Chr. xxix. 29, 30.)

V. 21. Rehoboam, having been born one year before David's death, and having had his education in the best years of his father's reign, had abundant choose out of all the tribes of Israel, to put his name there. And his mother's name was Naamah an Ammonitess.

22 And Judah did evil in the sight of the LORD, and they provoked him to jealousy with their sins which they had committed, above all that their fathers had done.

23 For they also built them high places, and images, and groves, on every high hill, and under every green tree.

24 And there were also sodomites in the land: and they did according to all the abominations of the nations which the LORD cast out before the children of Israel.

25 ¶ And it came to pass in the fifth year of king Rehoboam, that Shishak king of Egypt came up against Jerusalem:

26 And he took away the treasures of the house of the LORD, and the treasures of the king's house; he even took away all; and he took away all the shields of gold which Solomon had made.

27 And king Rehoboam made in their stead brazen shields, and committed them unto the hands of the chief of the guard, which kept the door of the king's house.

28 And it was so, when the king went into the house of the LORD, that the guard bare them, and brought them back into the guard-chamber.

29 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Rehoboam, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

30 And there was war between Rehoboam and Jeroboam all their days.

31 And Rehoboam slept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David. And his mother's name was Naamah, an Ammonitess. And Abijah his son reigned in his stead.

opportunity of becoming a wiser man than he proved to be. Naamah is supposed to have been the daughter of Shobi, the Ammonite, who was kind to David in Absalom's rebellion; (Note, 2 Sam. xvii. 27—29;) and Shobi having been proselyted to the religion of Israel, David took his daughter to be the wife of his son Solomon, perhaps out of gratitude for his kindness. He had himself married the daughter of Talmi the king of Geshur; but the character of Absalom, his son by her, should have cautioned him against such marriages. (Notes, 2 Sam. iii. 2—5. xiii. 37—39. xv.—xvii.) It is very doubtful whether Naamah ever cordially embraced true religion: and as Solomon worshipped the gods of Ammon among the rest, it has been thought, that she at last became one of his seducers.

V. 22—24. It was a most extraordinary circumstance, that, after the priests and Levites, and pious persons from Israel, had settled in Judah, (Note, 2 Chr. xi. 13—17.) Rehoboam and his subjects in general should become more gross idolaters than the Israelites were. Yet this was actually the case; for they directly worshipped false gods; and the groves seem to have been temples erected in shady places, where the most abominable lewdness was practised in honour of their filthy idols. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 9—11. xii. 26—29. Lev. xviii. 21—30.)

V. 25—28. It is probable that Shishak was excited by Jeroboam, as well as allured by the prospect of an immense booty, in thus making war against Rehoboam. If (as some learned men suppose) Shishak was the Sesostris of pagan historians, he was a most powerful and formidable conqueror: and Rehoboam, perhaps intimidated by seeing the hand of God so speedily lifted up against him, seems to have tamely surrendered. (Notes, 2 Chr. xii. 1—12.) Thus in less than five years from Solomon's death, the temple was plundered, as well as his royal palaces; and Shishak having seized the booty, appears to have relinquished his conquests in Judah.—Rehoboam replaced the golden shields with others made of brass: and the use which he made of these, shews for what purposes those of gold had been designed; and intimates, that he still on some occasions attended the worship of God at his temple. (Notes, vii. 2. x. 16, 17.)

V. 30. Rehoboam was not allowed to attack Jeroboam, in the beginning of his reign, and we read of no great battles fought betwixt them: yet by mutual incursions, they molested and weakened each other all their days. (Notes, xii. 21—24. xv. 6, 7.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—20. Parents often suffer, and are corrected, in the affliction of their children: and on such occasions they should examine their lives, repent of their sins, humble themselves before God, submit to his will, seek help from him, and beg that the affliction may be sanctified for the good of their souls. But sinners are more anxious to know the secret purposes of God, than to understand his revealed will and their own duty: they are often conscious, that their forms are not to be depended on; but are afraid that others should perceive their convictions, and despise them. They often secretly reverence the faithful servants of God: and, having found the truth of some of their words, they have an inward persuasion, that the rest also will be verified; except as they flatter themselves with hopes of escaping the miseries denounced against them. They form, indeed, very erroneous judgments both of God and of his servants; yet they would be glad of help or information in times of trouble, did they not fear rebukes and warnings. They therefore, either keep at a distance, or attempt to impose upon faithful ministers, by disguising their real characters, and pretending kindness to them. Indeed the wisest of men may thus be deceived; but God searcheth every heart, and often unmasks the hypocrite before the world: he more frequently enables his servants to see through their disguises, and to address them in their real, not their assumed, characters; and at last he will expose them to universal shame and contempt before the assembled world. "What then doth it avail thee, thou deceiver, to attempt imposing upon men? "Why feignest thou thyself to be another" person? In vain dost thou expect an answer of peace, whilst thou continuest in sin. The ministers of Christ are all sent to thee with heavy tidings: thine attempt to impose on them, or to bribe them by presents, does but increase thy guilt: they will not thus be diverted from giving thee faithful reproofs and awful warnings; and the event will shortly inform thee of the purpose of God concerning thee; the foreknowledge of which, would only augment thy misery, except thou repent of all thy wickedness, and turn to the Lord in uprightness of heart.—Every providential favour demands a return of grateful obedience, and aggravates future transgression; and thus prosperous sinners accumulate guilt and wrath, with a rapidity proportioned to their abused mercies.—When men have witnessed, and have even gained by God's displeasure against the sins of other men, and yet imitate and exceed them in iniquity, they may expect to be visited with more tremendous vengeance: and as they dishonour him by their crimes, he will disgrace them in their punishment.—A man is not indeed affected by the indignity shewn to his dead body, or even by the miseries of his posterity, yet the prospect may torment his mind whilst he lives: such judgments form a proper emblem of the punishment of the wicked after death; and they strongly express the abhorrence and indignation of God for a warning to others.—Instruments will readily be found, among the depraved sons of men, for the most bloody and savage acts of inhumanity: but the circumstance, of their being advanced to power by the providence of God, who over-rules their crimes to the accomplishment of his own righteous purposes, forms no excuse for their ambition and cruelty.—Sinners often flatter themselves that threatened judgments are very distant, when they are even at the door; and excuse themselves, because they were persuaded or frightened into compliance.—Awful indeed will be the doom of those who employ their abilities and authority to make others sin; for thousands will for ever execrate some of them, as the causes of their eternal perdition. They, however, who yield to temptation, follow bad examples, and obey sinful commands, will provoke the Lord to give them up, and cast them off, unless they deeply repent of their iniquity.—The Lord deals with men according to their habitual character: and he will not mention against the upright believer, who hath cordially followed him, those incidental sins of which he hath repented, and for which he hath patiently borne correction.—To shew the power and sovereignty of his grace, he frequently reserves an individual or two out of the worst of families, in whom there is "some good thing toward the LORD God of Israel." The fruits of his grace he peculiarly delights in, when they flourish from the hearts of the young and the affluent, and of those who are surrounded with contagious examples and instructions. When such young persons are spared, they often prove blessings to their families and connexions: but their premature death forebodes awful judgments, and may well be mourned over as a public calamity. But they "are taken away from the evil to come," and their death can never be a loss unto themselves.

V. 21-31. No wonder that they, who are at a distance from the ordinances of God, are hardened in iniquity: when such as are most favoured provoke him to jealousy by their crimes, and are uninfluenced by his judgments, mercies, warnings, and promises.—The perpetration of the worst crimes, of the worst of the heathen, in Jerusalem, the city that the Lord had chosen for his temple and worship; and at present in this favoured land and city; demonstrates, that nothing can render the heart of fallen man holy, but the special sanctifying grace of the Holy Spirit: on this alone may we depend; for this may we daily pray, in behalf of ourselves and of all around us!—But sin quickly enfeebles, impoverishes, and disgraces the most prosperous nations: and when holiness, the real glory of a religious profession, is gone, all external splendour will follow it, or become worthless. Yet many, who live in gross wickedness, keep up a formal attendance upon divine ordinances, and are pleased with an ostentatious imitation of the usages of better times; which have lost all their intrinsic value, and retain nothing except the external glitter that amuses weak and carnal minds.—Death still marches his solemn round, and conveys monarchs from their thrones, as well as peasants from their cottages. Happy are they alone, who possess the "lively hope of an incorruptible inheritance," in that world, "where the wicked cease from troubling, and where the weary are at rest!"

NOTES.

CHAP. XV. V. 2, 3. There is no ground for the opinion, that Maachah was the daughter of Absalom the son of David. (Marg. Ref. Note, 14.)—As Abijam, though a wicked man, was a professed worshipper of JEHOVAH, he is called "the LORD his God." (Note, 2 Chr. xxviii. 5.)

V. 4. Notwithstanding the wickedness of Abijam, and others of David's race; they were for his sake continued as "a lamp in Jerusalem:" (Note, xi. 36.) and they were highly useful, both to establish the civil state of that city, and to maintain the true worship of God in it; when the light of divine truth was almost extinguished in all other places.

V. 5. Save only, &c. Many other parts of David's conduct were evidently faulty; but in this instance alone he acted so inconsistently with his profession, in all respects, as otherwise it could scarcely have been conceived a real godly man could have done. (Notes, 2 Sam. xi.)—They who know the human heart, and the state of a believer in this world of conflict and temptation, will never expect to see a character and conduct free from blemish and criminality; though they observe many preserved from falling, or from continuing long, under the power of notorious evils. David, however, deeply repented of this part of his conduct; and to the close of his life he shewed himself to be the upright and devoted servant and worshipper of the Lord. (Notes, 1 Chr. xxviii. xxix. Ps. li.)

V. 6, 7. God vouchsafed to continue the royal authority over Judah in the family of David; yet, instead of ruling over Israel also, as David and Solomon had done, both Rehoboam and Abijam were harassed by perpetual wars with Jeroboam the king of Israel. Rehoboam left this unnatural war, after it had lasted all his days, to his son Abijam, who did not live to terminate it. This seems a more satisfactory interpretation, than to suppose that Rehoboam means the son of Jeroboam; when Abijam is separately mentioned in the next verse. (Notes, xiv. 30. 2 Chr. xiii. 3-22.)

V. 9. Abijam began to reign during the eighteenth year of Jeroboam; he reigned through his nineteenth year, and he died before the close of his twentieth, when Asa succeeded. Thus Abijam is said, according to the Hebrew idiom, to have reigned "three years," in the same manner that Christ is said to have risen after "three days." Thus also Nadab began to reign in the second year of Asa, and reigned two years: yet Baasha succeeded him in the third year of Asa. (28.) This is one way, in which the computation of the years between the two kingdoms may be made to coincide: for, in the numerous successions in the kingdom of Israel, the same year is frequently twice reckoned; both to him who reigned in the commencement, and to him who succeeded before the close, of it.

V. 10-13. Maachah was Asa's grandmother, but probably his own mother was dead, and Maachah had brought him up: (Notes, xv. 2, 3. 2 Chr. xi.

14 But the high places were not removed: nevertheless Asa's heart ^awas perfect with the LORD all his days.

15 And ^ahe brought in the ^bthings which his father had dedicated, and the things which himself had dedicated, into the house of the LORD, silver, and gold, and vessels.

16 ¶ And ^bthere was war between Asa and Baasha king of Israel all their days.

17 And ^aBaasha king of Israel went up against Judah, and built ^aRamah, that ^ahe might not suffer any to go out or come in to Asa king of Judah.

18 Then ^aAsa took all the silver and the gold ^athat were left in the treasures of the house of the LORD, and the treasures of the king's house, and delivered them into the hand of his servants; and king Asa sent them to ^aBen-hadad, the son of Tabrimon, the son of Hezion, king of Syria, that dwelt at ^bDamascus, saying,

19 There is a league between me and thee, and between my father and thy father: behold, I have sent unto thee a present of silver and gold; come and ^abreak thy league with Baasha king of Israel, that he may ^adepart from me.

20 So Ben-hadad hearkened unto king Asa, and sent the captains of the hosts which he had, against the cities of Israel, and smote ^aIjon, and ^aDan, and ^aAbel-beth-maachah, and all ^aCinneroth, with all the land of Naphtali.

21 And it came to pass, ^awhen Baasha heard thereof, that he left off building of Ramah, and dwelt in ^aTirzah.

22 Then king Asa ^amade a proclamation throughout all Judah; (none ^awas ^aexempted:) and they took away the stones of Ramah, and the timber thereof, wherewith Baasha had builded: and king Asa built with them ^aGeba of Benjamin, and ^aMizpah.

29 And it came to pass, when he reigned, that he smote all the house of Jeroboam; ^ahe left not to Jeroboam any that breathed, until he had destroyed him, according unto the saying of the LORD, which he spake by his servant Ahijah the Shilonite:

30 Because of ^athe sins of Jeroboam which he sinned, and which he made Israel sin, by his provocation wherewith he provoked the LORD God of Israel to anger.

31 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Nadab, and all that he did, are ^athey not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

32 And ^athere was war between Asa and Baasha king of Israel all their days.

33 In the third year of Asa king of Judah began Baasha the son of Ahijah to reign over all Israel in Tirzah, ^atwenty and four years.

34 And ^ahe did evil in the sight of the LORD, and ^awalked in the way of Jeroboam, and in his sin wherewith he made Israel to sin.

18—23:) he however deprived her of authority, and removed her from court, for her idolatry, which he entirely suppressed.—The words translated, “from being queen,” may be rendered, from the queen, namely, lest Maachah should seduce Asa's queen also into idolatry.

V. 14. Was perfect, &c. This may be opposed to the external good behaviour, and the insincere and divided heart, of hypocrites; and may signify, that Asa was cordially devoted to the service and worship of God all his days; and that his sins arose from infirmity, not from presumptuous deliberate wickedness. (Notes, 5. Ps. xix. 12—14.) But some explain it to mean no more, than that he never turned aside from the worship of God to idolatry, as Solomon had done.—He had not, however, zeal and resolution enough to suppress the high places, on which the people sacrificed to the Lord, instead of coming to the temple; though he destroyed the idols out of the land. (Note, iii. 3, 4.)

V. 15. It seems Abijah, in his war with Jeroboam, had made some vow of dedicating the spoil to God, which he did not live to perform. But Asa fulfilled it, as well as a similar vow of his own. (Marg. Ref.) (Lev. xxvii. 28, 29.)

V. 17—24. This league with Ben-hadad evidently arose from unbelief, and it was criminal in itself. It was also very wrong to tempt Ben-hadad to “break his league” with the king of Israel, and still worse to hire him to it with the consecrated treasures of the temple. This occurred in the latter years of Asa's reign.—Baasha's policy was not unlike the impious devices of Jeroboam, (Note, xii. 26—29:) but God could have turned it into foolishness, without Asa opposing it by a policy not more justifiable. (Notes, 2 Chr. xiv. xv. xvi.)

V. 29, 20. We may be sure, that Baasha left the dead bodies of Jeroboam's family unburied, as it had been predicted. He, however, only sought to secure himself in the kingdom by this cruelty, and therefore he imitated Jeroboam in his idolatry and other impieties. (34.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—15. A superficial acquaintance with the Divine law may enable us to perceive evident defects in the conduct of eminent believers: and man's natural enmity to God and his servants disposes him to delight in severely animadverting on them: yet if the habitual conduct of the righteous, towards God and man, be impartially contrasted with that of unbelievers, the difference is very visible, and they appear to be of another spirit, and far more excellent than their neighbours. But when the secret desires and good works of the righteous, and the secret evils of the hearts and lives of ungodly men, shall be made manifest at the day of judgment; the glory of the Divine justice and mercy will be displayed to the whole world, in the allotment of their everlasting portion of happiness or misery. (Note, Mal. iii. 13—18.) The general conduct of the Lord's servants may therefore be held forth as an example for imitation: and numbers are the better on their account, both whilst they live, and after they are gone to their rest. But, alas! even children, who have been favoured and spared for their parents' sake, often forsake their righteous ways; and but few, especially in superior stations, have hitherto served God in uprightness of heart. He hath, however, still taken care of his cause; whilst those who ought to have been serviceable to it have perished in their sins: and the Son of David will continue a light to his church, to establish it in truth and righteousness, to the end of time.—It is happy for nations when wicked rulers are speedily removed, and when the righteous come in their stead, and are long preserved, “to do that which is right in the eyes of the Lord.”—They, who would please him, and promote reformation, must prefer his glory to the reputation of every friend or relative: nay, they must oppose the crimes even of their own parents, though this may seem a reflection upon the memory of the deceased, or a slight put upon the characters of the living. Nor may any age, sex, or relative tie, induce such as are entrusted with authority to allow those to possess power, who abuse it to the dishonour of God, and to the spread of ungodliness; and in every situation our duty to him must have the preponderance over all other duties. How absurd then is it, to be satisfied with a religion, merely because our fathers professed it! for indeed that reason, if allowed to be valid, would generally prove that men ought to continue in idolatry, superstition, and immorality. (Note, 1 Pet. i. P. O. 17—21.)—Every reformation upon earth hath hitherto been defective: the utmost attainment of fallen man has been an upright and persevering endeavour to glorify God; and this meets with his merciful acceptance, by faith in Jesus Christ.

V. 16—34. Even believers find it hard in times of urgent danger, “to trust in the Lord with all their heart, and not to lean to their own understanding:” and unbelief makes way for carnal policy. This has often induced Christians to call in the help of the enemies of God, in their contests with their brethren; to spend that time and substance to obtain their favour, which ought to have been devoted to the Lord's service; and to tempt others to behave deceitfully or cruelly. Such evils have frequently disgraced religious disputes: the victories thus acquired have weakened the common cause, and ended in shame and bitterness: and some, who once shone bright in the meridian of the church, have been thus covered with a dark cloud towards the close of their days. May God help us “to follow after peace, and those things wherewith one may edify another;” and that our “path may shine more and more bright unto the per-

CHAP. XVI.

Jehu predicts the ruin of Baasha's family, 1-4. Baasha dies, and is succeeded by his son Elah, 5-7. Zimri slays Elah, succeeds him, and fulfils Jehu's prophecy, 8-14. Omri usurps the kingdom, and besieges Zimri in Tirzah, who burns himself in the palace, 15-20. Tibni opposes Omri, who prevails against him, 21, 22. Omri builds Samaria, reigns wickedly, dies, and is succeeded by Ahab, 23-28. Ahab's execrable wickedness and idolatry, as instigated by his wife Jezebel, 29-33. Joshua's curse on the building of Jericho is fulfilled on Hiel, 34.

THEN the word of the LORD came to ¹Jehu the son of ²Hanani against Baasha, saying,

2 Forasmuch as ³I exalted thee out of the dust, and made thee prince over my people Israel, and ⁴thou hast walked in the way of Jeroboam, and ⁵hast made my people Israel to sin, to provoke me to anger with their sins;

3 Behold, I will take away the posterity of Baasha, and the posterity of his house; and ⁶I will make thy house like the house of Jeroboam the son of Nebat.

4 Him that dieth of Baasha in the city ⁷shall the dogs eat; and him that dieth of his in the field shall the fowls of the air eat.

5 ¶ Now ⁸the rest of the acts of Baasha, and what he did, and his might, ⁹are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

6 So ¹⁰Baasha slept with his fathers, and was buried in Tirzah: and ¹¹Elah his son reigned in his stead.

7 And also by ¹²the hand of the prophet Jehu the son of Hanani came the word of the LORD against Baasha, and against his house, even for all the evil that he did in the sight of the LORD, in provoking him to anger ¹³with the work of his hands, in being like the house of Jeroboam; and ¹⁴because he killed him.

8 ¶ In the twenty and sixth year of Asa king of Judah, began Elah the son of Baasha to reign over Israel in Tirzah, two years.

9 And his servant Zimri, captain of half his chariots, ¹⁰conspired against him, as he was in Tirzah, ¹¹drinking himself drunk in the house of Arza, ¹²steward of his house in Tirzah.

10 And ¹³Zimri went in, and smote him, and killed him, in the twenty and seventh year of Asa king of Judah, and ¹⁴reigned in his stead.

11 ¶ And it came to pass, when he began to reign, as soon as he sat on his throne, ¹²that ¹³he slew all the fect day!"—But after all, how much happier are they who are connected with godly people, than such as have their lot cast among the profane and wicked!—Wretched is it for others, but most so for themselves, when children inherit the vices, with the estates, of their wicked parents: their temporal calamities may arise from the sins of their fathers; but "the wrath to come" will be the recompense of their own crimes.—Ungodly men execute the just judgment of God upon each other, whilst gratifying their own ambition, avarice, or revenge; and at the same time they ripen for severer vengeance, by imitating the sins of those whom they have supplanted.—Many suffer, and many are induced to commit iniquity, by such rulers and usurpers. But in the midst of all these enormities, and this apparent confusion, the Lord is carrying on his universal plan: and when it shall be fully completed, all rational and holy creatures, and all the company of redeemed sinners, will perceive, admire, and adore the glorious justice, wisdom, truth, and mercy, displayed in every part of it, through all the ages of eternity.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVI. V. 1. Hanani, the father of Jehu, was a prophet, as well as his son. Jehu was a young man at this time, and he continued for many years employed by the Lord, and useful to his people. (Marg. Ref.)—Thus a succession of prophets was raised up in the nation of Israel, through every generation, till the advent of Christ approached. (Preface to Malachi.)

V. 2-7. The conduct of Baasha, in conspiring against Nadab, and murdering him and Jeroboam's family, was highly criminal. But the success of his conspiracy, and his advancement from a very low condition, to the throne of Israel, were from the Lord; whose benefits aggravated the guilt of his subsequent idolatry. (Note, 2 Sam. xii. 8.)—God acknowledged Israel as his people, notwithstanding their apostasy: because they professed themselves his worshippers; because there were many believers in the land; and because he intended to maintain religion among them, and not utterly to cast them off. This also was an aggravation of Baasha's sin; that being, by Providence, made prince over the Lord's people, he employed his authority in causing them to sin against him. (Notes, xiv. 5-11.)

V. 7. It is likely that Jehu was sent from Judah, and delivered his message to Baasha, as the man of God did to Jeroboam. (Notes, xiii. 1-5. 2 Chr. xvi. 7-10. xix. 2, 3.)—Killed him. 'Baasha destroyed Jeroboam in his posterity, by cruelly murdering them all.' God had not commanded him to do this, though he had predicted that it should be done. Baasha was actuated by his own am-house of Baasha: ¹he left him not one that pisseth against a wall, ²neither of his kinsfolks nor of his friends.

12 Thus did Zimri destroy all the house of Baasha, ¹³according to the word of the LORD, which he spake against Baasha ¹⁴by Jehu the prophet;

13 For all the sins of Baasha, and the sins of Elah his son, by which they sinned, and by which they made Israel to sin, in provoking the LORD God of Israel to anger with their ¹⁵'vanities.

14 Now the rest of the acts of Elah, and all that he did, ¹⁶are ¹⁷they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

15 ¶ In the twenty and seventh year of Asa king of Judah did Zimri reign ¹⁸seven days in Tirzah; and the people ¹⁹were ²⁰encamped against Gibbethon, which ²¹belonged to the Philistines.

16 And the people ²²that were encamped heard say, Zimri hath conspired, and hath also slain the king: wherefore all Israel made ²³'Omri, the captain of the host, king over Israel that day in the camp.

17 And Omri went up from Gibbethon, and all Israel with him, and they ²⁴'besieged Tirzah.

18 And it came to pass, when Zimri saw that the city was taken, that he went into the palace of the king's house, and ²⁵'burnt the king's house over him with fire, and died, 19 For his sins which he sinned ²⁶'in doing evil in the sight of the LORD, in walking in the way of Jeroboam, and ²⁷'in his sin which he did, to make Israel to sin.

20 Now ²⁸'the rest of the acts of Zimri, and his treason that he wrought, ²⁹are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

21 ¶ Then were the people of Israel divided into two parts: half of the people followed Tibni the son of Ginath, to make him king; and half followed Omri.

22 But the people that followed Omri prevailed against the people that followed Tibni the son of Ginath: so Tibni died, and Omri reigned.

23 ¶ In the thirty and first year of Asa king of bition and other corrupt passions; and therefore deserved punishment, though he fulfilled the righteous purposes of God. (Notes, 2 Kings x. 29-31. Is. x. 5-13. Hos. i. 4, 5. Acts ii. 22-24.)

V. 8-14. Baasha began to reign in the third year of Asa; and he reigned twenty-four years, yet he died, and was succeeded by Elah, in the twenty-sixth year of Asa. Thus, it is evident, that a part of the third year of Asa, after Baasha came to the throne, is calculated as a whole year. (Note, xv. 9.) In like manner Elah, who began to reign in the twenty-sixth year of Asa, and was killed in the twenty-seventh, is said to have reigned two years, that is, a part of two years.—The sentence denounced against the house of Baasha, greatly resembles that denounced against Jeroboam and his family: and both Jeroboam and Baasha died in peace; while Nadab and Elah, their sons, were slain within two years, and the posterity of each of them was entirely and ignominiously extirpated! But Baasha's friends likewise were involved in the same ruin.—Drunk. (9.) (Marg. Ref.)

V. 15. The death of Nadab had before prevented the prosecution of the siege of Gibbethon: (xv. 27, 28:) and it was the second time interrupted by the murder of Elah, who staid at home to indulge himself, whilst his army was besieging that city.—Gibbethon lay in the lot of Dan, but it was given to the Levites. The Philistines, however, had got possession of it during the distractions which prevailed in Israel. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 18, 19. Zimri, finding his cause desperate, afraid of falling alive into the hands of his enemies, and perhaps envying his competitor the possession of that palace and those riches, which he had coveted, burnt himself, with the palace and all its treasures. He was driven to this extremity, and left to this desperation, for his sins: in the space of seven days he had murdered all the posterity and relations of Baasha; and had manifested his determination to support the worship of the golden calves. (Notes, 1 Sam. xxxi. 3-5. 2 Kings ix. 30-37.)

V. 21, 22. The army, encamped before Gibbethon, chose Omri, their commander, king: but it seems either that some of them were afterwards disgusted by him; or, that the principal persons, who were absent, disapproved of this measure, and set up Tibni against him.—As the war lasted six years; (Note, 23:) numbers no doubt were cut off on both sides, before the contest ended with the death of Tibni.

V. 23. Twelve, &c. Twelve years elapsed between the death of Zimri and that of Omri; namely, from the beginning of the twenty-seventh, to the end of the thirty-eighth year of Asa's reign. But probably half that time had Judah, began Omri to reign over Israel, ¹²twelve years: six years reigned he in Tirzah.

24 And he bought the hill Samaria of Shemer for two talents of silver, and built on the hill, and called ¹the name of the city which he built, after the name of Shemer, owner of the hill, ²Samaria.

25 ¶ But Omri wrought evil in the eyes of the LORD, and ¹did worse than all that were before him.

26 For ¹he walked in all the way of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, and in his sin wherewith he made Israel to sin, to provoke the LORD God of Israel to anger with ²their vanities.

27 ¶ Now ¹the rest of the acts of Omri, which he did, and his might that he shewed, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

28 So Omri ¹slept with his fathers, and was buried in Samaria: and Ahab his son reigned in his stead.

29 ¶ And in the thirty and eighth year of Asa king of Judah, began Ahab the son of Omri to reign over Israel: and Ahab the son of Omri reigned over Israel ¹in Samaria twenty and two years.

30 And Ahab the son of Omri did evil in the sight of the LORD ¹above all that were before him.

CHAP. XVII.

Elijah foretels to Ahab a long drought; and is sent by God to the brook Cherith, and fed by ravens, 1-7. He is afterwards sent to Zarephath, and sustained by a widow-woman, whose barrel of meal and cruse of oil do not fail, 8-16. Her son dies, but is restored to life in answer to Elijah's prayer; whom she believes to be sent by God, 17-24.

AND ¹Elijah the Tishbite, who was of the inhabitants of Gilead, said unto Ahab, ²As the LORD God of Israel liveth, ³before whom I stand, there shall not be ⁴dew nor rain these years, but according to my word.

been spent in civil wars, between Omri and Tibni; and the thirty-first year of Asa was nearly concluded, when Omri obtained the undisputed possession of the throne; from which time he reigned six complete years.—Thus, whilst Israel was torn to pieces by intestine commotions, conspiracies, massacres, and the succession of one usurper to another, who were all monsters of iniquity; Judah was quietly governed by one pious prince, who began to reign in the days of Jeroboam, survived Nadab, Baasha, Elah, Zimri, and Omri, and lived till the fourth year of Ahab. The revolt of Israel therefore proved to be mainly their own loss. (Note, xxi. 16.)

V. 24. It is probable, that the burning of the palace at Tirzah, by Zimri, induced Omri to this measure.—It is conjectured that Shemer sold his estate at a low price, upon condition of having the city, to be built on it, called by his name. From this city the whole surrounding country was called Samaria, or Shomeron; and sometimes the whole kingdom of the ten tribes is thus called, after Samaria became the capital city. (Marg. Ref. Note, xlii. 23.)

V. 30-33. Omri had done worse than all that had been before him, and probably had enforced the worship of the golden calves with greater severity: (25. 26.) but it seemed a light thing to Ahab to tread in his steps, or in those of Jeroboam; (Note, Ez. xvi. 44-47;) for without any political inducement, he proceeded to still grosser idolatries. He had a rooted enmity to the worship of JEHOVAH, and to every thing which related to it; and he married Jezebel, a zealous and furious worshipper of Baal, on purpose, as it seems, to have her assistance in supplanting the worship of the Lord, and even that of the golden calves, and establishing that of Baal throughout the land.

V. 34. (Note, Josh. vi. 26.) Four hundred and forty years had passed, since this word had been spoken; and the exact accomplishment of it, after so long a period, was a solemn warning to the people, to expect the fulfilment of the curses denounced against them, in case of their idolatry, by Moses and Joshua. (Notes, Deut. iv. 26-28. Josh. xxiii. 13-16.)—This account illustrates the daring spirit of rebellion against God, which prevailed in those wretched times. Hiel, inured to idolatry at Beth-el, set the curse of God at defiance; and, though his eldest son died when he laid the foundation of Jericho, he scorned to be intimidated, or to desist from his undertaking, till, when he had completed the work, his youngest son died also, and the rest of his children, as it is supposed, in the intermediate space of time.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-14. We do not always understand the rules by which God governs nations and individuals; yet we may draw general instructive conclusions from this history. Frequently the Lord warns before he punishes; and they who are not induced to repentance, are rendered more inexcusable in their wickedness. By whatever means men are advanced to authority, their exaltation is from the Lord, they are bound to use it in his service, and are liable to severe punishment for the abuse of it; yet they must also give an account to God for the crimes committed in order to obtain the dangerous pre-eminence. The same observations hold good in respect of wealth, and every other temporal distinction.—God is greatly displeased with those who tempt others to commit iniquity; but he is especially provoked by those who seduce his professing people to apostasy, or true believers to conceal or disgrace their profession: persecutors, therefore, will be answerable for all the sins to which they tempt men by the dread of punishment, as well as for all the injustice which they commit, and the blood which they shed.—They who follow the examples of such as have been awfully punished for their sins, may expect to be overtaken with similar vengeance: and many very wicked men have been men of might and renown; have built cities, and perpetuated their memories in the annals of history; but they have no name in the book of life, and stand condemned in the word of God.—The impunity of the principal culprits, whilst their children, relatives, or helpers suffer for their crimes, loudly declares the approaching day of judgment, and the more exact discrimination of characters, and distribution of rewards and punishments, which shall then take place.—No crime more degrades and exposes a man than drunkenness; and they who sit down with the intention of “drinking themselves drunk,” or are persuaded to do so, should recollect how easily they may be murdered in such a state; in how many ways they may be hurried before the tribunal of God; and what an awful thing it would be to meet their Judge in such a situation. And when rulers and great men spend their time in intemperate indulgence, instead of attending to the duties of their station, it bodes ill to the public and to themselves. (Note, Ec. x. 16-19.)

V. 15-34. Wicked men accomplish the purposes of God without intending it; and their injustice and cruelty towards each other display his righteousness.—When they are hurried on by their vile passions, and have got the power into their hands, they can perpetrate much wickedness in a little time; and thus they speedily fill up their measure, and hasten the vengeance of God upon themselves. Whether they destroy themselves, or are murdered by others, the ruin is brought upon them by sinning against the Lord: even in death they frequently shew the predominancy of their pride, envy, and malice; and thus are driven away into the eternal world, not only under condemnation as sinners, but under the domineering power of most diabolical dispositions, being “vessels of wrath fitted for destruction.” From such a death, good Lord, deliver us!—In all cases the triumphing of the ungodly is short; and for the wickedness of nations many are their princes. When tyrants hastily succeed one another, with massacres, conspiracies, and civil wars, and when every one is worse than all that went before him, we may be sure that the Lord hath a controversy with the people for their sins; and they are loudly called to repentance and reformation. Indeed, they who forsake God, will generally be left to plague one another; they who seek not rest in his service will always be unsettled and uneasy; and when his professed people quarrel with each other, their enemies will always be gainers.—Intermarriages with daring offenders greatly embolden men's minds in wickedness, and hurry them on to the greater excesses.—The progress of iniquity must be from bad to worse; it seems a light thing to notorious sinners to walk in the steps of their predecessors; and they are often ambitious of distinguishing themselves, and of expressing their enmity and contempt of God, in ways before unheard of. Hence so many newly invented oaths, blasphemies, superstitions, and species of false religion, as well as new refinements in licentiousness and immorality.—When princes set the example of rebellion against God, their subjects will often ambitiously emulate them, and thus ungodliness becomes fashionable: and no warnings will daunt the stout spirits of presumptuous sinners, till wrath come upon them to the uttermost. But they who despise the denunciations of God's word, will certainly know his truth in them by their own dreadful experience.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVII. V. 1. The most illustrious prophet Elijah was raised up in the reign of the most wicked among the kings of Israel; and he is brought to our notice in a very abrupt manner. Nothing is recorded either of his parentage, education, or previous manner of life. He is called “the Tishbite;” but it was not agreed whether this title was taken from the place where he lived, or given him because he was the reformer of Israel; for the word signifies a converter. He was of the inhabitants of Gilead, beyond Jordan, but we know not of which tribe. His name signifies, The Lord my God is He. This might imply that JEHOVAH, the true God, would stand by him in the perilous services to which he was called, in opposing the worship of false gods.—It may be supposed that Elijah had previously warned Ahab to forsake his idolatry, and that he had treated his message with contempt: at length, therefore, he declared, and confirmed it with a solemn oath by the LORD God of Israel, before whom he stood, (as his servant acting by his authority,) that there should be neither rain nor dew for years, but according to his word; that is, until he came again and foretold its coming, and prayed for it. The expression, “As 13 And Elijah said unto her, ^uFear not; go and do as thou hast said: but ^vmake me thereof a little cake ^wfirst, and bring it unto me, and after make for thee and for thy son.

the dry weather; but the miraculous supply of food, which was ensured to him by promise, failed not. (Note, 10.—16.)

V. 9. This woman was of Gentile extraction, a Zidonian, of the same nation with Jezebel, the patroness of the worship of Baal; yet she was acquainted with the God of Israel, and, probably, a spiritual worshipper of him, when the nation of Israel was in general lapsed into idolatry. (Note, Matt. xv. 21—24.) That ravens first, and then a poor widow-woman, a Gentile, should be employed to feed God's prophet, in preference to the Israelites, was a severe reflection upon that people; and Elijah's being sent to Zarephath, rather than to any other cities, or poor distressed widows of Israel, was an illustration of God's sovereignty, and a pre-intimation of the calling of the Gentiles. (Note, Luke iv. 23—32.)—As the Lord commands his creatures, according to their natures and capacities; perhaps this poor widow had received some pre-intimation of Elijah's coming, and a command to entertain him, nothing doubting.

V. 10—16. The effects of the famine in the land of Israel, were severely felt at Zidon also, and probably in all the adjacent countries, Judah, perhaps, being excepted. The poor woman was gathering fuel, when addressed by the prophet, who probably knew that she was the person appointed to entertain him. Notwithstanding her distress, and the scarcity that prevailed, she readily complied with the request of a stranger to fetch him a little water. But when he craved a morsel of bread also, she called "the Lord his God" to witness, that she had none baked, but was going to prepare her last provision; and then had nothing to look for, but death by hunger, for herself and her son. It must be supposed, that she knew Elijah to be an Israelite, and he had, perhaps, declared himself the servant of JEHOVAH, and asked her for bread and water in his name; and, for his sake, she would have been ready to help him, if it had been in her power. Moreover, she doubtless perceived something venerable in his aspect, which prepossessed her in his favour; so that, when he required her, "in the name of the Lord," to make him a cake first, (which, in her circumstances, was surely one of the hardest commands that ever was given!) promising her that her scanty supply should not fail, her faith surmounted all difficulties, and silenced all objections: she believed his words, and did as she was directed, and so "became heir of the righteousness that is by faith." (Note, Heb. xi. 7.) Thus having "entertained a prophet, in the name of a prophet, she received a prophet's reward." (Note, Matt. x. 40—42.) For above two years she and her son, as well as Elijah, were fed miraculously with sufficient provision; and she lived by faith in temporal as well as in spiritual things! For though the margin renders the words "many days," a full year, it is evident, from the continuance of the famine, that Elijah abode with her a much longer time.

V. 17. Perhaps the child died suddenly, before the prophet had time to pray for his recovery; because the Lord intended a greater display of his own glory, and a more distinguishing favour to the woman, than the sparing of his life: or, he was left to die without any miraculous interposition, to try her faith. (Notes, Mark v. 35—43. John xi. 1—10.)

V. 18. This woman had heard that the drought had come upon Israel in answer to Elijah's prayer: and, perhaps, she supposed that her affliction had come upon her in the same way. She seems to have venerated his sanctity, and to have had a trembling consciousness of her own sinfulness. Perhaps the death of her son brought her former worship of Baal to remembrance; or she

the LORD God of Israel liveth," intimated that the idols of the heathen were lifeless stocks, and could not help their worshippers.—The duration of this drought was three years and a half; and the effects must have been inexpressibly calamitous. (Marg. Ref.) One whole year, without rain or dew, would afflict this land more terribly than it can be conceived: but, in much less than three years and a half, nearly all the cattle must be destroyed, and most of the inhabitants would be either dead, or migrated into other countries. Yet the bulk of Israel continued mad upon their idols, throughout this most tremendous calamity! It was sent in answer to the prophet's prayer, which, probably, he offered in Ahab's hearing; and the judgment was intended to be a demonstration that Baal could not defend his worshippers against the indignation of JEHOVAH. The glory of God and the interests of true religion were therefore so greatly concerned in this decision, which was needful in order to prevent the utter apostasy and rejection of Israel, that the prophet might present this petition in wise zeal, and true benevolence; and, doubtless, he was immediately instructed by the Lord to do so. The benefit of the calamity would abundantly outweigh the miseries: for, though many were hardened, yet, doubtless, numbers were eventually brought to repentance, and made to embrace and continue steadfast in the service of the true God. (Note, v. 16—18.)

V. 2, 3. Elijah was commanded to conceal himself, not only to avoid the persecuting rage of Ahab, instigated by Jezebel, but as an additional judgment upon the Israelites. The Lord did not intend to shorten the term of the calamity, and he would not have his servant pray for it and be denied. He was pleased, therefore, to send him out of the way, that he might not be solicited, and refuse: and all this time the people were deprived of the benefit of Elijah's example and instructions. Thus he was excluded from society and usefulness: but he doubtless was engaged in heavenly contemplation and communion with God, and in prayers for the reformation of his people, and for their being turned unto the Lord, though not for the present removal of the famine.—The brook Cherith ran into the river Jordan, (5;) but it seems the place was so retired, and the prophet kept so close, that neither friends nor foes knew where he was. (Note, xviii. 10.)

V. 4—6. Elijah was a very extraordinary person, and every circumstance relating to him was rendered equally extraordinary, in order to excite the attention of a stupid generation. Ravens, being birds of prey, were more likely to rob the prophet, than to bring him food. But God's command suspended their natural instinct, or made them act contrary to it. (Note, 1 Sam. vi. 10—15.) We need not enquire whence they procured the bread and flesh, or how the food was prepared? He, who commanded them to feed his servant, had ten thousand ways of enabling them to fulfil his word. Thus Elijah was sufficiently provided for, when numbers were starving; and the consolations of the Lord would render him contented with his solitude and sustenance.—Some have objected, that ravens, being unclean birds, would pollute the food which they brought; but this arises from a mistake. The flesh of unclean animals might not be eaten, but the touch of them when living communicated no ceremonial uncleanness, either to food, or any other thing: for asses and camels were also unclean, yet in constant use for carrying provisions, as well as for other purposes. (Note, Lev. xi. 31.)

V. 7. Elijah seems to have continued in this situation about a year. The natural supply of water which came by common providence, failed because of 20 And he cried unto the LORD, and said, O LORD my God, hast thou also brought evil upon the widow with whom I sojourn, by slaying her son?

21 And he stretched himself upon the child three times, and cried unto the LORD, and said, "O LORD my God, I pray thee, let this child's soul come into him again."

22 And the LORD heard the voice of Elijah; and the soul of the child came into him again, and he revived.

23 And Elijah took the child, and brought him down out of the chamber into the house, and delivered him unto his mother: and Elijah said, "See, thy son liveth."

CHAP. XVIII.

Elijah is sent to meet Ahab, 1, 2. Ahab and pious Obadiah go different ways, to search the land for pasture, 3-6. Elijah meets Obadiah, and sends him to call Ahab, 7-16. Ahab, at Elijah's word, convenes Israel, with the prophets of Baal, at Carmel, 17-20. Elijah proposes to decide, whether JEHOVAH or Baal be God, by proving which would answer by fire, 21-24. Baal's prophets invoke him in vain, 25-28. Elijah prepares a sacrifice, pours water much upon it, and calls on JEHOVAH, who answers by fire consuming the altar with the sacrifice; the people are convinced that JEHOVAH is God; and at Elijah's word slay Baal's prophets, 30-40. Elijah gives Ahab notice of rain, which he obtains by prayer; and then he runs before Ahab's chariot to Jezreel, 41-46.

AND it came to pass, after many days, that the word of the LORD came to Elijah in the third year, saying, "Go, shew thyself unto Ahab; and I will send rain upon the earth."

2 And Elijah went to shew himself unto Ahab: and there was a sore famine in Samaria.

3 ¶ And Ahab called Obadiah, which was the governor of his house: (now Obadiah feared the LORD greatly; thought she was not worthy of the company of the prophet, or had not duly profited by it. But her mind was much agitated; and her words imply a mixture of unbelief and impatience, as well as self-abasement and a sense of guilt. And she seems to have thought the presence of the man of God was dangerous to such a sinner, and hastened divine judgments upon her. (Notes, 1 Sam. xvi. 4. 2 Sam. vi. 8, 9.) Yet, by her own account, the prophet's presence had prolonged her son's life, and her own also. (12.)

V. 20. Elijah himself could not understand the mystery of this dispensation; but wondered that the LORD should bring evil on the woman, who entertained him for his sake, as well as on those who rejected both God and his prophet.

V. 21, 22. These actions of Elijah denoted the earnestness of his desires, and the greatness of his expectations, of the child's restoration to life. He would, if possible, have communicated of his own life to him, or have concurred, if any thing had been in his power, to his revival.—The expression, "Let the child's soul come into him again," not only intimates the prophet's certainty that he was really dead, but it marks the distinction betwixt the rational soul and the earthly body, to be as real as that betwixt the house and its inhabitants; for both the prophet and the historian, "speaking as they were moved by the Holy Ghost," used proper language. No one had yet, as far as we know, been raised from the dead; and, perhaps, no prayer to this effect had ever before been offered. (Notes, Gen. xxii. 5, 6. John ix. 27-34. Rom. iv. 18-22. Heb. xi. 17-19.) Elijah's petition was no doubt directed by immediate inspiration.

V. 24. The woman had been strongly tempted to unbelief; but she had now got the victory, and was more confirmed and assured in faith and hope than ever. She had doubted, but now she knew, that Elijah was the servant of God, and she fully expected the performance of all his declarations.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-7. The LORD will have witnesses to his truth in the worst of times: and, as he doth not immediately cast off his professing people when they renounce his service, he employs various methods to convince them of their sin, and to bring them to repentance.—Great intrepidity and resolution are necessary for those who are employed to stop the torrent of prevailing iniquity, or to declare the message of God before persecuting tyrants; but he who sends them, will qualify them, and bear them out in these arduous and perilous services.—Impenitent sinners have even the prayers of God's people against them; because, if they go on in sin, his glory requires their destruction; and every servant of the LORD seeks his glory, in preference to every other consideration. But, if the severest temporal judgments be made effectual to bring men to serve God, they will have great cause to bless him for sending them.—Fruitful seasons, and abundance of provisions for the body, are valuable mercies, and famine is a most terrible evil; yet the liberty and opportunity of attending on divine ordinances are more valuable advantages, and a famine of the word of God is above all to be dreaded and deprecated. (Note, Am. viii. 11-14.)—The LORD will provide for those who serve him faithfully; and he will teach them to be satisfied with their provisions though mean, and their situation though outwardly uncomfortable. Indeed, if we consider how much better we are dealt with than we deserve, and how many are destitute of the necessities of life, we shall see abundant reason to be contented with food and raiment, of the meanest and coarsest kind: nor should we ever covet luxuries or superfluities. It is the greatest trial to the faithful and zealous minister, to be taken off from his work and usefulness, and excluded from the society of pious persons; yet, if thus circumstanced, he ought to submit to it as his trial, to wait the LORD's time to be employed again, to seek his comfort from communion with him, and diligently to prepare for future service. And if the trying dispensation did not arise from his own misconduct, the loss will not eventually be his, but that of those from whom he is banished; being frequently a judgment upon them for not profiting by their former advantages, whilst they enjoyed them.—All nature shall sooner change its course, than one of God's promises fail. We do not indeed now expect to be fed by ravens literally; but the LORD often employs selfish men, contrary to their nature and general character, to support his indigent people, or to maintain his cause by their property. The thanks, in this case, are due to the LORD, who sends the provisions by such instruments; but we should pray that, as he has counteracted their natural disposition in one instance, he would be pleased also to change them by his renewing grace.

V. 8-16. The LORD doth not generally provide long together for his people in the same way, or by the same means; lest they should rest in them, and expect help from them: but he permits one resource to fail: and when he hath left them nothing but his own promise to trust to, he unexpectedly opens another; that they may admire the manifold riches of his wisdom, as well as adore his power, truth, and love. Frequently he raises supplies from those, who themselves need relief: "the abundance of their joy, and their deep poverty abound unto the riches of their liberality;" (Notes, 2 Cor. viii. 1-9. ix. 8-11;) and he supplies their wants, whilst they are encouraged to communicate of their pittance to others still more destitute. Indeed our faith must be proved by various trials in providence, as well as by our obedience to the commandments of God; and it must also grow strong by exercise. But when it is genuine, it worketh by love of him and of his people: and the desire of doing good to others for his sake, united to a firm expectation that his promises will be performed, produces obedience even to hard commands, notwithstanding all the reluctance and objections of our distrustful selfish hearts.—They who come unto God and walk with him, must simply trust him, nay, venture their lives and souls upon his word, and at his command renounce every present interest, in expectation of future and more enduring advantages. Genuine faith induces and enables men to do this; while unbelief dislikes the security, holds fast things present, and for the perishing pleasures and interests of this world foregoes the blessings of eternal salvation. But none can be losers in the event by giving up secular advantages, at the LORD's command; and what is expended upon his people, for his sake, shall be recompensed as if given to himself: so that the self-denial and liberality of faith, are the best means of excluding the fear of future want, of providing for our families, and of placing out our substance at the highest interest, and upon the most unexceptionable security. In these funds the poor may obtain property, as well as the rich; for a morsel of bread, or a cup of water, will go as far, when it is all that we can give, as thousands of gold and silver when they can be spared. (Notes, Prov. xix. 71. Luke vi. 27-36. 2 Cor. viii. 10-15.)

V. 17-24. Neither faith nor obedience, however exemplary, can exclude afflictions and death: and under severe and unexpected trials it is hard to avoid impatience, and to exercise unshaken confidence and unreserved submission. But the LORD bears with our infirmities and compassionates our sorrows; and we should pity and readily help each other, thus bearing one another's burdens, according to the example and command of Christ: (Note, Gal. vi. 1-5;) and though we cannot work miracles for the relief of the afflicted, we may afford much assistance to them; and in all cases we may pray in faith, that the LORD would sanctify and make up every loss, by the influences and consolations of his Spirit.—The LORD by afflictions calls our sins to remembrance: and this should quiet our spirits, and lead us to self-examination and repentance, that we may obtain forgiveness from him: and thus all shall issue in our increase of faith, assurance of hope, and joyful expectation of every promised good.—Thus when Jesus comes to communicate his blessings, the convinced trembling sinner often mistakes the meaning of those humbling lessons which he teaches, and those trials which he employs; he is ready to suspect, that he means to bring his sins to remembrance, and to slay all his hopes; and is tempted to say, "What have I to do with thee?" But the loving Saviour pities and bears with such trembling souls: and when he hath turned their mourning into joy, by reviving their hopes and forgiving their sins; they admire his love and power, and know assuredly that his word is truth; and expect every future good in reliance on his promise, and obedience to his holy will.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVIII. V. 1, 2. The third year. That is, in the third year of Elijah's abode at Zarephath. For he seems to have continued there above two years; which, added to a year at the brook Cherith, completed three years and a half; for this was the time which the drought lasted. Some, however, think he remained just two years at Zarephath; and that the six months preceded his retiring to the brook Cherith. (Luke iv. 25.)—He seems to have been little noticed at Zarephath, notwithstanding the miracles which he wrought.—Elijah could not but deeply lament the miseries of Israel, but he did not leave his retirement, till the LORD ordered him to go to Ahab, previously to his sending "rain upon the land," as it should be rendered; for the land of Israel was especially intended.—The extremity of the famine rendered it the more dangerous for him to shew himself to the enraged tyrant.

V. 3. Obadiah signifies The servant of the LORD. Obadiah was so faithful and useful a servant to Ahab, that even Jezebel's instigation did not induce him to dismiss or injure him: and he was, it seems, willing to retain his place, though perilous and difficult, while he could with a safe conscience; as he might do some good, and prevent some evil, by continuing in it: and though he

5 And Ahab said unto Obadiah, Go into the land, unto all fountains of water, and unto all brooks : peradventure we may find grass to save the horses and mules alive, that we lose not all the beasts.

6 So they divided the land between them, to pass throughout it : Ahab went one way by himself, and Obadiah went another way by himself.

7 ¶ And as Obadiah was in the way, behold, Elijah met him : and he knew him, and fell on his face, and said, Art thou that my lord Elijah ?

8 And he answered him, I am : go, tell thy lord, Behold, Elijah is here.

9 And he said, What have I sinned, that thou wouldest deliver thy servant into the hand of Ahab, to slay me ?

10 As the LORD thy God liveth, there is no nation or kingdom, whither my lord hath not sent to seek thee : and when they said, He is not there ; he took an oath of the kingdom and nation, that they found thee not.

11 And now thou sayest, Go, tell thy lord, Behold, Elijah is here !

12 And it shall come to pass, as soon as I am gone from thee, that the Spirit of the LORD shall carry thee whither I know not ; and so when I come and tell Ahab, and he cannot find thee, he shall slay me : but I thy servant fear the LORD from my youth.

13 Was it not told my lord what I did when Jezebel slew the prophets of the LORD, how I hid an hundred men of the LORD's prophets by fifty in a cave, and fed them with bread and water ?

14 And now thou sayest, Go, tell thy lord, Behold, Elijah is here : and he shall slay me.

15 And Elijah said, As the LORD of hosts liveth, before whom I stand, I will surely show myself unto him to-day.

16 So Obadiah went to meet Ahab, and told him : and Ahab went to meet Elijah.

17 ¶ And it came to pass, when Ahab saw Elijah, that Ahab said unto him, Art thou he that troubleth Israel ?

18 And he answered, I have not troubled Israel ; but thou, and thy father's house, in that ye have forsaken the commandments of the LORD, and thou hast followed Baalim.

19 Now therefore send, and gather to me all Israel unto mount Carmel, and the prophets of Baal four hundred and fifty, and the prophets of the groves four hundred, which eat at Jezebel's table.

20 So Ahab sent unto all the children of Israel, and gathered the prophets together unto mount Carmel.

21 ¶ And Elijah came unto all the people, and witnessed abominable idolatries and iniquities, we may be sure, that he was not required to bow his knee unto Baal. (Notes, Dan. ii. 46-49. iii. 1-7.) "He feared the LORD greatly." Obadiah at a distance from religious ordinances, and surrounded by bad examples and strong temptations, was eminently pious and devoted to God ! (Note, Gen. xxii. 10-12. Ec. xii. 11-14.)

V. 4. Wicked as Ahab was, he does not seem to have directly persecuted, except as instigated by Jezebel, until she had long trained him up to it.—After the institution of the worship of the golden calves, the priests and Levites, and pious Israelites, had generally left their possessions, and gone up to the tribe of Judah, and united with it ; (Note, 2 Chr. xi. 13-17 :) but the Lord had mercifully raised up prophets, who promoted true religion throughout the land. It is probable, that they were brought up in the schools of the prophets, first instituted by Samuel, which still remained, and were made very serviceable by the blessing of God upon them. (Note, 1 Sam. x. 5, 6. 2 Kings iii. 3. iv. 1.) These prophets did not stately offer sacrifices ; nor did they require the people to go up to Jerusalem to keep the solemn feasts : but they taught them the essentials of true religion, either in private houses, or in such assemblies as were afterwards called synagogues. Thus they worshipped the God of Israel towards, though not at, the temple and Jerusalem, (Note, viii. 28-30 :) and there seems to have been considerable numbers of believers dispersed through the tribes. Against these prophets, who were the chief opposers of idolatry, (and doubtless against the seminaries where they were educated,) Jezebel's rage was directed, and she cut off many of them : but Obadiah found means to conceal and preserve a hundred persons, through the persecution, supporting them in their concealment at his own expense. And, though his conduct was no secret, he was still protected and employed by Ahab !

V. 5. Horses, &c. Ahab seems to have been more anxious about the animals which ministered to his luxury, than about those which were more immediately necessary to his poor subjects, as sheep, goats, and oxen. That the king in person should go upon such a business, could only be the effect of the extremity of the famine. Probably most of the cattle, and many of the people, had perished : yet no mention was made of returning to the Lord with repentance, fasting, and prayer ! Notes, Joel i. 13-15. ii. 15-18.) Had God never sent to them, it seems they would never have applied to him to terminate the calamity, whatever extremities they had endured : but he had a remnant, for whose sake he was pleased to return to them in mercy ; and the glory of his name required, that he should not yet give up Israel to utter destruction. (Notes, xix. 18. Judg. iii. 9, 10. 14. Rom. xi. 1-6.)

V. 7. Elijah was a poor man, and greatly hated in Ahab's court, in which Obadiah held considerable preferment : yet Obadiah, by word and deed, testified the greatest reverence for him, as a man of God, and a person of eminent sanctity ! (Note, Matt. viii. 8, 9.)

V. 10. No nation, &c. That is, in the neighbourhood, among Ahab's dependants and allies.—He was so earnest to discover Elijah, that he caused the rulers of those countries in which he possessed influence, to swear that they did not conceal him, and perhaps that they would deliver him up if they found him : yet Elijah lived part of the time in Ahab's own kingdom, and the rest in the country of Zidon, whence Jezebel came !—As Ahab offered no violence to the prophet when he met him, it has been thought, that he did not seek him from a vindictive motive, but in expectation that he would terminate the judgment which he had denounced : as if the prophet could do it without the Lord, to whom no application was made ! It is, however, probable, that resentment and enmity greatly influenced Ahab ; and that Jezebel intended to cut off

Elijah also, if he could have been found ; at least, unless he consented to remove the famine. But Ahab was overawed by his unexpected appearance and intrepidity, and did not dare to proceed against him. (Note, 2 Kings i. 15, 16.)

V. 12-16. Obadiah, in Ahab's family, had from his youth been a worshipper of JEHOVAH ! He introduced the mention of his good services, not in ostentation, but as an evidence of his sincerity. He well knew, how exceedingly Ahab would be offended, if he thought himself imposed upon, in a matter which he had so much at heart ; and perhaps he concluded that Ahab would be enraged, because he had not apprehended the prophet, when he had the opportunity : he could not suppose that Elijah intended to venture into the presence of his indignant enemy, and he was persuaded that the Spirit of the Lord could readily convey away his servant, and again conceal him, (Marg. Ref.) ; and therefore he desired to be excused from so perilous a service. But when the prophet solemnly assured him, that he did not mean to elude Ahab, but to shew himself unto him, he willingly went to inform him.

V. 17. Elijah was the grand opposer of Ahab's scheme, for bringing Israel to unite in the worship of Baal, and so making a quiet settlement of the religion of the nation ; and in this sense he perhaps deemed him "a troubler of Israel." Notes, Acts xv. 19-24. xvii. 5-9.)—But it is not easy to determine what his precise sentiments were concerning the drought, which came at Elijah's word. If he thought, that it was caused and continued by the prophet's power, and could be removed at his will ; and that he troubled Israel in not removing it ; he must have been disposed to credit any absurdity, rather than believe that JEHOVAH was the author of it, and that it could be removed only by his power ; or allow that it was his interest and duty to return to the worship of God which he had forsaken. (Notes, Ez. vii. 22, 23.) (1 Sam. vi. 5-9.)

V. 18-20. "Baalim" is the plural number ; for Ahab worshipped many false gods.—The boldness and authority, with which the prophet charged him as the "troubler of Israel," intimidated the king, who had not his prompter Jezebel with him. (Josh. vii. 25.) He was afraid, perhaps, that Elijah would execute judgment upon him at once, if he further offended him ; (Note, 1 Sam. xv. 27, 28 :) he found the prophet would not be hectoring into compliances, and he was willing to be upon terms with him, in hopes that he would procure the removal of the famine : and thus he was induced to consent to the demand which he made.—It seems that an altar had been built upon mount Carmel, and sacrifices offered on it to JEHOVAH, (30 :) but the worship of Baal had supplanted even this irregular service of the one living and true God.—There were no less than four hundred and fifty prophets or priests of Baal, and four hundred of the groves, who are supposed to have been devoted to a Zidonian goddess : these four hundred, especially, were entertained at Jezebel's table, as a kind of domestic chaplains ; though no doubt they too were at times sent, at her expense, into every part of the land, to promote idolatry among the inhabitants.—Elijah, however, desired to confront the whole company before all the people of Israel, and to bring the matter in dispute to a fair decision. But when JEHOVAH had called for drought, and neither Baal nor their other idols could send rain, the matter was already sufficiently plain to every reasonable person. (Note, Jer. xiv. 19-22.)

V. 21. Halt ye ? &c. The metaphor is taken from the unequal walk of a lame person. Many of the people wavered in judgment, and varied in practice ; sometimes worshipping JEHOVAH, at others worshipping Baal, as their convictions or interests prevailed : or they endeavoured to form a coalition between them, of which Baal's prophets would probably admit ; but to which JEHOVAH would never consent. Elijah therefore called upon them to detersaid, "How long halt ye between two opinions? if the LORD be God, follow him: but if Baal, then follow him. And the people answered him not a word.

22 Then said Elijah unto the people, I, even I only, remain a prophet of the LORD; but Baal's prophets are four hundred and fifty men.

23 Let them therefore give us two bullocks; and let them choose one bullock for themselves, and cut it in pieces, and lay it on wood, and put no fire under: and I will dress the other bullock, and lay it on wood, and put no fire under:

24 And call ye on the name of your gods, and I will call on the name of the LORD: and the God that answereth by fire, let him be God. And all the people answered and said, "It is well spoken.

25 ¶ And Elijah said unto the prophets of Baal, Choose you one bullock for yourselves, and dress it first; for ye are many; and call on the name of your gods, but put no fire under.

26 And they took the bullock, which was given them, and they dressed it, and called on the name of Baal from morning even until noon, saying, O Baal, hear us. But there was no voice, nor any that answered. And they leaped upon the altar which was made.

27 And it came to pass at noon, that Elijah mocked them, and said, Cry aloud; for he is a god; either he is talking, or he is pursuing, or he is in a journey, or peradventure he sleepeth, and must be awaked.

28 And they cried aloud, and cut themselves after their manner with knives and lancets, till the blood gushed out upon them.

29 And it came to pass, when mid-day was past, and they prophesied until the time of the offering of the evening-sacrifice, that there was neither voice, nor any to answer, nor any that regarded.

mine, whether of the two was the self-existent, and eternal God, the Creator Governor, and Judge of the world; and to follow him alone, whether JEHOVAH or Baal were he, as there could be no more than one supreme God. (Notes, Josh. xxiv. 14, 15. Matt. vi. 24.) To this the people answered nothing; being unwilling to confess their guilt, and offend the king, and not being able to object to what he said, or being ashamed of their conduct.

V. 22. Elijah was the only prophet of JEHOVAH, who stood forth at this time; the prophets whom Obadiah preserved, and the prophets of whom we afterwards read, being driven into concealment. (Notes, 4. xix. 10. Marg. Ref.)

V. 23. Elijah conceded the preference, in every external circumstance, to the prophets of Baal, that the victory might be the more conspicuous, to the glory of God alone: for doubtless he acted by direction from heaven. Note, Ex. viii. 9-11.)

V. 24. The proposal was so reasonable, that the people at once agreed to it; and thus Baal's prophets were constrained either to comply, or to allow Baal to be an impotent idol, and JEHOVAH the only true God.

V. 26. O Baal, &c. (Note, Matt. vi. 7, 8.) The continued cry of four hundred and fifty priests, during several hours, with an unmeaning repetition of the words, "O Baal, hear us," with great vehemence, must have formed a most disagreeable vociferation; whilst, like frantic men, they leaped upon, or round, or up and down at, the altar and sacrifice, according to the worship which they were accustomed to perform.—Some think that the sun was worshipped under the name Baal: and that this encouraged his prophets to expect an answer by fire.

V. 27-29. Elijah ironically observed, that Baal, no doubt, had a vast number of engagements, and therefore was taken up, or at a distance, or asleep; and therefore his votaries would not succeed without greater earnestness and louder cries! (Notes, xxii. 15. Ex. xi. 9, 10. Is. xlv. 12-47. Mark vii. 9.) The absurdity of the idolatry was worthy of being exposed to ridicule and contempt before the people, though the effects of it were most deplorable.—It seems, however, that they thought Elijah in earnest in his counsel, and determined to follow it: and, still more to please the demon, they cut their flesh, and mingled their own blood with that of their sacrifice, according to the frequent custom of idolaters! But all their efforts proved in vain: though they continued to prophesy, after their manner, till three hours after noon-day had passed, shewing tokens of being under a supernatural influence; and, as many suppose, singing hymns to Baal along with their absurd and frantic devotions.—No doubt Satan could have sent fire, and would if he might have done it; but he can do nothing except what is permitted to him! (Notes, Job i. 9-12. 16. Matt. viii. 30-32.)

30 ¶ And Elijah said unto all the people, Come near unto me. And all the people came near unto him. And he repaired the altar of the LORD that was broken down.

31 And Elijah took twelve stones, according to the number of the tribes of the sons of Jacob, unto whom the word of the LORD came, saying, Israel shall be thy name:

32 And with the stones he built an altar in the name of the LORD: and he made a trench about the altar, as great as would contain two measures of seed.

33 And he put the wood in order, and cut the bullock in pieces, and laid him on the wood, and said, Fill four barrels with water, and pour it on the burnt-sacrifice, and on the wood.

34 And he said, Do it the second time. And they did it the second time. And he said, Do it the third time. And they did it the third time.

35 And the water ran round about the altar, and he filled the trench also with water.

36 And it came to pass, at the time of the offering of the evening sacrifice, that Elijah the prophet came near, and said, LORD God of Abraham, Isaac, and of Israel, let it be known this day that thou art God in Israel, and that I am thy servant, and that I have done all these things at thy word.

37 Hear me, O LORD, hear me, that this people may know that thou art the LORD God, and that thou hast turned their heart back again.

38 Then the fire of the LORD fell, and consumed the burnt-sacrifice, and the wood, and the stones, and the dust, and licked up the water that was in the trench.

39 And when all the people saw it, they fell on their faces: and they said, The LORD, he is the God: the LORD, he is the God.

40 And Elijah said unto them, Take the prophets of Baal; let not one of them escape. And they took trial, what Baal could do: but when they had prophesied till almost evening, it was time that he should proceed to shew them what JEHOVAH could and would do; and therefore he interrupted them by addressing the people. (Note, 18-20.)

V. 31. Elijah meant to shew, that the descendants of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, notwithstanding divisions and apostasies, were yet in some sense the people of JEHOVAH, and formed one church and nation; and that they ought to unite in worshipping the God of their fathers, and in opposing all idolatry. The reference to the name of "Israel" given to Jacob, when he wrestled with God and prevailed, was suited to shame the people from their idol-worship, as well as to encourage Elijah's own heart in prayer. (Notes, Gen. xxxii. 24-30. Marg. Ref.)

V. 33-35. By pouring this great quantity of water on the altar and the sacrifice, Elijah excluded all possibility of suspicion that any fire had been concealed, and thus rendered the Divine interposition more illustrious and convincing.

V. 36, 37. The prophet, by the time chosen for his sacrifice and prayer, avowed his communion with the worshippers of God, at his temple in Jerusalem: and he, briefly, but most fervently, besought JEHOVAH on this important occasion to interpose; that the people might be convinced that he was indeed the true God, the God of their fathers, and of the nation; and also that all, which he, his servant, had done, concerning the famine especially, had been in obedience to God's command. This would be for his glory, and for the profit of the people; and that they might henceforth know and worship him, as that God, who had thus turned their hearts back from idolatry unto himself, that they might give him the praise.

V. 38, 39. It is probable that this fire appeared as lightning, though no cloud was seen; or it was called "the fire of God," from its extraordinary force, and its unparalleled effects; and especially as sent to plead the cause of God, and to expose his worthless rival to contempt. (Marg. Ref.)—It would be more emphatical to retain the original word, JEHOVAH, in the translation of this chapter. The people were convinced, for the time, that JEHOVAH was the only true God; and they prostrated themselves before him with terror, mixed with reverence.—It has been observed, that the fire on this occasion consumed the altar as well as the sacrifice, because oblations were not there stately to be offered; but at the dedication of the temple, the sacrifice was consumed, and the altar continued. (Notes, Lev. ix. 24. 2 Chr. vii. 1-3.)

V. 40. Baal's prophets, as idolaters and teachers of idolatry, were condemned by the prophet to die, according to the express injunctions of the Mosaic law.

them: and Elijah brought them down to the brook Kishon, and ^{slew} them there.

41 ¶ And Elijah said unto Ahab, "Get thee up, eat and drink; for there is a sound of abundance of rain."

42 So Ahab went up to eat and to drink. And ^{Elijah} went up to the top of Carmel: and ^{he} cast himself down upon the earth, and ^{put} his face between his knees, m Job xxxviii. 3. Jer. i. 17. 1 Pet. i. 13.

n Matt. xxii. 21. 1 Pet. ii. 17. || Heb. till thou come to Jezreel.

44 And it came to pass at the seventh time, that he said, Behold, there ariseth ^a little cloud out of the sea, like a man's hand. And he said, Go up, say unto Ahab, ^{Prepare thy chariot}, and get thee down, that the rain stop thee not.

45 And it came to pass in the mean while, that the heavens was black with clouds and wind, and there was a great rain. ^{And Ahab rode}, and went to Jezreel.

46 And ^{the} hand of the LORD was on Elijah; and ^{he} girded up his loins, and ^{ran} before Ahab ^{to} the entrance of Jezreel.

(Notes, Deut. xiii. 1—5. xviii. 20—22.) The people, under the present impression, readily concurred with Elijah, and Ahab allowed them to execute the condemned criminals.—"The four hundred prophets of the groves," were not present on this occasion. Some learned men think, that they were Zidonians, not Israelites; and therefore their attendance had not been insisted on, or they had refused to come.

V. 41. (Note, xvi. 1.) The idolatry of Israel having received a powerful check, and its chief abettors, the prophets of Baal, having suffered condign punishment; the prophet intimated to Ahab the approach of deliverance from that awful calamity, under which the land had so long groaned; and encouraged him to go and cheerfully refresh himself. (Note, 2 Sam. xxi. 9—14.)

V. 42. In a posture of most profound reverence, the prophet sought of God, by earnest prayer, the blessing of rain upon the parched land; and he continued his supplications in the same place and posture, without having taken any refreshment, as it appears, till he had sensible evidence that his desire was granted. (Note, Jam. v. 15—18.)

V. 43—45. As Elijah had no servant before he went to Zarephath; some have thought, that the widow's son, whom he had raised to life, had accompanied him. But it appears from the narrative, that he was not old enough; and it is more likely, that a young person, from the schools of the prophets, attended Elijah on this occasion.—The prophet spake as one assured that his prayer would immediately be answered; and like Jacob of old, he seemed determined not to let the Lord go until he had blessed him. The servant was therefore ordered to go seven times; and he saw no appearance till the last, when a very small cloud arose, which the prophet knew to be the forerunner of the desired blessing; and he sent word to Ahab accordingly.—We may be sure, that the rain was equal to the necessities of the land; and it formed another demonstration that JEHOVAH was the only true God. (Note, 19—26.)

V. 45, 46. The Lord directed and strengthened Elijah, though old, and weak with fasting and fatigue, to shew this respect to Ahab; and to run as a footman before his chariot; in order to convince him, that his severe reproofs were consistent with affection and loyalty in secular matters: nor was the prophet afraid of going to Jezreel, where Jezebel was; though he did not appear in her presence.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—16. The severest judgments will not of themselves humble or change the hearts of sinners; which often grow more hardened under them, even to desperation. The imagined fire of purgatory, therefore, or the real torments of hell, possess no purifying efficacy; and the sinner under the anguish of his sufferings will continually increase in wickedness, and accumulate wrath to all eternity. For nothing, except the atoning blood of Christ, can expiate the guilt; nothing, except the sanctifying Spirit of God, can purge away the pollution of sin: and all other expedients are satanical delusions, to keep men from this one "fountain which God hath opened for sin and uncleanness."—The enmity of man's heart against God, expresses itself by persecuting those who bear his image and seek his glory: yet he protects them, until their testimony be finished. It has been the common lot of his prophets and faithful servants, to be lodged in caves or dens of the earth, and fed with bread and water, (if that could be procured,) whilst the ministers of Satan have rioted in luxury. (Note, Heb. xi. 35—38.) Yet he has had a remnant in all places, where any part of his word has been known, in every age of the world: and notwithstanding errors and irregularities, that faith, fear, and love of his name, which are the fruits of his holy Spirit, are accepted through the Redeemer: and the remnant in Israel, when that nation had generally apostatized to idolatry, encourages the hope, that there are true believers, in those parts of the Christian church, where the ostensible body is most deformed by superstition and idolatry.—If men of eminent piety were found in Ahab's family, and in Nero's palace, we may conclude that the Spirit of God will keep alive the holy flame which he hath kindled, in any situation to which a believer can be called. (Note, Phil. iv. 21, 22.) We should therefore be very cautious about leaving, or persuading others to leave, the posts assigned in providence, however perilous or ensnaring: whilst they can be maintained without sinful compliances, and whilst they afford opportunities of doing good.—They, who begin early to serve God, are likely to be eminent in their generation: and they, who "fear the Lord greatly," will devise various methods of usefulness; for they will not shrink from trouble, danger, or expense, in promoting his cause, or protecting and relieving his oppressed and afflicted servants. Providence indeed hath often remarkably preserved those, who have ventured their lives freely in his cause, in times of triumphant wickedness; yet, singular activity, prudence, and fidelity in secular concerns, frequently prove the means of their security.—Many are careful to prevent the effects of sin upon their temporal interests, whilst they continue by their crimes to augment the fierce wrath of God, which is the cause of all misery; and ungodly rich men are commonly more careful about their own self-indulgence, than to preserve the multitude of the poor from starving. (Notes, Am. vi. 3—8. Luke xvi. 19—21.) But whilst sinners remain on earth, the Lord will afford them some respite; that his judgments and mercies may concur, either to lead them to repentance, or to display his justice in their condemnation: and national calamities are often retarded or terminated, for the sake of a despised remnant of believers; for if persecutors could extirpate them all, they would open the floodgates of Divine vengeance upon themselves.—The servants of God may, in this cause, boldly face their most powerful enraged enemies; for they dare not touch them when he intimates their hearts, and cannot when he restrains their hands; (Notes, Matt. xiv. 3—5. Acts iv. 13—22. v. 26—39.) and such as fear the Lord, however exalted in life, will greatly respect his faithful servants, though poor and hated by all around them.—They, whose situations have long required them to be cautious of giving unnecessary umbrage, are apt to grow too timid, and to apprehend consequences which are not likely to follow: if, however, they be sincere, they will surmount their fears, and join with their more courageous brethren in doing the will of God.

V. 17—29. The ministers of the Lord have generally been accounted the troublers of nations, nay, even of the church, by ungodly rulers; because they oppose prevailing abuses though sanctioned by authority, and denounce the wrath of God against impenitent sinners. Nay, they have frequently been treated as the authors of those calamities, which have come upon men for persecuting them, and neglecting their warnings! But they are able to refute, and even to retort, such charges, when urged to their faces; and to shew that they who forsake the commandments of the Lord, and teach others to do so, are the real troublers of the world, of the church, and of themselves and their own families: and when this is done with firmness and solemnity, as by the authority of God, it will often cause the proudest sinner to tremble; to desist from present purposes of violence, and to comply with reasonable requirements.—The condescension of the Lord in repeatedly proving the most evident truths, concerning his being, perfections, the divine authority of his word, and the nature of his worship, is as wonderful as the perverseness of men, which requires such repeated demonstrations: but the fundamentals of religion stand on such manifest grounds of reason and sound argument, that they need fear no fair investigation. It is of vast importance, that we come to a decision on such subjects; for whilst we waver respecting them, we must be unstable in all our ways. But we should be equally decided in our practice, else our creed, however orthodox, will be received only by a dead faith. If the Lord be God, let us worship him, choose him for our portion, and devote ourselves to his service: if Jesus be the divine and only Saviour, let us come to him, cleave to him, and depend on him alone for every thing: if the Bible be the word of God, let us reverence, study, and receive the whole of it, and submit our understanding to its teaching: and let us no longer endeavour to serve God and Mammon; to reconcile religion and secret sin; or to believe revelation, to accept of salvation, or to give up ourselves to the service of our Redeemer, by halves, or with reserves. This, Satan will be content with, but the Lord abhors it.—The cause of truth is not to be determined by vote, authority, or wealth: one poor prophet or minister for JEHOVAH; hundreds and thousands for Baal, even of those in reputation and favour, and who have possessed wealth and learning has been a common case! But God will plead his own cause, and that of his witnesses, which will countervail all disadvantages; and his truth is great, and will prevail. In confidence of his support, we may concede every external precedence to our opponents, and boldly stand forth in his cause, without apprehension about the event. It is right, however, to state every thing in so equitable, plain, and convincing a manner, that all may be constrained to say, "It is well spoken," and that the mouths of gainsayers may be stopped.—The absurdities of superstition and false religion might excite our ridicule, did not their awful effects demand our tears. The example of Elijah, in this instance, must be imitated with great caution, and only on very peculiar occasions.—The service of Satan, whether in the observations of idolatrous worship, or in the practice of immoralities, whilst it promises indulgence to men's lusts, is cruel to their persons, and tends to torment them even in this world.

V. 30—46. All religious diligence, which is not regulated according to the word of God, as to its grand outlines, however self-denying or plausible, is unavailing: "for he, who gathereth not with" the Saviour, "scattereth." (Note, Matt. xii. 29, 30.) Yet, when it is impracticable for us exactly to come up to the scriptural standard; or when we cannot have personal communion with God's people, in his more solemn ordinances; we must come as near as we can to the one, and shew our fellowship with the other by such expressions as we are capable of: and the Lord will graciously accept our upright intentions, and dispense with the unavoidable irregularity.—Hypocrites expect to be heard for their much, or their loud, speaking; but a few words uttered in assured faith, and with fervent affections of zeal for the glory of God, and love to the souls of men, or thirstings after the Lord's image and favour, often form "the effectual fervent prayer of the righteous man, which availeth much." Ahab shews Jezebel, that Elijah had slain Baal's prophets, and she threatens Elijah's life, 1, 2. He flees into the wilderness: is weary of living; but being twice strengthened with food brought by an angel, he fasts forty days, and arrives at Horeb, 3-8. There God meets him, preceded by a strong wind, an earthquake, and fire; and, speaking to him in a still small voice, commissions him to anoint Hazael, Jehu, and Elisha, 9-17. Elijah is informed that seven thousand worshippers of JEHOVAH still remain in Israel, 18. Elijah casts his mantle on Elisha, who takes leave of his friends, and follows him, 19-21.

AND ^aAhab told Jezebel all that Elijah had done, and withal ^bhow he had slain all the prophets with the sword.

2 Then Jezebel sent a messenger unto Elijah, saying, "So let the gods do to me, and more also, ^cif I make not thy life as the life of one of them by ^dtomorrow about this time.

3 And when he saw ^ethat, ^fhe arose, and went for his life, and came to ^gBeer-sheba, which ^hbelongeth to Judah, and left his servant there.

4 ¶ But he himself went a day's journey into the wilderness, and came and ⁱsat down under a juniper-tree: and ^jhe requested ^kfor himself that he might die; and said, It is enough; now, O LORD, take away my life; for I ^lam not ^mbetter than my fathers.

5 And ⁿas he lay and slept under a juniper-tree, behold, then ^oan angel touched him, and said unto him, Arise ^pand eat.

6 And he looked, and, behold, ^qthere ^rwas a cake baked on the coals, and a cruse of water at his ^shead. And he did eat and drink, and laid him down again.

wilderness, where Israel had wandered forty years.—He had passed through the kingdom of Judah, where doubtless pious Jehoshaphat would have welcomed and protected him. But he seems, on this occasion, to have been left to himself for his humiliation; and consequently he was seized with unreasonable terror. Instead of venturing all consequences, assured of the protection of the Almighty; and pushing his advantage, by leading the people to destroy the worship of Baal, and restore that of JEHOVAH; he fled from the important service, and impatiently wished and prayed for death! (Notes, Num. xi. 11-15. Jon. i. 2, 3. iv. 1-4. 9-11.) Thus the people, left without a leader, and intimidated by his example, would probably be too much afraid of Jezebel, to reap those decisive advantages from the miracle, and the events recorded in the former chapter, which might have been hoped for.—When Elijah said, "I am no better than my fathers," he seems to have referred to some pre-intimations given him of his translation: but he was willing rather to die, than to live in misery, and to behold, without being able to prevent, the wickedness and ruin of his people: yet he would rather die by the hand of the Lord, than by that of Baal's worshippers, lest they should blaspheme that God whose prophet they had slain.

V. 5-8. The Lord intended that Elijah should visit Horeb, where Moses had fasted forty days and nights; that in him the miracle might be repeated: because, as Moses was the lawgiver, so Elijah was in some respects the chief of the prophets. (Note, Matt. xvii. 3.) God at first miraculously provided his servant with food; and then supported him without food, or any need or desire of it. (Notes, Ex. xxxiv. 27, 28. Matt. iv. 3, 4.)—As mount Horeb was but a few days' journey from Beer-sheba; the forty days here mentioned seem to include the whole of the time which passed till his return out of the wilderness.

V. 9. What doest thou, &c.? Elijah had been secretly guided to mount Horeb, rather than to another place; and probably he sought retirement for meditation and prayer. But this was not at that crisis his proper work; he ought not to have fled from the land of Israel, but there to have persevered in promoting the revival of true religion.

V. 10. The prophet pleaded in his own behalf, that "he had been very jealous for the Lord," having had his glory exceedingly at heart, and having been deeply grieved, and even filled with holy indignation, at Israel's apostasy. This he had long endeavoured to prevent; and he had now fled from his work, not through defect of zeal, but for want of encouragement. The whole nation, he thought, had renounced their covenant with JEHOVAH, and had concurred with their rulers in breaking down his altars, which had been erected on the high places; as if they were determined to worship him no more: they had also joined in murdering the prophets; so that he stood alone to stem the torrent, and they were all ready to assist Jezebel in putting him to death also. But he supposed matters to be worse than they really were: for probably several of the hundred prophets, whom Obadiah had protected, were living, and privately attempting to do good with some success. So that he needlessly discouraged himself: and his mind was so much embittered by his disappointments, that he is said to have made intercession against Israel. (Note, Rom. xi. 1-6. Marg. Ref.)

V. 11-14. There seems to have been, in this manifestation of God to Elijah, an intended reference to that with which Moses was favoured, when the Lord caused his goodness to pass before him; and to the terrific solemnities from mount Sinai, (where Elijah now was,) compared with the mild majesty, in which he communed with Israel from above the mercy-seat. (Notes, Ex. xix. 16-25. xxxiii. 20-23. xxxiv. 5-7.) It was preceded by a vehement wind, principles should dictate all our prayers, and we should utterly disregard even our own reputation in the judgment of men; except when it is connected with the credit of religion, the conviction of sinners that our cause is that of God, and the establishment of believers in the faith: but for these purposes we should endeavour to obviate every occasion of suspicion, and to be careful that our good be not evil spoken of.—The awful display of the Divine justice and holiness may terrify and convince the sinner; extort many confessions, and dispose him to external acts of obedience, whilst the impression lasts: but the view of these attributes harmonizing with mercy, love, and truth, in Christ Jesus, is needful to draw the soul into self-abasement, affiance, and love. Yet the Spirit of God employs both methods, in effecting the conversion of sinners, in order and measure, as he pleases: and in our endeavours for that same blessed purpose, it is generally advisable to inform the understanding and convince the judgment first, and then to address the heart and conscience.—When sinners are deeply impressed with divine truth, they should be earnestly exhorted without delay, to set about those self-denying duties, to which the Saviour calls his disciples.—Under the christian dispensation, we must not destroy the lives of men, though they have deceived others to idolatrous worship. When, however, false teachers are removed, silenced, or put to shame, it exceedingly promotes the revival of true religion: and after effectual measures for public reformation have been used, we may hope for the merciful removal of public calamities.—Faith perceives things imperceptible to sense, and anticipates future and distant blessings: it therefore excites fervent prayers, in which reverence, humility, importunity, and perseverance are requisite, in order to success.—The love of faithful ministers to the persons of sinners should not only be manifest to that God, who in secret hears their affectionate prayers for those whom they most severely reprove; but they should shew it by every external expression; and be ready to give honour to whom honour on any account is due; and in their private conduct to become the meanest servants to those, whom, speaking in God's name, they rebuke with all authority. And he will strengthen his people for every service, to which his commandments and his providence shall call them.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIX. V. 2. The Lord left this wicked woman to be so intoxicated by rage, that, instead of sending a messenger to apprehend or kill Elijah, she gave him warning, and time to make his escape! (Note, Matt. ii. 7, 8.) Some indeed think, that she durst not venture at the same time on the rage of the people, and the miraculous power, which the prophet evidently and undeniably possessed, by attempting to slay him; but contented herself with threatening him, that he might abscond, and occasion her no further interruption: while others suppose she had such an opinion of his intrepidity, that she concluded he would certainly wait the event. But her absolute language, and the imprecation upon herself if she failed, seem more like the outrageous effusion of passion, than the effect of deliberation and design. Without reflecting that she might not live till the morrow, or not be able to find Elijah, or to prevail against him; she swore by her gods, that she would put him to death, as if all events were absolutely in her own power! (Notes, 2 Kings i. 10-17. Prov. xxvii. 1. Jam. iv. 13-17.)

V. 3, 4. It seems, that Elijah fled, on the very night after the sacrifice, and the fire from heaven, and the abundant rain given in answer to his prayers, and before he had time to refresh himself after the fatigues of the preceding day. He therefore left his servant at Beer-sheba, as unable to proceed with him through weariness: or perhaps he was unwilling to expose him to farther hardship; having, as some think, purposed to end his life in that desolate

13 And it was so, when Elijah heard it, that he wrapped his face in his mantle, and went out, and stood in the entering in of the cave. And, behold, there came a voice unto him, and said, 'What doest thou here, Elijah?

14 And he said, 'I have been very jealous for the LORD God of hosts: because the children of Israel have forsaken thy covenant, thrown down thine altars, and slain thy prophets with the sword; and I, even I only, am left; and they seek my life to take it away.

15 And the LORD said unto him, Go, return on thy way to the wilderness of Damascus: and when thou comest, anoint Hazael to be king over Syria;

16 And Jehu the son of Nimshi shalt thou anoint to be king over Israel: and Elisha the son of Shaphat, of Abel-meholah, shalt thou anoint to be prophet in thy room.

17 And it shall come to pass, that him that escapeth the sword of Hazael shall Jehu slay; and rending the mountains and rocks; by an earthquake, still more tremendous; and by a fire, similar perhaps to that which appeared on mount Sinai at the delivery of the law: all these effects were no doubt produced by the ministration of angels. But the Lord made known his more immediate presence, not by these terrors, but by a still small voice; and it is not said, that there was any visible appearance of glory. This intimated that miraculous judgments, and terrifying displays of the Lord's power and indignation, though proper for the destruction or intimidation of his enemies, or to excite attention, were only preparatives for that real good intended for Israel; which must be effected by the energy of his Spirit, accompanying the convincing and persuasive instructions of his word. Elijah had perhaps expected to carry all before him, with a high hand, and with continued miracles and judgments; or he had supposed that the desired reformation was to be effected by the sanction of civil authority, or the support of the people at large. Whereas, having gained their attention by the famine, and its gracious removal in answer to his prayers, by calling for and obtaining fire from heaven to consume the sacrifice, and by the execution of Baal's priests, and by rain in answer to his prayers; he ought to have proceeded to instruct them with meekness and gentleness, "publicly and from house to house," and to have excited others to assist him: and then the Lord would have blessed that still small voice, for the most important purposes; notwithstanding the persecuting rage of Ahab and Jezebel, and the general apostasy of the people.—Thus miracles in the first ages of Christianity called men's attention to the preaching of the gospel, which, as a still voice, was the power of God to salvation to thousands and millions.—Though Elijah shewed tokens of humble adoration on this occasion, the repetition of his answer to the Lord's renewed enquiry, ("What doest thou here?") shews, that he did not fully understand the emblematic display: and that he was not properly convinced of his unbelief, in fleeing out of the land; or reconciled to going back to his station and employment. He afterwards better understood the Lord's meaning, as it appears from his subsequent conduct.

V. 15—17. As the prophet was ordered to go on the way to the wilderness of Damascus, it seems probable that he went directly towards Syria, and meeting with Hazael anointed him; though this is not recorded. Jehu was afterwards anointed by a prophet sent by Elisha; and perhaps Elisha was anointed by Elijah, when called to be his successor. Some, however, think the expression is not always to be taken literally; but merely as an intimation, that God would advance the persons spoken of, to the stations assigned, and qualify them for the work to be performed by them.—Jehu executed vengeance upon Jezebel and Ahab's posterity, and the priests and worshippers of Baal: Hazael through his whole reign wasted and destroyed the people of Israel: and, at Elisha's word, the Lord took vengeance on those, who would not attend to the instructions of his prophets. The order of time, in these judgments, is not marked, but the certainty of the events. (Marg. Ref.)—God was infinitely more jealous for his own glory, than Elijah could be for it; and he would by no means desert his cause, or suffer his enemies to triumph, as the prophet feared: but, before he proceeded to vengeance, he would gather in his chosen people, and separate a remnant from among the idolaters.

V. 18. The Lord "had reserved for himself" seven thousand Israelites, who had neither bowed to Baal, nor kissed his image, nor in any way been induced to worship him. (Marg. Ref.) These, though few in comparison, were a considerable number in themselves, and far more than Elijah supposed.—As Ahab and Jezebel aimed to establish the worship of Baal, we may suppose that the golden calves were neglected; and that these persons conscientiously adhered to the worship of JEHOVAH, as the times would admit. They would therefore need further instruction and encouragement; others might be recovered from idolatry; and the rising generation might be rescued from its contagion. So that there was much useful employment for Elijah, well worth living for; and a good reason why the Lord should defer his anger, though provoked to jealousy every day. (Note, Rom. xi. 1—6.)

V. 19. This might occur after Elijah's return from the wilderness of Damascus, or in his journey thither.—Elisha was employed in husbandry, and his father seems to have been a man of wealth. Whilst he was employed in his labour, Elijah cast his mantle upon him, which was intended, and understood, as a call to him to follow and attend upon him. (Notes, 2 Kings, ii. 13, 14.)

V. 20, 21. It is probable that Elijah intended to discover, whether Elisha him that escapeth from the sword of Jehu, shall Elisha slay.

18 Yet I have left me seven thousand in Israel, all the knees which have not bowed unto Baal, and every mouth which hath not kissed him.

19 ¶ So he departed thence, and found Elisha the son of Shaphat, who was ploughing with twelve yoke of oxen before him, and he with the twelfth: and Elijah passed by him, and cast his mantle upon him.

20 And he left the oxen, and ran after Elijah, and said, Let me, I pray thee, kiss my father and my mother, and then I will follow thee. And he said unto him, Go back again: for what have I done to thee?

21 And he returned back from him, and took a yoke of oxen, and slew them, and boiled their flesh with the instruments of the oxen, and gave unto the people, and they did eat. Then he arose, and went after Elijah, and ministered unto him.

was decided to renounce his temporal interests, and to venture persecution as a prophet of the Lord; and to lead him to count his cost ere he engaged. (Notes, Matt. viii. 18—22. Luke xiv. 28—33.) But Elisha's heart was touched by the Holy Spirit, and he was ready to leave all to attend Elijah. He did not ask to wait till the death of his parents, but only to bid them farewell: and, having made a feast for his neighbours of the flesh of the oxen, prepared with their yokes, as the fuel, (in token, that he never meant to return again to that employment,) he followed Elijah, and ministered to him, that under his tuition he might be prepared to succeed him, and in the mean time be a help and comfort to him.—The prophet could now no longer complain, that he was left alone, for the Lord had provided him a companion. (Notes, Ex. iv. 14. Matt. x. 14.)—From the ensuing history it appears, that Elijah and Elisha employed themselves, not only in privately instructing the people, but also in founding or superintending seminaries of prophets, in different parts of the land, who might assist them in the work of reformation, and maintain it when they were removed.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—9. No miracles or judgments can finally stop the fury of persecutors: though they be intimidated for a season; when they have respite, and leisure to confer with one another, they grow desperate in proportion as they have been baffled and mortified. (Notes, Ex. viii. 15. xiv. 5—9. Acts i. 13—22. v. 17—28.) Nay, such diabolic enmity can inhabit the breasts of females, and has sometimes raged in them with peculiar vehemency! (Notes, Matt. xiv. 3—11.)—Mad passions often defeat their own end, and furious threats prevent the execution of determined malice.—The most eminent believers cannot exercise even those graces, which most distinguish their characters, without the immediate assistance of God: and when in danger of being exalted above measure, they are sometimes left to struggle with temptation without their wonted support. Then the boldest, who before feared no number or power of the adversaries, tremble at the distant prospect of danger; the most zealous are dissatisfied with their employments, and sit down disconsolate and despairing; nay, the most resigned grow fretful, and even pray in a peevish manner; and want to die, not out of longing for heavenly glory, but from weariness of conflicts and tribulations. But it is shameful for a soldier to wish to be absent from his place in the day of battle, or to expect the victory without the peril and the hardship of the conflict. The Lord, however, bears with his faithful servants, notwithstanding their infirmities: and preserves them for every service which he has allotted them, whatever they wish or fear. As all creatures are at his command, they, for whom he engages to provide, can want no good thing; and yet if he pleases he can support them without either means or instruments. (Notes, xvii. 1—16.) His mercy and power are the same from generation to generation, whether displayed in the same way or not: and he will vouchsafe his gracious presence to his people, into whatever place they are banished. Indeed, when they flee from the path of duty, he will meet and rebuke them, but he will not forsake them.

V. 10—14. No former zeal, boldness, or usefulness, will excuse present neglects; yet we are most apt to boast of what we have been and done, when most remiss in present duty. Disappointments in our too sanguine expectations often sour our tempers, as well as render us discontented: and then we are ready to blame others for our failures, and to be severe in our censures and remarks. The zealous minister often finds this leaven corrupting his services; he is sometimes tempted to think all his labour in vain, when he does not see the immediate effect; and to conclude, that he can do no good, because he cannot do all that he hoped for: and when he witnesses much evil in the church, or in that part in which he labours, he often imagines matters to be much worse than they really are. Thus "our hands hang down, and our knees wax feeble;" and we are ingenious in discouraging and disquieting ourselves. But upon reflection, this very experience may explain to us that rebellion of others which so disconcerts us; and teach us gentleness and long-suffering, without disdaining, or despairing of, the worst of sinners.—The blessing is from the Lord; and he often works most effectually when proper means are used, with quiet assiduity and perseverance, without any of that bustle and vehemence which excite the public attention. Magistrates should indeed exercise their authority according to the word of God, and for his glory: but attempts to promote reformation by the secular arm, bearing all down before it, like the strong wind, the earthquake, and the fire, promise more than they effect; and, even when confined

Ben-hadad, not satisfied with Ahab's submission, wars against Samaria, 1-12. Ahab, directed by a prophet, gains a complete victory over him, 13-21. A prophet warns Ahab to prepare for another assault, 22. The Syrians come again, the next year, with vast preparations; and are opposed by a very small company, 23-27. A prophet assures Ahab of victory, because the Syrians thought Jehovah the God of the hills, but not of the valleys, 28. The Syrians are smitten with immense slaughter, and Ben-hadad flees and hides himself, 29, 30. He submissively sues to Ahab, who makes a league with him, 31-34. A prophet, by a parable, leads Ahab to condemn himself, and then denounces the judgment of God against him for his unseasonable lenity, 35-43.

AND Ben-hadad the king of Syria gathered all his host together: and there were thirty and two kings with him, and horses and chariots: and he went up and besieged Samaria, and warred against it.

2 And he sent messengers to Ahab king of Israel into the city, and said unto him, Thus saith Ben-hadad,

3 Thy silver and thy gold is mine; thy wives also and thy children, even the goodliest, are mine.

4 And the king of Israel answered and said, My lord, O king, according to thy saying, I am thine, and all that I have.

5 And the messengers came again, and said, Thus speaketh Ben-hadad, saying, Although I have sent unto thee, saying, Thou shalt deliver me thy silver, and thy gold, and thy wives, and thy children;

6 Yet I will send my servants unto thee to-morrow about this time, and they shall search thine house, and the houses of thy servants: and it shall be, that whatsoever is pleasant in thine eyes, they shall put it in their hand, and take it away.

7 Then the king of Israel called all the elders of the land, and said, Mark, I pray you, and see how this man seeketh mischief: for he sent unto me for my wives, and for my children, and for my silver, and for my gold; and I denied him not.
